Mr. Booth: Would my hon. Friend at least consider the nub of my point, which is not necessarily that private prosecutors—even those for grand stores such as Marks and Spencer—would have the right of appeal in the circumstances of the Bill? In the light of the gravity of the shoplifting situation in Britain, would private prosecutors be allowed, at the point at which the appeal has been refused, to be associated with the Crown prosecutor who is on duty in the magistrates court or to bring forward their own police evidence which is always associated with such private prosecutions? Would the Department consider whether the police could be associated with an application?

That matter needs some consideration. I have not formulated a solution in precise detail, but the issue needs to be addressed because it is important for a number of major stores. I remind the Minister that this often relates to a long series of offences, not simply the trivial theft of a packet of cigarettes.

Mr. Maclean: I listened carefully to what my hon. Friend said. I am not clear about what he means when he asks whether I will allow the Crown prosecutor to be associated with the appeal. I assume that he means that we would permit a system whereby the private prosecutor could go to the Crown Prosecution Service and say, "Will you take up this case for us and will you use your right of appeal against a case where we think it should be done?" My hon. Friend rightly said that some consideration would be required before we could contemplate making that move.

We must also bear in mind that we want the right of appeal to be exercised in serious cases. The Crown prosecutor would need to be careful about over-exercising his right of appeal in shoplifting cases, regardless of how aggravating or annoying they may be or how much theft is involved. The magistrates courts and the Crown court need to consider carefully whether they wish to keep people in prison in shoplifting cases as opposed to more serious cases involving violence against the person. I am not suggesting that shoplifting is not serious.

Giving private prosecutors the right to appeal will not necessarily mean that more people who are charged with shoplifting will be kept in prison over night. I will certainly consider what my hon. Friend said. Perhaps he will agree to write to me, or the organisations involved will flesh out their concerns and ideas so that we can consider them properly.

It might be appropriate for the Secretary of State to designate prosecutors acting on behalf of bodies or organisations. Any proposals to extend the power to other bodies would need to be subject to close parliamentary scrutiny. The House would want and expect to scrutinise any list of alternative prosecutors.

My hon. Friend the Member for Worcester asked about the Scottish legal system—who the prosecutors were and whether private prosecutions were allowed. Of course, the Scottish legal system is different from our system south of the border. In Scotland, all prosecutions are conducted by the procurators fiscal and they alone have the right of appeal.

My hon. Friends the Members for Worcester and for Southport (Mr. Banks) said that the Secretary of State should decide who should have the right to appeal. I have already covered that matter, but I emphasise that the power of appeal is a significant one which can result in a defendant being granted bail by magistrates and being held in custody at the instigation of the prosecution. It is a serious matter when someone who has been granted bail is then denied his right to liberty at the instigation of the Executive. Therefore, it is important that Parliament should have the opportunity to consider those to whom the power should be extended. We envisage an order subject to negative resolution. We all know that if Parliament is content with the Secretary of State's proposals, we do not need to waste parliamentary time. However, if any hon. Member is concerned, there is an opportunity for debate.

I wish to deal with the limitations that will be set on this power of appeal—the limitation on who will have the power to bring the appeal and the limitation on the circumstances in which it can be brought. We all agree that appeals against the grant of bail should be brought only in the most exceptional cases, not simply when the prosecutor disagrees with the magistrate's decision. Mere satisfaction should certainly not be enough. It is intended that this power will be used only in rare cases in which there is a serious public interest. My hon. Friend the Member for Finchley may say that shoplifting is a matter of serious public interest.

There have been attempts to draft an amendment that sets a test higher than that in the Bail Act and yet is comprehensible to the courts. We have not found a satisfactory amendment to date and, if the Scottish experience is anything to go by, I do not think that we shall find one. For the Crown Prosecution Service, we plan to follow the formula that provides that the procurator fiscal must abide by guidelines giving detailed advice on the circumstances in which an appeal may be brought.

It is important for hon. Members to understand why the decision has been taken not to accept on the face of the statute a test of, say, serious risk to the public. That ground was debated in Committee between my predecessor—my hon. Friend the Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack)—and Labour Members. The same arguments apply now as then. We must have a right of appeal that will apply when a person has been charged with serious offences and the prosecutor believes that there is good reason to suppose that the defendant will abscond. We must have a right of appeal that will allow serious threats to property to be guarded against.

[Mr. Maclean]

The guidelines intended to be used by the Crown Prosecution Service will in the first place make it clear that the Crown Prosecution service foresees that the number of places in which it will exercise the right of appeal is small. The broad effect of the guidelines is that the right of appeal will be used only in cases of greatest concern where there are substantial grounds under the Bail Act on which the court could refuse bail.

Prosecutors will apply an over-arching test of whether there is a serious risk of harm to members of the public or other significant public interest grounds. The public interest grounds will not be used to justify appeals in minor cases. In making their assessment, prosecutors will take into account the seriousness of the offence. Examples of such cases might include offences of violence where weapons are used, serious sexual offences where there is an element of violence and serious arson cases.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove asked me what action will be taken to stop people from offending while on bail. That is a serious matter. The Government share the justified anxiety about offending on bail and they are committed to action. Our aim is both to prevent such behaviour and to punish those who disregard the law and abuse the trust placed in them by the courts by offending when they are let out on bail.

In addition to introducing legislation that will make offending on bail an aggravating factor for the purposes of sentencing, in the past 18 months we have introduced a package of practical measures to combat the problem. An additional £8 million over the next three years has been provided to fund bail hostels and bail support schemes, the better to supervise those on bail and to improve the training given to magistrates on bail decisions. We will ensure that bail notices make clear the penalties that people will face if they offend on bail.

One of the most important of the recent initiatives is the establishment of five action research projects tasked with finding ways of improving the bail process. The hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) told me only two days ago that that was exactly what was needed. I have news for him. One of the projects set up last autumn operates in Newport.

Accurate and up-to-date information is crucial to every bail decision. Therefore, we have asked that the projects should focus on the quality and quantity of information. The action research is intended to result in best practice guidelines for those involved at every stage of the bail decision and in particular to highlight ways of helping the court to make the necessary risk assessment for each defendant.

My last point in response to the anxiety of my hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove about those who re-offend on bail is that a national bail issue steering group has been established to bring together senior representatives of justice agencies and other organisations with an interest, including the Association of Chief Police Officers, the Bar Council, the Law Society, the Association of Chief Officers of Probation, the Justices Clerks Society and the Magistrates Association to encourage inter-agency work. Therefore, I hope that my hon. Friend will be satisfied that a programme of action has been established to deal with those who offend on bail.

I hope that I have satisfied my hon. Friends that the amendment is sensible and should be accepted.

Mr. Stephen: I am grateful for the constructive and positive speeches that have been made by hon. Members in the debate on this group of amendments. My hon. Friend the Member for Finchley (Mr. Booth) was worried about private prosecutions. However, private prosecutions are not normally brought for the serious cases to which the Bill is intended to apply. I have never intended the Bill to apply to small thefts and other minor offences, even though they may come within the category of offences set out in clause 1(1).

Nevertheless, there may well be circumstances in which, by reason of the persistence of the shoplifting or other circumstances, it is inappropriate for the person to be released on bail. In those circumstances, I hope that, perhaps prior to the hearing, the retailer or other private prosecutor would speak to the Crown Prosecution Service to enlist its support, and that if necessary the CPS would take over the case and itself appeal against the granting of bail. I hope that that will satisfy my hon. Friend the Member for Finchley.

My hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Luff) drew attention for the second time to the narrow scope of the Bill. I share his concern that the Bill had to be so narrowly drawn, and I hope that he will understand that in a private Member's Bill and especially a ten-minute Bill, if one seeks to achieve too much, one will achieve nothing.

I am particularly sorry that I had to drop clause 2 of my Bill which, while it did not shift the burden of proof in bail cases generally, would have focused on people who had previously committed offences while on bail. It would have let such people know that if, in future, bail, was considered, it would be for them to prove that they should have bail, rather than, as now, for the prosecution to prove that they should not have bail.

I give notice to my hon. Friend the Minister now that if those provisions or something similar are not included in the Government's Bill which I hope will be introduced in the autumn, I and other hon. Members will move amendments to ensure that the matter is taken into account. We want to make it more difficult for persistent bail offenders to obtain bail in the first place.

My hon. Friend the Member for Worcester also mentioned civil rights. He was right to do so. But we must consider the civil rights not only of the person who is arrested but of all those people who are the victims of crime committed by people on bail. I have sought to strike a fair balance in the Bill between the civil rights of the arrested person and those of the public.

My hon. Friend was right to draw attention to the increasing use of cautioning instead of prosecution. That also causes me anxiety. If the reason for it is that it is thought that there is an insufficiency of prison places, that is not a good reason for proceeding by way of caution. There may well be good reasons for giving a caution, but that is not one of them. We could easily decrease the prison population by repealing the Theft Act 1968, but no one would wish to do that. I believe that it is the first duty of any Government to protect their citizens against internal as well as external attack, and if prison places have to be made available to accommodate those who are a danger to society, such places must be made available.

The cost to the taxpayer has been referred to. Of course it is costly to the taxpayer to keep someone in prison. I am appalled by some of the costs of keeping people in prison that we have read about recently. I understand that it can cost up to £2,000 per night to keep someone in prison or in police cells, whereas I understand one can stay in the Ritz hotel for £130 per night. I believe that the public is being ripped off, and that the Home Office should look seriously into the cost of accommodating people in prison.

My hon. Friend the Member for Worcester also mentioned his concern about whether the list of designated prosecutors should be drawn up by a Minister or subject to parliamentary scrutiny. I disagree with him on this point. We have a duty to consider any extension or proposed extension to the list of designated prosecutors for the purpose of the Bill, and I would ask him to support amendment No. 7.

My hon. Friend the Member for Southport (Mr. Banks) mentioned the report of the Northumbria police, which is a valuable piece of research into offending while on bail. It concluded that nearly 50 per cent. of detected crime was committed by persons while on bail. I am sure that all hon. Members will agree that that is a horrifying statistic.

The Home Office has published its own report and its figures suggest that the problem is less serious. However, I doubt whether that is the case, because the Home Office figures do not include those persons who were cautioned rather than prosecuted, or those offences to which persons have admitted while in prison for other offences.

My hon. Friend the Minister mentioned that only circuit judges would hear the appeals. Notwithstanding Lords amendment No. 1, to which we have already agreed, I do not think that such will be the case. As I understand it, every person who is appointed a justice of the High Court is, ex officio, a judge of the Crown court. Therefore, the same individual could be made available, if necessary, to serve in the Crown court to hear appeals of this kind. Lords amendment No. 1 would not reduce the number of judicial personnel available to deal with those cases; all it means is that, under the Bill, one would not be able to appeal to a justice of the High Court sitting as such.

I was glad to hear what my hon. Friend the Minister said about the Government's commitment to bail research projects, bail information schemes and the like. We can all agree that it is far better that magistrates should get the bail decison right in the first place than that there should be an appeal under my Bill.

Having listened carefully to all the contributions that hon. Members have made, I consider nevertheless that it is right to restrict the right of appeal under the Bill to a public prosecutor, and I would therefore invite the House to accept amendments Nos. 2 and 7.

Question put and agreed to.

Lords amendment: No. 3, in page 1, line 15, leave out from ("prosecution") to ("granted") and insert ("made representations that bail should not be")

Mr. Stephen: I beg to move, That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Geoffrey Lofthouse): With this it will be convenient to discuss Lords amendment No. 4.

Mr. Stephen: I can deal with this amendment briefly: it is purely a matter of semantics. In all my years at the Bar, I have always heard of the prosecution "objecting" to bail, and I have never heard anyone object to the use of the word "object". However, one of their lordships felt that that was unduly confrontational and, as it makes no difference to the substance of the Bill, I am happy to accept the amendment that he wished to press.

Mr. Thomason: My hon. Friend the Member for Shoreham (Mr. Stephen) said that this was a matter of semantics. I am always wary of semantics because sometimes an issue that is considered to be merely superficial covers something more significant. I wish briefly to seek an assurance on those matters.

My constituents, like those of many other hon. Members, are worried about law and order. They are alarmed at persistent offenders and anxious about juvenile offenders. We want to know that changes in the Bill will not weaken its provisions, that the Government are firmly behind law and order and that those issues are being dealt with. They are the worries of the people whom we represent, so it is right that we give them proper attention. It is, therefore, essential that we do not simply nod through a change in this important legislation which, it may subsequently transpire, weakens it significantly. I do not see that it is likely to be so weakened, but I seek an assurance on that.

Will my hon. Friend the Minister also assure me that police bail will not be used more than at present as a result of the Bill's introduction? How does he see the role of police bail developing?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I hope that the Minister will not go down that road because it would be out of order.

Mr. Luff: I wish to echo some of the thoughts of my hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove (Mr. Thomason) and to be absolutely clear that that change of words, which their lordships describe as "more felicitous", will not be some kind of lawyers' paradise and open up the loopholes that concern my hon. Friends. I am worried about it. Superficially, it seems plausible and acceptable. It verges on political correctness rather than anything else. Will the Minister assure me that there is no diminution in the effectiveness of the Bill as a result of the amendment?

Mr. Matthew Banks: I take issue with a couple of comments made by my hon. Friends. The word "objected" would have created no ambiguity whatever. I seek clarification from the Minister that he is happy with the amendment. The word "objected" would be far better than "made representations that bail should not be" granted.

There is a precedent for using the word "representations" in paragraph 9(a) of schedule 1 to the Bail Act 1976. My hon. Friend the Minister mentioned that Act. Without wishing to move too far away from the amendments, may I contrast them with what my hon. Friend referred to? The word "objected" is far better because it is not ambiguous. Although this is a matter of semantics, it is important.

It was suggested earlier that powers to object to the granting of bail and the right of appeal may not necessarily be used in many cases. If so, that also worries me. Allowing the prosecution right of appeal against granting bail was originally put forward as a response to tragedies such as the Hagan's case where, despite the prosecution's objections, a defendant was granted bail with serious and fatal consequences.

The provision would effectively give the prosecution a second opinion on bail in a higher court where it was felt that bail had been granted without satisfactory regard to exceptions to the right to bail—that is, that the defendant was likely to abscond or commit further offences.

My hon. Friend the Minister mentioned, under previous amendments, the Scottish legal system. North of the border, the prosecution already has a right of appeal against bail decisions. The possibility of introducing a similar provision in England and Wales was under consideration before my hon. Friend the Member for Shoreham (Mr. Stephen) introduced his Bill in November 1992. The measure for north of the border had considerable support and it is entirely right that there should be similar legislation south of the border. I appreciate that there are civil liberty implications, but my hon. Friend the Member for Shoreham was entirely right when he suggested that we should remember the victims of crime and their rights, rather than concentrating far too much on defendants.

The amendments and the Bill strike the right balance. Of course I want to see time limits for such an appeal, because it is vital to allow sufficient time for an adequate rehearing to be prepared, but it is also vital to minimise the time that a defendant is held in custody.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I advise the House and the hon. Gentleman that the amendment's only effect is to substitute the word "representations" for "objected" and the debate is limited to that. I hope that hon. Members will bear that in mind.

Mr. Banks: I am grateful for your ruling, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

I hope that when the Minister responds he will make it quite clear to the House that, in view of his comments on earlier amendments, he will take action to amend the Bail Act 1976 to reverse the presumption in favour of bail for certain categories of defendants. I hope that he will satisfy me and my hon. Friends that the wording of the amendments will ensure that there is no ambiguity whatever. If the Crown Prosecution Service, on behalf of the Director of Public Prosecutions, wishes to object to the granting of bail the objection must be quite clear and there should be no mealy-mouthed, wishy-washy wording.

Lady Olga Maitland: I support the comments of my hon. Friend the Member for Southport (Mr. Banks) about semantics as to whether the word "representations" or "objected" is used. The public do not want wishy-washy words. [Interruption.] They certainly do not get them from me. People will not be reassured if words such as "representations" are slipped into the Bill, because it will look as if our resolve is weakening. I trust that the Minister will make sure that our resolve is not weakened and will reassure the House about that. After so much work, public representations and the initiative and enterprise of my hon. Friend the Member for Shoreham (Mr. Stephen), it would be devastating if the legislation were derailed by semantics in the other place.

Mr. Maclean: I assure my hon. Friends that I would never be associated with mealy-mouthed or wishy-washy words. I expected them to know that. I have been exonerated from that potential crime and I have positive proof, because, after I replied to an Adjournment debate initiated by my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Evans), he congratulated me and was completely satisfied with all my responses to his robust speech. My hon. Friends will appreciate that, as I was able to satisfy my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield on the Government's law and order policy, I could not have been using mealy-mouthed, wishy-washy words.

The Government do not oppose the removal of the word "objected". That does not alter the original meaning of the Bill, but renders it more consistent with the terms of the Bail Act 1976. The use of the phrase makes it clear that the prosecution is exercising no more than its right in law to influence the decision of the court about whether bail should be granted.

"representations that bail should not be granted"

The phrase "objected to bail" is in common usage and is not in itself open to ambiguity, but I suggest that it has been improved on. Notwithstanding the fact that the Bill is about the possibility of the prosecution appealing against the bail decision, the fact remains that the decision to grant bail is a judicial one. Any review of bail decisions belongs to the court.

I hope that I have satisfied my hon. Friends the Members for Worcester (Mr. Luff) and for Southport (Mr. Banks) that there is no ambiguity. I can also assure my hon. Friend the Member for Southport that I want to look at the Bail Act 1976, but I am sure that he would not expect me to give the firm promise that he demanded of me. I hope, therefore, that he will not consider me wishy-washy if I do not instantly accept his suggestions.

I agree so much with the short but passionate speech of my hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove (Mr. Thomason)—that this amendment is part of the Government's package for cracking down hard on crime. I am sure that he was here for yesterday's debate on law and order, though he was not called to speak in it. I hope that he realises from yesterday's debate that the Government announced tough measures.

Furthermore, it was in this chamber only on Tuesday that we took immediate steps to replace the unit fines system and restore the full power of magistrates to impose the sentences that they think just, in order to take into account the previous convicions of offenders, including those who have offended while on bail. In their case, we took the opportunity to make it an aggravated offence. We shall include other tough measures in the next Criminal Justice Bill to ensure that what this amendment seeks to do is done: that we have a proper crackdown on those who deserve to be cracked down against.

Mr. Stephen: I have listened carefully to what has been said about this amendment. I could not agree more that the House and the Government must act, and be seen to act, resolutely against those who offend against our laws. Nevertheless, I remain of the opinion that Lords amendments Nos. 3 and 4 make no substantial difference to the Bill and will have no adverse effect on it. Therefore, I invite the House to accept them.

Question put and agreed to.

Lords amendment No. 4 agreed to.

Lords amendment: No. 5, in page 1, line 23, leave out ("one hour") and insert ("two hours").

Mr. Stephen: I beg to move, That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With this it will be convenient to take Lords amendment No. 6.

Mr. Stephen: In dealing with this final group of amendments, may I crave the indulgence of the House for one moment to pay tribute to the spirit of co-operation in both this House and another place which has made it possible for my Bill to reach this stage. It is a great honour for me, as a new Member, that both Houses of the United Kingdom Parliament have seen fit to approve this, my first private Member's Bill, particularly since it was only a ten-minute Bill. In particular, I offer my thanks to the Minister of State, Home Office, and his predecessor, my hon. Friend the Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack), the Home Office officials, the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) and the 116 right hon. and hon. Members who supported my Bill by signing early-day motion 1134. Support came from positions as far apart in the political spectrum as the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) and my hon. Friend the Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman).

Amendments Nos. 5 and 6 relate to an issue which we debated in Committee: whether the written notice of appeal which has to be served by the prosecutor should be confirmatory only, or whether failure to serve that notice would bring the appeal process to an end. We took the view in Committee that it should be confirmatory only, but, after further debate and discussion in another place, I am persuaded that it should be an integral part of the appeal process.

I have, therefore, been prepared to accept that if the written notice is not served within the prescribed time limit, that should in effect bring the appeal to an end. In agreeing to that, I was concerned that there should be sufficient time for busy members of the Crown Prosecution Service to prepare and to serve the written notice of appeal on the magistrates court and on the person concerned. I therefore insisted that the original one-hour time limit should be extended to two hours, and I shall be grateful if my hon. Friend the Minister will confirm that that limit is considered by the Crown Prosecution Service to be practicable. If the written notice of appeal is not served within the extended two-hour period, the appeal would be deemed to be disposed of and, by virtue of clause 1(5), the person concerned would be released from custody.

Mr. Luff: In view of my earlier remarks about the way in which an admirably robust Bill that was not wishy washy in any way has been weakened by its progress through both Houses, it would be churlish of me not to welcome the one group of amendments that reverses that process and redresses the balance between the victim and the alleged perpetrator in the way that the whole Bill sought to do.

It is entirely right that we should agree with their lordships in these amendments, which strengthen the Bill and make the clause more robust. I welcome them unreservedly for that reason. However, I emphasise the point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Shoreham (Mr. Stephen) that where the Bill has been weakened in order that it may reach the statute book speedily, I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will examine the possibility of Government legislation in Government time in the next Session, to restore all the Bill's original intentions. Otherwise, I have no hesitation in supporting the amendments.

Mr. Booth: Earlier, I was permitted to intervene on minor matters on several occasions, and until now I have refrained from congratulating my hon. Friend the Member for Shoreham (Mr. Stephen). I do so now, and having heard him address the House this morning, I appreciate his skill and acumen—as I am sure other hon. Members do—in presenting his Bill. I am proud to be associated with it as a sponsor, because it addresses an issue which is long overdue for reform. It is only sad that it is not a Government Bill but comes from the Back Benches—but it is not in any way diluted for that. At least the Government have given it a fair wind.

From my little experience, of many years ago, as a prosecutor, I may say that the amendment is at the nub of the balance between the exercise of liberty and the practicalities of the workings of magistrates courts. The question whether the time allowed for an appeal should be two hours or longer should be addressed. I am fearful that the practicalities of magistrates courts may mean that two hours is not quite long enough—but only by a short while. I shall explain why.

The Bill is admirable, though it should be noted that such legislation was not necessary in the past. I recall being able, as a prosecutor, to call police witnesses who had to say only that they objected to bail on the ground of the gravity of the series of offences, that the defendant had previous convictions, or whatever, for bail to be invariably refused. That is not the case today. In Committee, my hon. Friend the Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby) spoke of the revolving door—the vast number of defendants who leave the docks of magistrates courts and immediately commit further offences.

The chief superintendent who is responsible for my constituency tells me that a vast number of offences in my part of London are committed by people who are on bail. So, on the one hand, the Bill's provisions to tackle that problem are thoroughly welcome but, on the other, I am concerned about the amendment. Those who have practised in the magistrates courts know that a trial may last two or three hours during a morning or afternoon and that the court clerk may be loth to interrupt it. If bail is refused, the prosecution may decide within minutes of the court adjourning that it wishes to appeal. However, a new case may have been called and the court clerk may not want to interrupt it—nor may it be in the best interests of the subsequent defendant to do so. If a case were adjourned for example just before half-past ten o'clock, the resumed application for bail might not be heard until one o'clock. I do not believe that two hours is long enough. Similarly, a typical afternoon sitting of a magistrates court is two and a half hours. I contend, therefore, that the amendment should provide for two and a half hours. Concern for the victim, which all hon. Members have expressed, demands that we reconsider the amendment and provide for two and a half hours rather than two hours.

Lady Olga Maitland: I do not want to hold up the business because I know that there are more matters to consider today, so may I briefly say that I accept the amendment, but with some reservations? I support what my hon. Friend the Member for Finchley (Mr. Booth) said about the period being two and a half hours.

[Lady Olga Maitland]

I have an awful feeling that there may be a loophole, whereby an appeal may fail on purely administrative grounds. As I understand it, an appeal is valid only if it is confirmed in writing within the time specified. It is academic whether it is two hours, two and a half hours or four hours. What worries me is that it somehow or other invalidates the first application for an appeal, which is made orally in court. That is the moment from which the appeal should be valid, and its confirmation in writing should be merely an administrative factor. If, however, it is the judgment of the House and of the Minister that this is the way to proceed, I trust that the two-hour limit will be sufficient.

I trust also that we shall understand the problems that are experienced by the Crown Prosecution Service, which works extremely hard and is responsible for many cases each day. It would be most unfortunate if, because of a slip up, someone who should be detained in custody were released.

It is in general, however, an excellent Bill. I support the spirit behind it and very much appreciate the support given by the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) because, without it, I doubt whether we should have been able to proceed as satisfactorily. I also appreciate the Government's enormous interest in the increasing concern about crime and their backing for my right hon. Friend the Member for Shoreham (Mr. Stephen).

There is, however, one matter with which the Minister still needs to deal—the tricky and difficult problem of persistent juvenile offenders under the age of 15. He is well aware of public concern, and it would be reassuring to hear his thoughts. Many persistent juvenile offenders get off scot free and are not held in custody when they should be, but society has a right to be protected from them.

Mr. Matthew Banks: I listened carefully to my hon. Friend the Member for Shoreham (Mr. Stephen) and, although I applauded his flexible approach in Committee in ensuring that the Bill was dealt with expeditiously and will become law, I am very worried about this amendment.

Following the remarks made by my hon. Friends the Members for Finchley (Mr. Booth) and for Worcester (Mr. Luff), I must say that the amendment, which seeks to increase one hour to two hours, is not as acceptable as it should be. I think that it was my hon. Friend the Member for Worcester who said that it is one of the amendments that seek to redress the balance.

The fact is that nearly 500,000 people are granted bail each year by the courts. I do not have the figures for 1992 or 1993, but in 1991 about 52,000 people were remanded in custody. Research suggests that 10 per cent. of those granted bail are convicted of an offence while on bail or that they reoffend while on bail. That proportion has stayed the same since 1978. If we are to give the Director of Public Prosecutions and the Crown Prosecution Service the opportunity to take advantage of the Bill's provisions, it is vital that we give those responsible at the magistrates court the maximum possible, sensible time to ensure that written notice of appeal can be served. I am not entirely satisfied that increasing one hour to two hours is the right way to proceed.

I urge the Minister to take on board my concerns and those of my other hon. Friends. Many of those who are, or will be, involved in serving written notice of appeal are busy people with heavy work loads and, like conscientious Back Benchers, working under a great deal of stress. They might find that increasing one hour to two hours is not appropriate.

It would be cold comfort if one of my constituents—for example, a widow living on her own in Southport—suffered a burglary or other aggravation when a crime was committed, simply because someone had been released on bail because those involved in serving written notice of appeal had had insufficient time to serve that notice.

Mr. Thomason: Earlier, the Minister said that, of necessity, decisions about appeals would have to be made by prosecutors on the ground, the people who are handling the files for the day and who are engaged in a series of cases. It may be difficult, if they are going straight on to another hearing, for them to deal with an appeal notice within the time limit. Does my hon. Friend agree that that adds to his point?

Mr. Banks: I am grateful to my hon. Friend. He makes a pertinent point about the difficulties of work load that may mean that somebody who should be the subject of an appeal may not become the subject because there is insufficient time for officials to serve a written notice of appeal at the magistrates court. I am concerned about that and I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will address that concern. I am not satisfied that increasing the time limit from one to two hours, as the amendment proposes, is satisfactory.

Mr. Maclean: This is an important amendment and my hon. Friends have rightly touched on some crucial points. The amendment will ensure that if written notice of appeal is not served within the period specified, the appeal will fail. The written notice serves the purpose of recording for all concerned the fact that an appeal has been launched and the grounds of the appeal, which the defence will want to be confirmed, so that work on the arguments that will be presented to the judge can begin straight away at the appeal hearing. If the notes have been arranged, they will contain the time and place of the appeal hearing. It is, therefore, a document of record that the defence may wish to have to consider how to respond to the appeal.

The Government accept the importance of ensuring that such a written record is provided as quickly as possible. Although we accept that a two-hour time limit is more realistic than one hour, we realise that prosecutors may often go straight from one case to another, which might make it difficult to meet a one-hour target. Those hon. Members who have experienced a busy magistrates court room, in whatever capacity, will agree that, in a two-hour period, it is realistic to expect some break in the proceedings, allowing the prosecutor to wrote out and lodge a notice.

I shall give a little more detail to my hon. Friend the Member for Finchley (Mr. Booth) on how we envisage that that method might work in practice. The Crown prosecutor arrives in court to face a mountain of case papers, some of which will have been perused already. Other papers that relate to defendants who have been arrested by the police and detained in custody overnight will be known to the prosecutor.

Where the prosecutor, having argued against bail being granted to a defendant, then sees it granted by the magistrates, as is their judicial right, and wants to launch an appeal, he must immediately inform the court by way of an oral announcement. The written notice will take him a little time to prepare—not long, but he will need to gather his thoughts. After one hour, the courts will still be working through their case load. Two hours, I am assured by the CPS, will provide an opportunity for the prosecutor to break off from his duties to fill in the form.

I must say to my hon. Friends the Members for Finchley and for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland) that we considered the issue carefully. The judgment had to be based largely on what the Crown Prosecution Service saw as the minimum amount of time that it will find not just convenient, but practical in most circumstances, to complete the form. Of course, it will also give attention to how to make the form simple and easy to complete. One does not envisage that prosecutors will have to spend hours writing reams of notes on the reasons why they believe the appeal ought not to be granted. I anticipate that they will use a rather simplistic form in which they will record reasons why they object—the reasons why they wish to make representations that bail ought not to be granted. We envisage that being a relatively simple procedure.

Mr. Matthew Banks: My hon. Friend has just said that he was advised that one hour or two hours is the minimum time. If that is the case, does he recognise that that is why my colleagues and I are so concerned about this matter?

Mr. Maclean: I would not want to mislead the House. Perhaps I did not use the best choice of words. When I discussed this matter with CPS representatives, they said that a two-hour limit would be satisfactory and would not cause them difficulties. Having explored all the options and time limits, I believe that it would be inappropriate for me, with my inexpert judgment on the matter, to suggest a different time limit. If the CPS believes that it can operate in the two-hour period, I advise my hon. Friends, who have considerable experience of these matters—and I note the plea for a two-and-a-half hour period—to accept the judgment of the CPS in this case.

1.15 pm

Mr. Booth: Does my hon. Friend accept that the basis on which he has explained his point is very different from the point that I was trying to make? I was not making a point about a prosecutor who was in charge of his own pile of briefs or about an able prosecutor who can juggle five minutes here and there. I was proposing a different situation which I hope my hon. Friend the Minister has considered in the advice that he has taken. What if a prosecutor cannot get back into court because another case is going on in that court?

Mr. Maclean: I understand my hon. Friend's point. However, the CPS does not see any great difficulty.

My hon. Friend the Member for Finchley also suggested that the court might have to adjourn its other business to receive the written notice, but the notice can simply be passed to the clerk of the court.

The CPS envisages, and their lordships with whom this was also discussed expected, anticipated—I do not wish to put words in their mouths—and I believe would accept the concept, that the written notice should be in a very simple, tick-the-box form for the reasons of appeal. In those circumstances, I do not envisage a great deal of time having to be spent on the written notice itself.

I hope that my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam has been reassured by my advice to her and to the House that the two-and-a-half hour time limit which she suggested is not necessary in view of the opinion of the CPS.

The wording in the amendment is consistent with the wording of subsection (6). It avoids any suggestion that might be capable of being read into other forms of words, such as the appeal being "null and void", that the original decision to appeal was in some way "unlawful". That aspect of the time within which the appeal is confirmed in writing is linked with the assurances that were sought during the Bill's passage in another place about the level of prosecutor allowed to launch an appeal against a bail decision.

It could be argued that if prosecutors are entrusted with all the other responsibilities of prosecuting a case, they should be trusted as the people on the spot—and this is the point that I made earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove (Mr. Thomason)——

Mr. Thomason: That is right.

Mr. Maclean: I eventually managed to get my hon. Friend's constituency right.

As I was saying, as the people on the spot, prosecutors should be trusted to use their discretion whether they should launch an appeal. I believe that the prosecutors in the court, who are appraised of the facts, will be best placed to make a decision on whether to appeal. They will be aware of the risks that a defendant might pose if released on appeal and of the arguments put by the defence in support of bail.

The alternative of requiring senior lawyers to be available to take through all decisions to launch prosecution appeals, would vastly and unacceptably increase the costs of the CPS because it would be impossible to ensure that a prosecutor of such rank was present at all magistrates courts or contactable by telephone at any time to give authority to appeal.

In discussions about this part of the Bill and this amendment, the Government have recognised concerns implicit in the desire to see authorisation given at a senior level. In order to meet those concerns, the Government propose to ensure that there are proper procedures within the Crown Prosecution Service by which senior prosecutors will be able to vet and, if necessary, discontinue appeals.

I shall go into a little more detail on the important point —which was raised earlier and is relevant to this amendment—about senior prosecutors being able to vet appeals. The guidance that will be issued by the Crown Prosecution Service will indicate that appeals should not be made by junior prosecutors without seeking approval from more senior lawyers. In any case where Crown prosecutors consider that it might be appropriate to use the right of appeal, they will, wherever possible, obtain prior authority to do so. If, at the hearing when they have heard all that the defence has to say, that view is confirmed, they will have authority to launch the appeal. If, in exceptional circumstances, it is not possible to obtain prior authority, Crown prosecutors will seek a subsequent review of the decision to appeal by a more senior lawyer. That will be done within the time limit for giving written notice of appeal if possible, but, if not, within 24 hours at the latest.

[Mr. Maclean]

My hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam raised a very important point on powers to deal with persistent juvenile offenders. Of course, it is important that when juvenile offenders appear before a court, and if the prosecutor wishes to exercise the right of appeal, the minimum time should elapse before alleged young offenders remain in custody. The whole House will agree that that is important and that it is of particular relevance, therefore, in consideration of the two-hour time limit, that we look at the situation in regard to persistent juvenile offenders.

To answer my hon. Friend's point briefly, the Criminal Justice Act 1991 reformed and strengthened juvenile remand arrangements. It gave courts a new power to attach conditions when juveniles are remanded in local authority accommodation, and it placed the decision to remand 15 and 16-year-old boys squarely with the courts. We are all concerned about persistent offenders. The trend towards that small hard core of offenders committing a disproportionate amount of crime which destroys the quality of life for the law-abiding majority of our citizens cannot be tolerated.

We must be particularly concerned that, as studies consistently show, repeat offenders are often young men and boys who have the potential to carry on offending for years to come. We believe that their habit of offending must be broken. As my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam rightly pointed out, some persistent offenders seem to have become either careless of the consequences of their actions or arrogant when they appear before the courts. As my hon. Friend said, they make a gesture towards the courts' authority. That is why we are considering ways of tackling offending at its roots —by influencing individual attitudes and behaviour, particularly among the young; and persistent offenders must be made, while in custody, to confront their offending behaviour and its consequences.

Juveniles who persist in anti-social criminal behaviour must, as my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary made clear in the House last night, be brought to fear the strength of the law. We attach a high priority to the matter and shall soon introduce legislation to establish secure training orders to deal with the hard core of persistent juvenile offenders aged under 15—exactly what my hon. Friend asked me.

Lady Olga Maitland: I thank my hon. Friend the Minister for his remarks. I welcome them, and they will be a great reassurance to the public at large. Will he clarify that the area that I——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must inform the hon. Lady that that point must not be pursued any further under these amendments.

Mr. Maclean: I cannot go further, because I would be outside the relevance of the two-hour limit in this amendment.

My hon. Friend the Member for Southport (Mr. Banks) was also very concerned about the two-hour limit in the amendment and the conditions attached to bail. Courts already have the power to attach tough conditions to bail where they are appropriate. They can and do require defendants to keep off the streets at certain times, to keep away from certain places, and to keep away from certain people. The availability of bail conditions is very important in increasing the range of options available to the court in considering how best to deal with a defendant before trial. Those conditions must be effectively policed and enforced, and magistrates must be fully aware of the possibilities open to them.

The work of the local projects has highlighted the importance of bail conditions at the remand stage. We will be examining carefully how to make the best use of the option of conditional bail to prevent offending while on bail. In those circumstances, the court might feel that it is appropriate to grant bail and not allow a prosecution right of appeal if the person can be kept in reasonably sensible conditions, but short of being remanded in custody.

My hon. Friend the Member for Southport was concerned about whether there would be increased pressure on prison places if we reduced the number of people who are remanded on bail. The Bail Act makes clear a general presumption in favour of bail in line with the fundamental principle of our criminal justice system —presumed innocent until found guilty. Therefore, it is not our intention—I am afraid that I must disappoint my hon. Friend—that bail shall be refused in the majority of cases. The emphasis must be targeting to improve the chances that those who are most likely to offend on bail or abscond will be identified by the courts and to increase the likelihood of identifying some who are currently remanded in custody who could safely be released on bail.

Evidence suggests that the majority of defendants do not offend while on bail and, therefore, locking them up in those circumstances would serve no purpose. That is why the Bill makes such a sensible contribution to improving the range of powers to deal with bail. Of course, the amendment is also appropriate to those purposes.

My hon. Friend referred to the extent of the problem of people offending while on bail. In 1991, 480,000 people were granted bail by the courts and 52,000 were remanded in custody. Research suggests that 10 per cent. of those who are granted bail are convicted of an offence while on bail and that the proportion has stayed the same since 1978. Many of the offences are not ones that would result in a custodial sentence. Undoubtedly, there is a hard core of offenders—burglars, car thieves and the Sutton posse —who do not respect the courts. Those offenders must be taught a lesson.

Some hon. Members will be aware that police research shows that the figure of those offending while on bail is much higher—17 per cent. in one study and a third in another. I welcome those police studies as shedding more light on the problem. We are trying to ensure that there is an agreed method of measuring offending on bail. Whatever the figures—let us not disagree about them— clearly there is too much offending while on bail.

I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Shoreham (Mr. Stephen) on the progress that the Bill has made. I thank hon. Members on both sides of the House who have made thoughtful and valuable contributions to the Bill's progress. I especially thank my hon. Friends who are present today who have made such excellent speeches —my hon. Friends the Members for Worcester (Mr. Luff), for Sutton and Cheam, for Bromsgrove, for Southport, for Finchley, and others. I have been told that the Bill has the support of my hon. Friend the Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman). I studied the Bill carefully. I was surprised that she supported it because I could see nothing dealing with castration. Nevertheless, I am glad that she supports it.

The amendment is important and sensible. I commend it to the House, together with the Bill, which the Government treat with sympathy. We believe that it is broadly in line with the need to provide some safeguard against the sort of bail decisions that have resulted in tragic consequences in the past. The principle has been welcomed by hon. Members on both sides of the House and I hope that the Bill passes through all stages today.

As amended (in the Standing Committee), considered.

[MR. GEOFFREY LOFTHOUSE in the Chair]

New clause 2

PRESUMPTION IN FAVOUR OF ACCESS

'.—(1) Where, in any proceedings before the Tribunal, a person claims access to a record, then, subject to subsection (2) below, it shall be for the authority holding the record to show that access to the record should not be given.

(2) Subsection (1) above does not apply where access to the record is being resisted on the ground that it contains information exempt by virtue of section 25 above.'.—[Mr. Thomason.]

Brought up, and read the First time.

Mr. Roy Thomason (Bromsgrove): I beg to move, That the clause be read a Second time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With this it will be convenient to take the following amendments:

No. 69, in clause 42, page 24, leave out lines 7 to 30.

No. 70, in clause 43, page 24, leave out lines 32 to 43.

No. 71, in clause 44, page 25, leave out lines 1 to 29.

No. 72, in clause 45, page 25, line 30, leave out from beginning to end of line 5 on page 26.

No. 73, in clause 46, page 26, leave out lines 6 to 33.

No. 74, in clause 47, page 26, line 34, leave out from the beginning of line 34 to the end of line 9 on page 27.

No. 75, in clause 48, page 27, leave out lines 10 to 16.

No. 76, in clause 49, page 27, leave out lines 17 to 30.

No. 77, in clause 50, page 27, line 31, leave out from the beginning to the end of line 4 on page 28.

No. 78, in clause 51, page 28, leave out lines 5 to 19.

No. 79, in clause 52, page 28, leave out lines 20 to 23.

No. 80, in clause 53, page 28, leave out lines 24 to 29.

No. 81, in clause 54, page 28, line 30, leave out from the beginning to the end of line 11 on page 29.

No. 82, in clause 55, page 29, leave out lines 12 to 33.

No. 83, in clause 56, page 29, leave out lines 34 to 40.

No. 42, in clause 57, page 29, leave out lines 41 to 45.

No. 85, in clause 58, page 30, leave out lines 1 to 9.

No. 86, in clause 59, page 30, leave out lines 10 to 26.

1.30 pm

Mr. Thomason: I am obliged to you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for calling me. I rise to speak in support of new clause 2 and amendment No. 42. I congratulate the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central (Mr. Fisher) on his enormous work in producing the Bill. It is never easy for any Member of Parliament to produce a private Member's Bill, and one who produces a Bill of the complexity and size of the Right to Know Bill deserves special congratulation. The House is obliged to the hon. Gentleman for his efforts.

In that spirit, I inform the hon. Gentleman that new clause 2 is not intended to be a wrecking amendment. Far from it—it aims to be constructive and to ensure that the Bill can operate effectively once it is implemented. It deals with a particular problem which, on reflection, many hon. Members will feel should require attention.

The Bill suggests that a third party should have the burden of proof against him in establishing that information should not be made available to a tribunal. For example, if a public body is approached by company

[Mr. Thomason]

A which asks for information on the public body, that information should be provided if possible. The public body must have the burden of proof against it if it refuses to produce that information. That is the position under the proposals of the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central. It is also the position under new clause 2.

If the information sought by company A relates to company B, burden of proof will still be on company B to resist making that information available, so it will be a difficult hurdle for the third party to overcome to resist the disclosure of information held by a public body and requested by a third party. Where information is requested by the third party, the burden of proof should rest against the person who makes the application, because that person seeks to obtain information which may be used against another person or body.

Mr. Michael Trend (Windsor and Maidenhead): In the spirit of the debate, can my hon. Friend tell me whether company A or company B made any donations to any political party?

Mr. Thomason: Company A or B or, indeed, trade union A or B may well have made contributions, but that would be irrelevant to obtaining justice before the tribunal.

I am surprised that several amendments tabled by my hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Luff) have been taken with new clause 2 and amendment No. 42. His series of amendments seek to delete the provisions on the establishment of the tribunal. That does not seem entirely in the spirit of the proposal in new clause 2, which seeks to add to the provisions in the Bill, not to destroy the tribunal arrangements entirely. I shall need some persuasion by my hon. Friend the Member for Worcester that I should support his amendments. So there is a discrepancy between the objectives of the amendments in the group. It is wholly proper and appropriate that some mechanism should be created for testing whether information should be disclosed.

New clause 2 goes a long way towards achieving those arrangements for disclosure without imposing an undue burden on those who seek information from or about someone else. The associated amendments, however, appear to destroy the ability to provide an appropriate mechanism to deal with deciding whether a public body should disclose information in the first place. I wait to hear what my hon. Friend the Member for Worcester will say to justify his amendments.

Mr. Peter Luff (Worcester): My hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove (Mr. Thomason) need not hold his breath for too long. I assure the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central (Mr. Fisher) that my amendments are designed to probe the need for the existence of the commissioner and the tribunal. It is not my intention to press them to a vote, so he, too, can breath easy.

The means of establishing the commissioner and tribunal deserves to be scrutinised and alternative enforcement mechanisms must be considered. I am sure that the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central has spotted that I have not proposed any such alternatives, however, so it would be foolish to push my amendments to a vote, because we would then be left with a toothless Bill. That is not what I desire.

I also believe that my amendment No. 54 relates closely to the same issue and, therefore, it is no longer my intention to move it.

I am extremely concerned about the cumbersome mechanisms for enforcement set out in the Bill. I seek reassurance from the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central that those elaborate procedures are essential to secure the objectives of his Bill. I must make it clear that I am in sympathy with much of the principle behind the Bill—I know that the hon. Gentleman will think that I am being disingenuous, but I am not—but my reservations tend to mount as we consider its later clauses. We all support the principle of freedom of information. The Government share that commitment, as I am sure my hon. Friend the Minister will make clear when he speaks.

It is right that we should pause and reflect on whether the mechanisms for enforcement are right and the scope of the Bill is appropriate. The hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central drew on several examples on Second Reading to support his argument, but his choice of the poison apple scare was infelicitous. That is like a red rag to a bull to an hon. Member who represents the county of Hereford and Worcester. The lessons that he drew from that example were different from my own. The House and the Government had to devote an enormous amount of time to dealing with utterly false scare stories, that could have had serious implications for farmers in my constituency. I am saddened that he chose to draw attention to that particular example, because it caused me to question many of the Bill's early clauses.

My amendments refer to part IV. If I understand it correctly, the Standing Committee did not consider the clauses in that part, but passed them on the nod. We must, therefore, spend a little time on Report considering the merits of the framework that the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central seeks to erect.

We should pass legislation only if we believe that it will assist to alter attitudes as well as the legal framework. If we believe that a particular part of a Bill may have an adverse effect on attitudes and the way in which people conduct themselves, we should pause and think long and hard before passing that legislation. Its enactment may make us all feel better, but it may make things worse in the real world outside.

The first two clauses in part IV deal with the internal review and I have no argument with them. I am concerned, however, that the other clauses will create a siege mentality in the institutions from which we are trying to gain information. I fear that the threat of overly officious enforcement may not foster the right attitude of openness.

I worked in government for two years and I strongly believe that the need to create openness in our society relies on attitude rather than the law. Some ingenious officials working in government may feel that they can circumvent provisions should they need to. It is much better that they should be encouraged to regard openness in government as desirable in itself and so develop a natural climate of openness. My amendments provide an opportunity to consider whether alternative enforcement mechanisms would not have an overly officious effect on civil servants and would therefore create that climate of openness.

Mr. Trend: Why does my hon. Friend feel that a legal framework would stifle rather than help to bring about a change in attitude or approach? I can think of some circumstances in which a change of attitude might be stifled by a draconian measure, but in the present case a change of law may encourage and accelerate—as seems to have happened in other parts of the English-speaking world—a move towards greater freedom of information, which most hon. Members favour.

Mr. Luff: I understand and have some sympathy with my hon. Friend's concerns, but a more flexible framework to enforce the law might not only produce less of a siege mentality in those whose attitudes we seek to alter, but might also lead to a speedier resolution of the issue. I shall return to that matter with an alternative suggestion.

Even if my hon. Friend disagrees that an excessively legal, regulated framework is the wrong approach, he may at least join me in considering the possibility of a speedier way of resolving disputes about access to information. I am concerned not to force people to adopt increasingly imaginative ways of avoiding the provisions of the Bill. If individuals know that their recorded words, actions, thoughts and deeds will be subject to intense public scrutiny, the records may become less frank and therefore of less value. We see that at work in many areas of life, particularly in an employer's fear, when he writes a reference for an employee, that his employee may see it. The euphemisms which enter references are legion.

If we do not create the right climate for enforcing the Bill, it could lead to less good decision taking because less information will circulate in writing in the organisations concerned. That could lead to less good government and commercial decision taking. We might rely instead on a framework of nods and winks, of verbal agreements, and no written records. That would be unhealthy.

I note in particular what the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central said when he introduced the Bill:

"The minds of Ministers, civil servants, local government officials and leaders would be wonderfully concentrated by the thought that the public had access to the information and records on which they made their decisions.—[Official Report, 19 February 1993; Vol. 219, c. 588.]

The stick with which the hon. Gentleman proposes to beat people in this clause is what he proposes would concentrate their minds. I prefer the carrot approach, providing those individuals with the intellectual arguments which would make them wish to conduct their business more openly.

The clauses that the amendment seeks to delete add to that pressure. I suggest to the hon. Gentleman and to my hon. Friend the Member for Windsor and Maidenhead (Mr. Trend) that an alternative mechanism would better be modelled on the ombudsman procedure, which works in other areas of public life. It is less cumbersome, more flexible and sometimes—althought I must admit not always—speedier.

Mr. Eric Pickles (Brentwood and Ongar): Is my hon. Friend aware that the ombudsman's judgments are not enforceable in law—in Scotland it is different from south of the border—and that many public bodies have sought simply to ignore those decisions? In trying to change people's attitudes through a more flexible approach, what does my hon. Friend suggest that we do when we come up against an organisation or institution whose mind does not want to be moved?

Mr. Luff: My view of the ombudsman is slightly more rosy than that of my hon. Friend. I do not know why solicitors in my constituency are working so hard to get the ombudsman to produce favourable outcomes for their clients if they do not share that view. My local authority recently used an ombudsman's judgment to deny compensation to one of my constituents because it felt that as the ombudsman had said that no fault rested on the authority, the Audit Commission would have been extremely critical if compensation had been paid. Ombudsmen are more effective than my hon. Friend suggests.

1.45 pm

Mr. Pickles: Is my hon. Friend aware that despite criticisms from the district auditor and the Audit Commission, councils such as Wakefield and Manchester have persistently ignored ombudsmen's decisions? Despite the work of solicitors in his constituency and the reasonable nature of most institutions, what happens when somebody will not co-operate?

Mr. Luff: I am prepared to be persuaded on the issue. I have said that I do not intend to divide the House on the amendments and I hope that the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central will be able to assure me that the adverse consequences which I fear will not flow from the legislation and that my proposal of an ombudsman is inadequate. I do not wish to become bogged down in debate with my hon. Friends because that prevents the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central from telling us how the Bill will work in practice.

I am not opposed to the early parts of the Bill, but I am worried about the way it seems to work. The Bill on Sunday trading presented by the hon. Member for Ogmore (Mr. Powell) had my entire and robust sympathy, but the way the Bill developed in Committee made it too bureaucratic and difficult to administer. That is precisely my concern about the section of the Bill that we are debating. To make speedier progress, I shall restrict my remarks to that aspect.

On Second Reading, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster said:

"It shows a profound truth: whatever we do in legislation, nothing ultimately changes, unless the culture of organisations genuinely changes. It is always possible to find a way round rules if those working within them really want to. That is a fair point, whatever approach we take to the matter."—[Official Report, 19 February 1993; Vol. 219, c. 596.]

In that spirit, I urge the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central to reassure me that the central mechanisms in his Bill are necessary. For example, is it not possible to find a better way to operate our system of parliamentary questions to procure the necessary information? I entirely agree with the hon. Gentleman's comment on Second Reading that hon. Members are too often fobbed off with inadequate answers. He said that hon. Members had noticed the increasing use of answers

"such as 'This information is not available,' or 'This information is too expensive to compile,' or 'This information is no longer centrally collected'. Usually, the questions are reasonable, and the answers would be of assistance to the quality of understanding and public debate. But Ministers and civil servants decide what is good for us—not our needs or rights."—[Official Report, 19 February 1993; Vol. 219, c. 584.]

Is that not perhaps an alternative enforcement mechanism in the making and one which we should consider rather than an elaborate and expensive method of enforcing desirable legislation?

[Mr. Luff]

Part IV of the Bill seems too draconian. My amendments give the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central an opportunity to justify the edifice that he seeks to create to achieve the noble ends that we all share.

Mr. Mark Fisher (Stoke-on-Trent, Central): I am surprised that the hon. Member for Bromsgrove (Mr. Thomason) who moved the new clause is not in his place. If he were here, I would tell him that he either does not fully understand the brief that he has been given for his new clause or has not read the Bill. I see that he has just returned to his place. He seemed to be under the misapprehension that the tribunal would enforce requests from one company to another. The wording of the new clause is almost identical to that in clause 57 of the Bill and it is therefore difficult to see exactly what the hon. Gentleman seeks to achieve that would not be achieved by clause 57, which is about establishing a burden of proof on an authority that seeks not to disclose information that is covered by the Bill.

Mr. Thomason: The point relates to the burden of proof on a third party. The burden of proof will remain exactly the same as in the Bill.

Mr. Fisher: The hon. Gentleman has not read his own new clause, which states that where "a person claims access to a record . . . it shall be for the authority"— there he is referring to the authorities covered by the scope of the Bill, which are all public bodies—

"holding the record to show that access to the record should not be given."

It would be a courtsey to the House if the hon. Gentleman who tabled the new clause had even a rudimentary knowledge of what he was moving. It illustrates what has happened this morning. Every hon. Member who is in the Chamber knows exactly what has happened. However, members of the public may not. As we are accountable to the public, I believe that I ought to explain what has been happening and how it is that a highly intelligent and capable Member of Parliament finds himself moving a new clause that he has not read and does not even begin to understand.

Tory Members have been wheeled in to spend four hours of the time of the House speaking to six sets of Lords amendments, none of which is opposed. The amendments are agreed by both sides of the House and by every single Member who has spoken this morning. They have the approval of the House and of the other place. It has been a time-wasting exercise. The reason for it should be explained to the public.

The Government are determined to prevent the Right to Know Bill from completing its Report stage and being given a Third Reading.

Lady Olga Maitland (Sutton and Cheam): I really must protest at the hon. Gentleman's suggestion that we have been involved in a time-wasting exercise. It has escaped his notice, it seems, that the whole country wants to know how we intend to deal with persistent offenders. It is their right to know that that Bill was properly and adequately debated.

Mr. Fisher: I am sure that the hon. Lady is right about the will of the country. She will also be aware that the will of the House is not opposed by any opposition party or by any of her hon. Friends. She knows very well that what has gone on this morning is something to which she has been a party, Friday after Friday. There have been the same usual suspects—the hon. Members for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland), for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. Pickles), for Worcester (Mr. Luff) and for Bromsgrove (Mr. Thomason). Week after week, they have come here to——

Mr. Luff: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Can you guide me? I think that the hon. Gentleman is coming perilously close to impugning the honour of hon. Members. I have severe reservations about some of the Lords amendments to the Bail (Amendment) Bill. I wanted to explain what they were to the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central (Mr. Fisher) is entitled to make his own speech.

Mr. Fisher: I am grateful, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Everybody knows what has gone on here this morning and what has gone on here when other Bills have been before the House, such as the Bill that was introduced by my right hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) relating to disabled persons, both in the previous Parliament and in this, and also the Bill that was introduced by my hon. Friend the Member for Durham, North (Mr. Radice) concerning medical information. It is no mystery to Members of Parliament. They know what goes on here when private Member's Bills are debated, but it is important for the public to understand the actions of this House.

Mr. Pickles: I had hoped that we would hear the hon. Gentleman's views on this Bill. I have been here on every occasion that the Local Government (Overseas Assistance) Bill has been debated. I was here last on a Friday on 26 March. That hardly qualifies me as a regular attender on Fridays. The hon. Gentleman may consider himself to be a machine politician and he may believe that what the Opposition Front Bench tells him must be right. Just because there may be a cosy agreement between the two Front Benches does not mean that I do not want to come here to defend the rights of local government.

Mr. Fisher: I will not enter into that debate with the hon. Gentleman. The hon. Gentleman knows the purpose behind his tabling, with other Conservative Members, 86 amendments to my Bill—which received an unopposed Second Reading, when there was plenty of time either to vote against it with a closure motion or to speak against it. The Bill also received 15 hours of scrutiny in Committee, where it was not substantially amended. Suddenly, the hon. Gentleman is taking an interest in the right to know and has tabled 86 amendments—many of which, despite his remarks, are deliberate wrecking amendments that seek to knock out whole sections of a Bill that received an unopposed Second Reading and detailed scrutiny in Committee.

Mr. Luff: Does the hon. Gentleman accept that the amendments that I am discussing were not debated in Committee and deserve detailed scrutiny? Will he accept also that I did not attend the Bill's Second Reading and vote against it—which I might have done, if I had given the matter some thought—because I thought that it was worth while for the Bill to be considered in Committee and for the issues to be debated, as a preparatory move to the Government bringing forward their own White Paper? Later, I shall seek assurances from my hon. Friend the Minister that a White Paper will be published before the summer recess, as was promised by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State some months ago.

Mr. Fisher: If the hon. Gentleman had done any homework and read the proceedings in Committee, he would know that the tribunal and the commissioner were discussed at great length.

Mr. Thomason: It would be helpful if the hon. Gentleman read the amendment properly rather than accuse others of not understanding it. Clause 57 places the burden on the third party, whereas new clause 2 places it on the public authority. New clause 2 is quite different, although it follows the Bill's general form. Is not the hon. Gentleman mistaken in his allegations, and will he withdraw them?

Mr. Fisher: No. Before the hon. Gentleman gets hot under the collar, he should read clause 57:

"In any proceedings before the Tribunal, the burden of establishing that access to a record or part of a record should not be given shall be on the authority which holds the record".

The hon. Gentleman's new clause says exactly that. The hon. Gentleman has not followed the debate and he does not understand the Bill.

Mr. Thomason rose——

Mr. Fisher: Before the hon. Gentleman makes a greater fool of himself, he should resume his seat. I will not give way again. I suggest that the hon. Gentleman goes outside and quietly reads the Bill. It would be for his better information if he were to do so, before trying to move new clauses.

Mr. Thomason: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. The hon. Gentleman suggested that I am a fool, and I strongly object. Some hon. Members may agree with him, but I ask whether the hon. Gentleman was using proper parliamentary language.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Gentleman's language has been in order. That matter is for the Chair.

Mr. Fisher: The hon. Gentleman seems to be accusing himself out of his own mouth. I am convinced that he would have been better informed if he read the Bill and the proceedings in Committee before seeking to table new clauses. He might then have thought better of his new clause. There is nothing in it to which I object, because it repeats almost word for word clause 57. I welcome the hon. Gentleman's attempt to repeat clause 57, but that is a strange way of supporting it. His support would have been better expressed in a different way.

Today's proceedings relate very much to what the hon. Member for Worcester (Mr. Luff) seeks to do with amendment No. 54 and his support for the new clause. The Government's position was made clear by the Secretary of State and by the Under-Secretary of State in Committee. They verbally support the principle of greater access to freedom of information and are to produce a White Paper. Their view is that the matter can safely be left to a more liberal attitude by Government Departments. It is sad that the Chancellor of the Duchy has not got his White Paper through the other Government Departments. It will be interesting to hear from the Minister when it will be published.

I understand that the White Paper, which has been in draft form for some time, has gone to other Departments and has been subjected to a great sheaf of objections by almost every Department. The Chancellor, his junior Minister and his civil servants, who I am convinced believe passionately in the subject and the importance of it, understand the significance of the Bill. Their good will has not been matched by other Secretaries of State and I hope that the Minister will be candid enough to recognise that and will tell us something about the difficulties and objections of other Departments.

The Government are led by a Prime Minister who, for the first time in the history of this country, has said that there is too much secrecy in government, which is greatly to his credit. He appointed the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to get on with the job and I accept that the Chancellor of the Duchy and his former and present junior Ministers are sincere and wish to make progress. However, that verbal support does not lead them to support the Bill. Although they have not voted against it, they have criticised it on the grounds that it is legislation and it is too cumbersome. But the background of their objection—this applies to the point that the hon. Member for Worcester is seeking to address in deleting the tribunal and commissioner—is that it takes out of the hands of Ministers the power to adjudicate on whether information should be in the public domain and gives it to an independent tribunal and comissioner.

The Government, while seeking slightly to open the flow of information, do not want the Bill and do not want to lose the control of information because it is enormously powerful and enormously effective and useful for Government and civil servants. The Minister and the hon. Members who have tabled the 86 amendments know that. The hon. Member for Brentwood and Ongar whose experience in local government is considerable, understands the help, especially at moments of political embarrassment, that controlling the flow of information can give.

Interestingly, almost every local authority and all the local authority associations support the Bill, even though they know that it will cause inconvenience and difficulty. They will not be able to keep some information from the public, as they have in the past, but, to their credit, local government and councillors of all political parties have seen that the game is up and that local authorities and officials cannot control information against the public's will. Only the Government seek to hold on the power of controlling information.

Every political party in the House now wants freedom of information legislation. A growing number of Conservative Back Benchers support large tracts of the Bill and only a few Ministers and civil servants do not want to lose control of information. That is why the Bill has been obstructed this morning and that is why it will not become law.

The Government cling to the embattled and unsustainable position that Ministers and civil servants should control information. That is not the view of the Governments of Australia, Canada, New Zealand, the United States and most European countries. The Governments who have changed things in those countries are of all polical parties. Indeed, Conservative Governments, trying to defend the rights of the individual against the overbearing power of the state, have often pushed through freedom of information legislation. People outside the House are amazed and appalled by the Government who are led by a Prime Minister who says that he believes that there is too much secrecy but who still seeks to hold on to power. The Government will speak the language of greater openness. I believe that the Chancellor of the Duchy, if he had his way with the White Paper, would encourage—the very word that the hon. Member for Worcester used—his Departments to open up more. However, there is a world of difference between voluntary disclosure and making disclosure compulsory for the Government, local government and other public bodies. That fundamental difference is the real test on which freedom of information hinges.

Lady Olga Maitland: I wish to put two points to the hon. Gentleman. First, does he agree that there is a finely tuned balance between the right to know and the right to privacy? The right to privacy is enshrined in modern democracy. Secondly, how does he equate his pursuit of freedom of information and the right know with his party's reluctance to allow schools to publish their examination results?

Mr. Fisher: I agree with the hon. Lady's first point, but, if she had read the Bill, she would realise that clause 22 makes an exemption of matters of personal privacy. The Bill, which has been modelled on legislation from other countries, contains five or six key exemptions. No country in the world has complete licence and freedom of information. Personal privacy is certainly very important and is covered by the Bill, as it is by freedom of information legislation in other countries.

The hon. Lady is wrong on her second and party political point. The Labour party is in favour of the full disclosure of all school records. Indeed, the Bill ensures that the records of all schools and colleges are in the public domain. What we object to is partial selection, which the Government favour. If the Government really supported freedom of information in education, and believed that all information should be in the public domain, they would support the Bill that would make education information available to parents, students and all those interested in education. Instead, the Government favour making public only a selective range of indicators which they hope will prove their own points. That is not freedom of information. If the hon. Lady believed in freedom of information, she would support the Bill and ensure that all education records were in the public domain.

Mr. Clive Soley (Hammersmith): If we had a freedom of information Act, would not schoolteachers and headmasters be able to release the letters that they have sent to the Secretary of State saying why they thought exam results would be grossly misleading to parents and children alike, without being threatened with action by the Secretary of State if they release that information?

Mr. Fisher: My hon. Friend makes a valid point, but the information that would be released under the Bill would include not only what he has identified but all other education statistics. If the Government were seriously interested in the public knowing all about our schools, colleges and universities, they would support what on Second Reading they called "blockbuster legislation" such as this. Such legislation would reveal all information and it would then be up to the public, with the help of journalists, to decide what it amounted to.

Mr. Michael Trend (Windsor and Maidenhead): The hon. Gentleman referred to blockbuster legislation. Some of us believe that there is a difference between rights-based legislation such as he is proposing and the discretion of the Government to allow certain matters to be opened to public scrutiny. There is, however, much common ground between the two. It appears that the hon. Gentleman and the Government agree on a mixed approach. The measures that the Government are so proud of having introduced, including those on local government and access to personal files and medical records, were introduced at their discretion, but they have established a rights-based approach for the public. It is not hard to arrive at the logical conclusion and to have a general, rights-based approach.

Mr. Fisher: I agree that tentative steps have been made, but I disagree in that it is not the Government who have introduced such legislation; rather, it has been pushed through by means of private Member's Bills which the Government have eventually allowed into the legislative programme.

The Government initially supported the Medicines Information Bill and agreed with Sir William Assner when he said that section 118 of the Medicines Act 1968 was thoroughly dangerous. That section makes it a criminal offence for someone such as Sir William to disclose information about the safety of drugs that he knows are unsafe and prevents the release of that information; if he released it, he would be sent to prison for two years. The Government initially supported the Bill in Committee, but, under pressure, I suspect, from outside commercial interests, they have backed off and blocked the Bill which now sits in the queue behind the Freedom and Responsibility of the Press Bill, promoted by my hon. Friend the Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley).

Such action is not to the credit of the Department of Health and it makes a mockery of the Government and their support for freedom of information, because everybody in the country, apart from the pharmaceutical companies, knows that the Medicines Information Bill is a thoroughly sensible, modest, but important measure which would correct something thoroughly wrong with the 1968 Act, which was passed by a Labour Government. Section 118 of that Act is idiotic and dangerous for the understanding of drugs and the health of the nation.

Why was such a good Bill blocked by the Government? That question goes to the nub of what the hon. Member for Worcester is seeking to do in questioning the tribunal and the commissioner. The reason, as I was saying earlier, concerns taking the power out of the hands of Ministers. The public and hon. Members may understand the Government's position more clearly when they consider the events of the past year. There has been a succession of public events: Matrix Churchill, the Scott inquiry, the closure of the pits, the patulin affair—which so offends constituents of the hon. Member for Worcester which, from a constituency point of view, I can understand—the question of the criteria on which Group 4 are running a privatised prison service, the whole nature of their contracts and how they can be enforced, the channel tunnel rail link, the question of Mr. Asil Nadir and the Tory party funds, the Maastricht legal advice and the Medicines Information Bill. Almost every month this year there has been a key political crisis that has hinged around information. The crux of each of those crises has been whether the Government have the right to withhold information or whether, in a mature democracy, the public and the press should have the same access to information.

The Government are almost alone in thinking that they should control information rather than share it with the public as a matter not of voluntary means, but of right. The Government should take note of the surprising sheaf of tens of thousands of post cards that arrived at the beginning of the year addressed to my hon. Friends and to Ministers. Perhaps, more acutely, the Government should take note of the way in which every single major national newspaper, that had formerly always supported the Tory party ran leader columns in February in support of the Right to Know Bill and freedom of information.

The Government chose not to listen to the advice of its usual supporters in the press: The Times, the Financial Times, The Daily Telegraph and others. All those newspapers said that the game was up on the Government keeping information to themselves, not just because of a desire for a balance of power, but because it is only by sharing information with the public that one improves the understanding, involvement, credibility and quality of public debate and the public scrutiny and accountability of politicians.

All hon. Members should recognise that the political process and politicians have never been held in such low esteem as they are at the moment. Regardless of party, the public are fed up with politicians and many of the things that happen in the House. The public do not trust or believe us and one reflection of that is the uniquely low standing of the Prime Minister. He is a perfectly honourable individual, but he has a lower standing in the polls than any Prime Minister has had before. The news today is that the Prime Minister has the lowest rating since opinion polls were introduced.

However, that low opinion of the public is not confined to the Prime Minister. I suspect that if there were an opinion poll about the credibility of Parliament and politicians, it would show a similar very low level. One of the reasons for that is the arrogance of the House, at the behest of the Government, in holding information to itself and saying to the public, "We don't care whether you understand: We don't have to justify what we are doing to legislation in this country. We will assert what we believe. We will tell you as much as we believe you have a right to know and you will have to be satisfied with that because you have no rights to know." That is the current position.

2.15 pm

Mr. Trend: Has the hon. Gentleman considered the point that if a Government were to introduce right-to-know legislation, they would be very popular? In the run up to a general election, and having introduced such legislation, they would receive popular—not populist—support. In many respects, although not in respect of reforming the Official Secrets Act 1911, the hon. Gentleman's Right to Know Bill conforms to basic Conservative principles of empowering the individual.

Mr. Fisher: Yes. One of the extraordinary things about freedom of information and the right to know is that they cross all political barriers. They can be supported by the libertarian far right, in the form of the hon. Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) and others, on the basis that it gives the individual power against institutions and the state. They can also be supported by liberals and socialists——

Dr. Lewis Moonie (Kirkcaldy): And libertarians.

Mr. Fisher: Yes, and libertarians. They can be supported by people of all political parties for slightly different motives. However, they can sympathise with the principle and that is why freedom of information legislation across the world has been introduced by Governments of all political persuasions. That makes it all the more baffling that this Conservative Government, almost alone in Europe, in the English-speaking world and in the Commonwealth, stand out against such legislation.

In their heart of hearts, the Government know that they cannot stand out against such legislation for very much longer. I suspect that in its next general election manifesto, if such legislation is not passed in the interim, the Conservative party will bow the knee to public opinion and join every other political party in making a commitment to freedom of information legislation.

We must then consider what kind of legislation will be introduced and how it will be enforced. Will it be enforced by a strong method or a weak method? I agree with the hon. Member for Brentwood and Ongar that an ombudsman is not the way to proceed. It is interesting to note that Canada has a much weaker form of enforcement through its commissioner. By general consent, the Canadian system does not work as well as the stronger form, on which we have modelled the tribunal and commissioner, to be found in Australia.

Having spent years in local government and in this place, and in spite of the integrity and hard work of the different ombudsmen, my confidence in them to deliver decisions that are constrained by the criteria and rules under which they must work, is not great. In addition, the speed with which they reach decisions is appalling. I am sure that when the hon. Member for Worcester takes cases to ombudsmen on behalf of his constituents, he finds that they take months to resolve.

Information covered by my Bill must be released within 30 days. I believe that the public have a right to that kind of response. If we leave the enforcement of their rights to an ombudsman and not to a tribunal or commissioner, that enforcement will take six months, nine months or perhaps even longer. The relevance of information will therefore be lost. When the hon. Member for Worcester considers that, I am sure that he will reconsider and agree with his hon. Friend the Member for Brentwood and Ongar that an ombudsman is not the best way to enforce these matters.

The tribunal and commissioner are quick and they are not expensive methods of resolving problems. They would achieve a result in respect of whether information is covered by the Bill within a very few days. The speed and accessibility of information is often as important as the information itself. If information is sensitive enough for a local authority or a Department to want to suppress and to argue the toss under the legislation, it is probably because it is active in the public domain at the time. Speed of response is extremely important.

Mr. Matthew Banks (Southport): In view of the time, it appears that the hon. Gentleman will remain on his feet for whatever time is left to debate the amendments. Therefore, will he touch not so much on the global issues? As an hon. Member who has not spoken before on a Friday—as a conscientious constituency Member, I am usually in Southport on Fridays, and I have no interest other than in pursuing the principle that the hon. Gentleman is trying to achieve with the Bill—I ask the hon. Gentleman briefly to mention accessibility to employment records.

I am particularly concerned that industry and the Confederation of British Industry fear that this Bill is not the right way to proceed. There might be a threat to a future employer's confidential reference. Will the hon. Gentleman comment on concern that has been expressed by employers that they should be free, as long as they do not act unlawfully, to provide to and receive from organisations information which might help them in assessing the suitability of employees for certain jobs and the suitability of future or current employees to assist the business for which they work?

The method that the hon. Gentleman seeks to impose with his Bill will bring to an end the possibility of maintaining any confidential employers' references.

Mr. Fisher: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for that intervention. He is wrong. The CBI is concerned about clause 80, which is about amendments to the Companies Act 1985, and how it would work. But on employers records, it does not have strong reservations, not least because many employers—in fact, the best employers in the country—share with their employees what is on record about them, just as the medical profession is increasingly sharing its records with patients. The Bill seeks to extend that practice in respect of before 1991 and give all individuals access to their medical records.

Most good employers and most parts of the public sector, such as the armed services, are increasingly encouraging open access to employees' files. It is important that individuals should be able to see what is written about them by an employer so that they can correct factual inaccuracies. If they do not, they lose control over perhaps the most important part of their life —their sense of indentity in their work. There might be material on their records which is misinformed, out of date, partial, biased or applying to some other person and which prejudices the career development and opportunities of an individual. It might even prejudice their work.

Mr. Matthew Banks rose——

Mr. Fisher: I will not give way to the hon. Gentleman because I want the Minister to reply to what, sadly, has been a brief debate. It is important that the Government's views are on the record as well.

It is very sad and democratically wrong, when legislation has had an unopposed Second Reading and full scrutiny in Committee, that the Government have the power through Back-Bench Members——

Mr. Don Foster (Bath): My party shares the hon. Gentleman's sadness that the Bill will clearly not make further progress. On Second Reading, I said that freedom of information should be at the heart of a modern democracy, that freedom of information should exist as of right, and that freedom of information should be the norm and secrecy the exception. Does the hon. Gentleman agree that those are the three key principles which we must hear from the Government today and that we must hope that they will include them in future legislation?

Mr. Fisher: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman. I pay tribute to his work in Committee and to the support of his party, and indeed that of all minority parties. The marked feature is that every political party, apart from the Conservative party, formally supports freedom of information legislation. I am grateful to other political parties in that united front.

There is a wider point about the handling of private Members' Bills. Cynical blocking or use of parliamentary time is wrong because it frustrates the will of Parliament when Bills receive unopposed Second Readings and full scrutiny in Committee.

I am glad that my right hon. Friend the Member for Wythenshawe is in his place because the way that he has worked for disabled people in society and his Bill will have support throughout the country and the House. However, his Bill has been blocked time and again by the Government. There are other examples of Bills being blocked—the Medicines Information Bill is but one.

That is not the way to defeat private Members' Bills. They should stand or fall on the quality of the arguments. We need to reform the whole process of how we organise the time for private Members' Bills during the parliamentary year so that they can either succeed or fall not on manipulation of time but on the success or otherwise of the arguments. Unless we do that, we are frustrating our democratic principles. I will resume my seat so that the Minister can speak for the last five minutes and let us know the latest position with regard to the White Paper.

Freedom of information legislation will not go away . Britain will have a Right to Know Bill in the next few years because everyone, apart from a small beleaguered handful of Ministers, know that that is the way in which the Government can be opened to scrutiny and accountability. In a modern democracy, we need the right to know.

The Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service and Science (Mr. David Davis): I have little time and I want to allow one more speaker, so I will be brief. As the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central (Mr. Fisher) will appreciate, I am a late arrival on this Bill. Although the Government do not support it, the hon. Gentleman has done a public service in taking it through the Committee and airing many issues. Many matters have arisen from the Committee stage that have helped in thinking through the important methods of developing a right to know. I commend the hon. Gentleman on that.

My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster promised that a White Paper would be published before the recess and that will be the case. The hon. Gentleman would not expect me to preview the White Paper today and I am sure that he will understand if I do not follow him down that road. I simply commend my hon. Friends the Members for Bromsgrove (Mr.

Thomason) and for Worcester (Mr. Luff) for raising important issues. Frankly, the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central was a little harsh on my hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove. I simply read clause 57:

"In any proceedings before the Tribunal, the burden of establishing that access to a record or part of a record should not be given shall be on the authority which holds the record, except where the proceedings relate to information which is claimed to be exempt under section 25 above when the burden shall be on the third party."

The point raised by new clause 2, where it attempts to redress the balance, is simply that of altering that provision to ensure that, in a commercial situation, the burden falls on the applicant, not the third party

There are many circumstances that I could air at length, but, unfortunately, we are out of time today. I will try to give another hon. Member the chance to make a point today, but I am sure that I will return to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central many times during debates on the White Paper, and I look forward to that.

Mr. Soley: I am appalled by that short response from the Minister. He knows that he could have spoken longer if the Government Whips had not chosen to talk these Bills out—not simply this Bill but the previous ones as well.

As I have said before, the Government's attempts to talk out Bills means that they devalue democracy in the House. It has always been the principle of the House that private Members' Bill should be decided on their merits. Unfortunately, in recent years—I suppose that we must go back 30 or 40 years—it has become the normal practice for Government Whips to organise against private Members' Bills. It has happened on both sides, but it has become so institutionalised that the present Government Whips are in a position to tell Back-Bench Members when they will be able to speak. We are in the absurd position that a private Member's Bill can complete its passage through the House only if it has the stamp of Government approval. That is why I and some other Back-Benchers, including Conservative Members, have written to the Procedure Committee asking that the position be changed.

The way in which to change the position is obvious. All private Members who are drawn high in the ballot should be timetabled so that their Bill cannot be talked out. They could then be either voted for or voted against. We could not talk out the Bill that introduced the poll tax; we could not talk out the Maastricht Bill. People tried all sorts of tricks. So if the Government can have a timetable, why cannot Back-Bench Members have a timetable? Alternatively, if we can talk out private Member's Bill, let us be able to talk out Government Bills. That would give us an opportunity to exercise democracy.

Points of Order

2.40 pm

Mr. Alfred Morris (Manchester, Wythenshawe): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Noting the objections to my Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill and the three related Bills for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland by the hon. Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes), I should like your guidance on a procedural point.

It is argued, in justification of the power of a single hon. Member to block a Bill with the one word "object", that it stops and is only meant to stop the Second Reading of a Bill which has not been debated by the House. But that does not apply in the case of my Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill, which has been debated for more than seven hours on the Floor of the House and for which there is demonstrably a clear all-party majority. Thus, a procedure that was designed to delay Bills that have never been debated is now used to obstruct a parliamentary majority.

It was suggested to me from the Chair that I should raise this issue with the Select Committee on Procedure. I have since done so and now feel strongly that it would help to end abuse of the procedure if the Chair itself asked the Committee to make urgent recommendations. That would give solace and hope to those whom the four Bills seek to help. News of today's, as it were, serial killing of these important Bills will be received by Britain's 6·5 million disabled people with anguish and anger. They feel badly cheated.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand that the Select Committee on Procedure is looking into that problem at present.

Rev. Martin Smyth (Belfast, South): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker, with specific reference to Northern Ireland. On a day when The Sun has shone on the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) and his Bill has been commended to the House, and given that all the parties in Northern Ireland agreed on an issue which affects disabled people in Northern Ireland, is it not unseemly that, when the principle of the Bill has been debated, because of the one word "object", we could not take the Bill through its Committee stage to explore it further and give a lead to the House? So often Northern Ireland is left in the backwaters after issues have been dealt with here.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Gentleman is at liberty to write to the Select Committee on Procedure and make those points.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. You will see from today's Order Paper, under "Questions for Written Answer", that question No. 11 is due for answer to me. It asks the Home Secretary to review the cases of Sam Kulasingham and Prem Sivalingham, who are presently serving life sentences in Wormwood Scrubs. I received a written answer a few moments ago saying that the review of the case is almost complete and that the Minister expects to make a decision now. The written question was tabled in sufficient time, and Essex police have investigated the case and presented volumes of evidence to the Home Secretary and are awaiting his decision.

The urgency of the matter is that Sam Kulasingham is on hunger strike. Last year, he was on hunger strike for 54 days before Essex police were asked to investigate and look for any new evidence. He has now been on hunger strike for more than 30 days and is less than half his normal body weight.

I am concerned to get a decision from the Home Office. Is there any way in which the Home Office can be encouraged rapidly to complete its review of the matter and decide whether the Home Secretary will exercise his powers to refer this disturbing and distressing case, which I believe to be a miscarriage of justice, to the Court of Appeal so that justice can be seen to be done, and be finally done, in the case of those two unfortunate gentlemen?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have no doubt that the hon. Gentleman's request has been heard by those on the Government Front Bench.

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West): Further to an earlier point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker, may I as a member of the Procedure Committee emphasise that the Committee is looking at the whole process of killing Bills in the way that happens on occasions such as this? We hope to be able to make some recommendations to the House in due course.

French Customs Fines (Prison Sentences)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Robert G. Hughes.]

2.44 pm

Mr. Neil Gerrard (Walthamstow): The subject of the debate affects a fairly small number of people, but it affects them seriously. They are people who are held in French prisons for the non-payment of customs fines. According to an answer that I received in February from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, about 80 people are currently held in French prisons for that reason, and some of them will spend up to two years in prison after the expiry of the normal sentence.

I have some concerns about the provisions of the French penal code, but that is not the responsibility of the House or the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. Therefore, I shall concentrate on the impact on British prisoners and deal especially with how they are treated differently from French nationals and how the Foreign and Commonwealth Office could provide assistance, either through representations and negotiations with the French Government or directly to individuals via consular officials in France.

I shall explain a little of the background to the debate. Under French law, a person convicted of a drugs-related offence suffers a customs fine in addition to, usually, a prison sentence. The amount of the fine is related to the street value of the drugs that have been seized, and we are aware of fines of up to £392,000. Therefore, large amounts can be involved. If, at the end of the prison sentence, a person is unable or unwilling to pay the customs fine, he may spend up to another two years in prison in lieu of payment. We are not debating the seizure of assets from drug trafficking. I shall draw an analogy with our own law. Earlier this week, we debated the Criminal Justice Bill [Lords] which will change the provisions for the seizure of assets from drug trafficking. It allows courts to make assumptions that assets are the proceeds of drug trafficking, and the person who holds them has to prove that they are not. That is not the question here. The debate is not about the seizure of assets.

A drug courier, who does not necessarily stand to make a large amount of money from trafficking, may face a very heavy fine that is not related in any way to his money or to profits that he may have made. I am not in any way trying to defend drugs trafficking; nor am I debating the length of prison sentences. I am certainly not saying that anyone should be able to keep the illicit proceeds of drug trafficking or that couriers do not matter—that it is only the large dealers who matter—because many hon. Members, especially those who represent London constituencies, are aware of the problems caused on their streets and council estates by small-time dealers.

My argument is that the penalty should fit the crime, people should not be doubly punished for the same offence and all prisoners should be treated alike. British prisoners should not get different—or worse—treatment from that afforded to French nationals. I intend to refer mainly to the latter issue, because it is relevant to the responsibilities of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

I shall mention certain individuals, but I do not intend to use the debate to plead their case. I do not intend, either, to name those individuals. It would be wrong to do so, for it was impossible in the short time available before this debate to obtain their permission to name them. By pointing to individual cases, however, I hope to show what is happening. Some of these cases will be known to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and consular officials.

Those cases will also be known to Prisoners Abroad, an organisation which is supported by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office; prisoners in foreign prisons are referred to it. The main concern of Prisoners Abroad is to provide support for people who are in foreign prisons and for their families. It is not the organisation's concern to plead the innocence of those people. Its role is to ensure that prisoners are treated fairly and to give them advice and, where necessary, access to legal representation. In particular, its role is to help families in this country. The concerns that I shall mention are shared by Prisoners Abroad, and they have been raised on previous occasions with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

I intend to concentrate on four main areas of concern. The first relates to people's ability to pay and their ability to prove insolvency. Secondly, the question of parole may arise. Thirdly, there is the question of transfer to British prisons. Fourthly, in one or two cases, there is the question of the retrospective nature of what appears to have happened.

As for insolvency, it is generally accepted, I believe, that we tend not to imprison people for debt. We certainly imprison people who refuse to pay, but we try to avoid imprisoning people for debt. The French authorities appear to accept the principle that prisoners who are serving prison sentences in lieu of customs fines can be released on proof of insolvency. The fine is waived and they are released.

The specific problem that affects British prisoners is proof of insolvency. The documents that are normally required by the French authorities include, for example, letters from tax offices or from the mayor. To some degree, that reflects the French local government system. When British prisoners attempt to provide that documentation, they often have difficulty in obtaining the relevant documents. Tax offices do not find it easy to produce letters that meet the requirements of the French authorities. In a number of cases, British mayors have refused to have anything to do with requests to provide letters. Under our local government system, mayors are in a different position from that of mayors in France. British mayors do not want to be involved in these matters.

Even when documents are obtained, there can still be difficulties. I want to refer to a few cases. The first concerns a British woman who has served seven years in prison in France for a drugs offence. She is now faced with a customs fine. She has no money with which to pay that fine. Her only relative in this country is an elderly father who is on a state pension. She has been in prison, in lieu of the fine, since September of last year. She has assembled the documentation to prove insolvency, a task which is not easy to accomplish from inside prison.

The case of that woman—that she should be regarded as insolvent—has been heard twice. However, French customs have now changed tack. They now argue that a person who is in prison for a drugs offence is prohibited from applying for a declaration of insolvency. She has now applied to the French supreme court, but has been told that it is likely to be over a year before her case is heard. She will, therefore, have to spend another year in prison before her case is heard. When a friend offered some money, customs said, "It isn't possible to have it both ways. If you apply for insolvency, we will not take any account of that offer of money until your case has been heard in the supreme court." That person is stuck in prison, completely unable to pay her fine, and with no prospect of being released within the year.

My second example is of a man who has served four years. He assembled the documentation to prove insolvency, went to court, and won his case last November —but, because that decision was appealed against, he remains in prison waiting for the appeal to be heard. I could quote many similar cases.

One obvious concern is whether the documentation required of British prisoners is appropriate. Another is the assistance that the Foreign and Commonwealth Office can give in helping to obtain that documentation, and in discussing with the French authorities whether it is appropriate anyway, and possible alternatives.

It seems that British prisoners are prevented from following a procedure in the French penal code. The first case that I cited is a good example, and it may be challenged at European Commission level. That issue also is one which the Foreign and Commonwealth Office should consider.

French prisoners in similar situations are often able to obtain parole. Agreement is reached that they will pay a proportion of the fine, be released, and then settle the rest of the fine over a period of time—with penalties if they do not adhere to the arrangement. I am aware of only one case in which such an arrangement has been agreed in respect of a British prisoner. In general, such agreements are refused—and British subjects remain in prison and unable to secure parole, when it is granted to French nationals.

A convention exists for the transfer of sentenced prisoners from a foreign country to their own country. That is often in their interests and in the interests of their families, with whom they are then able to maintain proper links. Serious difficulties arise with France. The Foreign Office knows of only one such transfer from a French prison since 1985—and I do not believe that it related to a case that involved a customs fine. Anyone with outstanding fines is not usually allowed to transfer—the convention makes some reference to that. It could be argued that the convention prevents such transfers.

I know of a case of a British national with an outstanding fine who was allowed to transfer from a prison in the United States after signing a promisory note that the fine would be paid in due course. The British Government have a role to play in actively pursuing with the French arrangements such as those available in the United States, which allow prisoners to transfer to this country. They do not in any way let prisoners off their sentences, but permit them to be in prison nearer their families and relatives.

My final point is whether recognised canons of justice are being followed. I believe that the Foreign and Commonwealth Office argues that it cannot interfere if a trial was conducted in accordance with the normal canons of justice.

Last year, Prisoners Abroad wrote to Lord Donaldson about customs fines. It suggested that European law forbids the imposition of a customs fine for the trafficking of illegal drugs and that France has already been censured twice by the European Court of Justice for breaking that law. The first question is whether customs fines are legal, and whether what is happening is a back-door attempt to levy duty, in the way that a levy is imposed on legal goods. Clearly, narcotics are not legal and one would not expect duties to be levied on illegal goods.

There is also the issue of the restrospective nature of some sentences. I raised with the Minister in May the case of a British prisoner who had been sentenced to 10 years. At the time that he was sentenced, he had been told that there would be a customs fine and, in lieu of payment of the fine, a sentence of four months' imprisonment. During the period of his sentence, French law changed and the period in lieu of customs fines was increased from four months to two years.

The Foreign Office appears to believe that that did not constitute a retroactive step. In a letter dated 20 May, the Minister said:

"As our consular staff have already explained . . . the change in the law . . . was not retroactive and did not apply to those persons whose sentences were final. As" his
"case was still under appeal his sentence was not final and the new law therefore applied."

I draw the Minister's attention to article 7 of the European convention on human rights, which says:

"Nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than the one that was applicable at the time the criminal offence was committed"— not whether the sentence had been passed or whether the case was still being considered but
"at the time the criminal offence was committed."
I argue that, in this case, there was a breach of article 7 of the European convention and that a retroactive penalty was imposed. In addition, the person concerned was not informed of the change in time to be able to pursue an appeal.

I am now aware of another case concerning not a British prisoner but a Brazilian who is in prison in France. His case is now going to the European Court of Human Rights, which will consider the retroactive nature of the change.

In essence, the argument that I should like the Minister to address is that customs fines have an impact on British nationals; that British nationals are treated differently from French nationals; and that there are questions about whether the system is even legal—certainly questions about whether the retroactive nature of the sentence is a breach of the European convention on human rights.

Mr. Harry Cohen (Leyton): My intervention will be brief. I congratulate my hon. Friend on raising this important issue. I draw his attention to the case of my constituent, Mr. Humphries of Onra road, who has been in a French prison since 14 October. I have received letters from the Foreign Office saying that the case involves a very protracted investigation, which it supports. In the meantime, my constituent can get no urgent legal representation. His wife is, of course, extremely distressed and is convinced that her husband is innocent. She wants justice to be done, but she can get no support from the Foreign Office. Is that common in the cases to which my hon. Friend is referring?

Mr. Gerrard: Delay is certainly a common element to many cases. I mentioned the British woman who may end up finishing her sentence, or getting close to it, before the case is decided. I ask the Foreign Office to take a more active role to confront the problems in the cases that I have mentioned and that to which hon. Friend the Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) has drawn attention. The

[Mr. Gerrard]

Government should be prepared to discuss the general issues with the French Government, such as the questions of transfer, parole and documentation, and should give as much help as possible to the individual involved, through consular officials.

3.5 pm

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. Douglas Hogg): I know that some hon. Members would like to leave the House at 3.10 pm to catch a train and I shall do my best to facilitate that. It means that I shall have some difficulty in responding to all the points, and my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State will be writing to the hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Gerrard) on matters not covered by me.

I wish to make two preliminary points. First, as the House may know, three years ago, I was a Minister in the Home Office where I had responsibility for the conduct and co-ordination of policy on drugs. I have also been a barrister for some 25 years. In both capacities, I have developed a very unsympathetic approach to those who are convicted of drug offences. That is especially true where the conviction involves trafficking in hard drugs.

Secondly, as a general proposition, the criminal law in France is a matter for the French Parliament, not for us. There are only a very few circumstances in which I would be ready to interfere, and I shall give some examples. First, in circumstances where there is a reason to suppose that the conviction may be unfair or that a sentence is disproportionate, the Government might want to intervene.

Secondly, there may be cases where there are special reasons—for example, humanitarian reasons—in which it would be right to ask the French authorities to take a lenient and compassionate view. That said, however, the general proposition must be that where people infringe the law of a democratic and civilised country with which we have friendly relations, and are punished in accordance with the law of that country, they have no one to blame but themselves, and they must not expect us to bail them out. Indeed, it is for them and their legal advisers to determine the courses of action that are appropriate for them.

We are, of course, aware of the problems to which the hon. Gentleman referred, such as the requirement in certain circumstances to serve civil imprisonment in lieu of payment of customs fines in respect of various offences. That proposition applies to French prisoners as it does to British prisoners. The fines are based on the street value of the drugs involved and can attract civil imprisonment of periods from five days up to a maximum of two years if they are not paid. In our experience, anyone convicted of a drugs trafficking or smuggling offence receives a fine as part of his sentence, whatever his nationality.

Prisoner transfer can be arranged under international agreement between the United Kingdom and other signatory countries. The Council of Europe convention on the transfer of sentenced persons was ratified by the United Kingdom in April 1985 and by France in February 1985. The intention is that, if certain conditions are met, prisoners can apply to serve the remainder of their sentences in their own countries, close to their families and in a familiar environment.

There are two British prisoners in France whose applications for transfer to prisons in the United Kingdom are outstanding. Both were convicted for drug-related offences invólving substantial quantities. Both have settled their outstanding customs fines, including the negotiation of a substantial reduction in at least one of the cases. Their transfer applications are being considered by the French authorities. Under the terms of the convention, the sentencing or the receiving state can withhold agreement to transfers and need not give the reason why.

When prisoners cannot get a hearing, our consular authorities in Paris will, of course, take the matter up with the Ministry of Justice. That is appropriate. Prisoners Abroad will help with the documentation. Towards the end of a prisoner's criminal sentence, it is, in practice, usually possible for considerable reduction in the fine to be negotiated with the customs authorities. If a prisoner can prove insolvency, it is sometimes possible for civil imprisonment to be waived entirely. However, it is for the prisoner in question to prove the insolvency, which he or she can do by taking appropriate legal advice.

The hon. Gentleman raised a range of other issues. I have dealt with the generality of the matter. People should respect the domestic laws of the countries in which they are, especially if those countries are democratic and friendly. They must not come to us if they are convicted of substantial offences and expect us to bail them out, because we will not.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Sunday Trading

Dame Angela Rumbold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the compatibility of the tribunal of Sunday trading legislation policy proposed by the Keep Sunday Special campaign and Retailers for Shop Act Reform with the Government's policy on reducing bureaucracy and burdens on business; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We shall publish in the next few weeks a draft Sunday trading Bill, together with a covering text explaining the options for reform. Hon. Members will no doubt weigh the effect of each of the options on businesses before choosing from among them.

Greyhound Racing

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much of the quarter per cent. betting duty reduction announced in the Budget in 1992 has been received by the British Greyhound Racing Trust Fund for the 1992-93 financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that the British Greyhound Racing Trust fund has, to date, received voluntary payments from the betting industry totalling £1,058,504 for the financial year 1992-93.

Terrorists

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of IRA terrorist bombings in Great Britain in each year since 1985; and what is his estimate for 1993 up to 31 May.

Mr. Howard: The information is not available.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of (a) men and (b) women at present serving prison sentences in England and Wales for terrorist offences.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated June 1993.

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of (a) men and (b) women at present serving prison sentences in England and Wales for terrorist offences.

Readily available information on the number of prisoners serving sentences in England and Wales whose offences were related to terrorism is limited to those classified as Category A.

There were 37 such men and 2 such women on 14 June 1993.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of killings by IRA terrorists in Great Britain in each year since 1985.

Mr. Howard: Since 1 January 1985, 26 people have been killed in Great Britain as a result of terrorist activity attributed to the Provisional IRA. The numbers of people killed in each year are as follows:

Number of people killed by the Provisional IRA

| Year | Number |
|---|---|
| 1985 | 0 |
| 1986 | 0 |
| 1987 | 0 |
| 1988 | 1 |
| 1989 | 11 |
| 1990 | 3 |
| 1991 | 3 |
| 1992 | 5 |
| 1993[1] | 3 |

[1] To date.

Appeals

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had of possible reforms to the appeal system.

Mr. Maclean: Various aspects of the appeal system fall within the remit of the Royal Commission on criminal justice, to which my predecessor gave evidence. We shall consider whether any changes may be needed in the light of the commission's report.

Tobacco Sales (Children)

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there were in the last year for which figures are available for selling tobacco products to under-age children.

Mr. Maclean: In 1991, in England and Wales there were 101 prosecutions for the offence of selling tobacco to juveniles.

1992 data will not be available until the autumn.

Police Batons

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will agree to institute an extended pilot project on the use of the expandable side-handled baton.

Mr. Charles Wardle: On 16 June, my right hon. and learned Friend agreed to a scientific evaluation of the expandable side-handled baton. Decisions about trialling this piece of equipment will be taken following the evaluation.

Crown Court Cases

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was (a) the number and (b) the proportion of triable-either-way cases committed to the Crown court in 1979, 1983 and in each year from 1987 to 1992.

Mr. Maclean: The numbers and proportions of persons aged 17 and over committed to the Crown court for triable-either-way offences for 1979 and 1983 and 1987-1991 are given below. Data for 1992 are unavailable until the autumn.

Persons aged 17 and over committed for trial at the Crown court for triable-either-way offences in England and Wales

|---|---|---|
| | Number (thousands) | Percentage |
| 1979 | 55·3 | 15 |
| 1983 | 79·6 | 18 |
| 1987 | 93·5 | 23 |
| 1988 | 93·1 | 22 |
| 1989 | 80·4 | 21 |
| 1990 | 80·4 | 20 |
| 1991 | 81·3 | 19 |

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Citizens Charter

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give details of the initiatives taken under the citizens charter programme to develop user consultation, representation and participation in public services.

Mr. Waldegrave: The citizens charter calls on all public services to consult their customers on a regular and systematic basis. Survey programmes are being carried out across the public sector, and many organisations recognise and consult groups who represent their customers. There are numerous initiatives nationally and locally. These include:

Charter Mark Scheme: organisations that apply must demonstrate that they consult customers on a regular and systematic basis and take their views into account when service standards are set or revised. Thirty-six awards were made in 1992.

Inland Revenue: has conducted a major survey of taxpayers to find out views on their service and are also surveying employers. Inland Revenue is considering how to improve services in response to these results.

Customs and Excise: work is in hand on two national surveys of travellers and VAT traders. Results of a qualitative survey of travellers carried out last year were used when redrafting the travellers charter.

London Underground: customers are surveyed on a four-weekly basis on over 20 performances indicators, including the five key targets set out in the customer charter.

Police: the results of a survey of public satisfaction with police services were published in December 1992. A number of police services also use local customer satisfaction surveys or questionnaires.

National Health Service: the patients charter encourages all health authorities to seek the views of local people on local services in a variety of ways. In Scotland, an independent survey of NHS users was undertaken to measure progress towards the achievement of charter commitments and identity problems and priorities for further action. In Wales, health authorities regularly carry out consumer research through patient satisfaction surveys, focus groups and local consultations.

Education: all school governing bodies are required to have elected parental governors. Since 1986, school governors are required to produce an annual report for parents and hold annual parents' meetings where parents can pass resolutions concerning the school. The parents charter has extended these rights to require schools to provide parents with annual reports on children, including exam and test results.

Benefits Agency: carries out an annual independent customer survey to ask customers what they think of services, and publishes the results; holds regular meetings with customer representative groups; and has received nearly 600 written submissions on its discussion paper "One Stop" about service delivery.

Employment Service: conducts an independent national customer satisfaction survey, and has piloted local surveys.

Under the Council Tenants Charter, tenants have the following rights to: be consulted on changes to the management of their homes; annual information on how the council has managed its housing stock; attend meetings of the housing committee and to see the records of its meetings; transfer to a new landlord, and increased opportunities to get involved in the management of estates, for example, through tenant management co-operatives. The Leasehold Reform, Housing and Urban Development Bill includes a right to manage for council tenants.

United Kingdom Passport Agency: surveys customers by post and in person to find out their views and satisfaction levels. A consultative panel of users is planned for the future.

Land Registry: users' customer views obtained from a programme of: meetings with user groups, surveys of regular customers, open days, visits and exhibitions to review targets to reflect customers' needs and wishes.

Market Testing

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list all the market tests that have taken place in his Department since November 1992 and indicate, in each case, whether the result was the maintenance of in-house provision, or whether the service was contracted out.

Mr. Waldegrave: The market tests completed since November 1992 by the Office of Public Service and Science, including its agencies, HMSO and the Central Office of Information and the outcome of these tests are as follows:

| Activity tested (and area) | Outcome |
|---|---|
| Bristol distribution centre (HMSO) | Retained in-house |
| Distribution of College 1993-94 prospectus (Civil Service College) | Contracted out |
| Elements of payroll development (Chessington computer centre) | Contracted out |
| Manchester forms centre (HMSO) | Retained in-house |
| Reprographic unit Basildon (HMSO) | Part contracted out, part retained in-house |
| Reprographic unit Manchester (HMSO) | Retained in-house |
| Security guarding (Recruitment and Assessment Services) | Retained in-house |
| Stationery store (COI) | Service abandoned |
| Telephonist service for Downing street (OPSS) | Contracted out |
| Typing services at publications centre (HMSO) | Contracted out |

ENVIRONMENT

Warren Spring Laboratory

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the impact on his budgets for research into air quality, marine pollution, and waste management of the recent announcements relating to Warren Spring Laboratory.

Mr. Gummer: The transitional costs of the merger of WSL with the Atomic Energy Authority to form the National Environment Technology Centre will not fall on my budgets in these areas of research. In the longer term, the Government believe that the merged organisation will be able to offer better value for money to all its customers.

Housing (Elderly People)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what procedures he has introduced to ensure that the housing needs of elderly people are fully met by local social services departments.

Mr. Baldry: Circular 10/92 "Housing and Community Care", issued jointly by my Department and the Department of Health on 24 September last year, advises social services and housing authorities of their roles under community care. Social service authorities have a statutory duty to assess an individual's needs for community care services and are advised to co-operate with housing authorities where appropriate, in making that assessment.

Air Pollution (Standing Conference)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to continue meetings of the investigation of the air pollution standing conference following the closure of Warren Spring Laboratory.

Mr. Yeo: I intend to continue meetings of the investigation of air pollution standing conference.

Benlate

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce measures to ban the pesticide Benlate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The Advisory Committee on Pesticides (ACP), the independent statutory committee which advises Ministers on the approval of pesticides, has examined data relating to benomyl—the active ingredient in the product Benlate—on two occasions in the past 15 months. On both occasions, the ACP advised that there was no need for concern over its continued use in the United Kingdom. A ban would, therefore, not be appropriate.

House Renovation Grant

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to make changes to the private house renovation grant system; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I have placed in the Library copies of a consultation paper published today discussing the performance and effectiveness of present private house renewal programmes, including the renovation grant system, and outlining a variety of options for change. These include both changes that might be made in the short term, by adjustments to secondary legislation, and those that could be introduced longer term, subject to primary legislation.

The Government are keen that there should be a full public dialogue on how policies in this area should develop and, accordingly, the consultation paper has been given wide distribution with three months for comment.

I am also publishing today a preliminary report from the 1991 English house condition survey providing information on the number of unfit dwellings in the English housing stock. Between 1986, the date of the last survey, and 1991 there has been a welcome decline in the number of unfit dwellings whether measured against the fitness standard in force in 1986 or against the new, higher standard introduced under the Local Government and Housing Act 1989. Under the old standard, 3·9 per cent. of dwellings—0·753 million—were unfit in 1991 compared with 4·8 per cent.—0·909 million—in 1986; under the new standard, 7·4 per cent. of dwellings—1·456 million—were unfit in 1991 compared with 8·8 per cent.—1·643 million —in 1986.

The report also reveals that most progress has been made in those sectors of the stock which have the highest proportions of unfit dwellings, namely pre-1991 housing and the private rented sector. It further shows that, under the new standard, over half of all unfit dwellings fail to meet only one requirement in the standard. Many of these may be remedied relatively easily.

We also plan to publish during the consultation period the first main report from the survey, which will give fuller information about the condition of the stock and household characteristics.

Building Research Establishment

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish key performance targets for the Building Research Establishment.

Mr. Baldry: The Building Research Establishment is working to the following provisional key targets for 1993-94 in its strategic plan:

- £96,000 net contribution to the Exchequer.
- Income to cover full economic costs of a trading basis.
- Non-Exchequer component to be 10·9 per cent. of total net research commissions.
- An improvement of 5 per cent. in the unit cost ratio of research output on the target for 1992-93.

The strategic plan is subject to further discussion with my Department. If, as a result, there are any changes to these targets, revised targets will be published.

Local Government Finance

Sir Rhodes Boyson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the total amount of revenue expenditure by local authorities in (a) England, (b) Greater London and (c) the south-east, excluding Greater London, for each year from 1982-83 to 1992-93, estimated.

Mr. Curry: The latest information is:

Local authority revenue expenditure[1]

£ million

| Year | England | [2]Greater London | South East (excluding Greater London) |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1982-83 | 19,737 | 4,111 | 3,541 |
| 1983-84 | 20,809 | 4,677 | 3,691 |
| 1984-85 | 21,312 | 5,000 | 3,768 |
| 1985-86 | 21,661 | 4,676 | 3,933 |
| 1986-87 | 23,760 | 5,128 | 4,201 |
| 1987-88 | 25,686 | 5,408 | 4,582 |
| 1988-89 | 27,667 | 5,553 | 5,162 |
| 1989-90 | 29,404 | 5,969 | 5,395 |
| 1990-91 | 32,493 | 6,371 | 6,041 |
| [3]1991-92 | 36,416 | 6,956 | 6,999 |
| [3]1992-93 | 38,945 | 7,392 | 7,628 |

[1]Total expenditure figures are given for 1982-83 to 1989-90. Net revenue expenditure figures are given for 1990-91 to 1992-93. Although both are net of spending met by specific and supplementary grants, direct comparisons cannot be made as figures derive from two different financial systems.
[2]Includes Metropolitan police, which covers small areas outside Greater London.
[3]Revised estimates.

Sir Rhodes Boyson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the total amount of (a) net and (b) gross capital expenditure by local authorities in (i) England, (ii) Greater London and (iii) the south-east, excluding Greater London, for each year from 1982-83 to 1992-93, estimated.

Mr. Curry: The available information is as follows:

Capital expenditure by local authorities in England

£ million

| Year | Net expenditure | | | Gross expenditure | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Total England | Greater London | South East (excluding GL) | Total England | Greater London | South East (excluding GL) |
| 1986-87 | 3,033 | 522 | 285 | 5,846 | 1,362 | 1,147 |
| 1987-88 | 2,488 | 470 | 120 | 6,224 | 1,433 | 1,265 |
| 1988-89 | 1,964 | 145 | 106 | 7,206 | 1,592 | 1,648 |
| 1989-90 | 4,837 | 1,215 | 910 | 9,822 | 2,593 | 2,103 |
| 1990-91 | 3,755 | 695 | 691 | 6,924 | 1,473 | 1,542 |
| 1991-92 | 4,316 | 776 | 882 | 6,571 | 1,306 | 1,401 |
| 1992-93[1] | 4,977 | 665 | 1,030 | 6,921 | 1,267 | 1,449 |

[1] Local authority forecast.
Source: Local authority capital outturn and capital payments returns.
(a) Outturn (provisional).
(b) Estimate.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate has been made of the amount of transitional relief each authority will pay in 1993-94; and if he will express this figure as (a) a percentage of total provision for transitional relief and (b) an amount per council tax payer.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 18 June 1993]: I am arranging for the available information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Market Testing

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the market tests that have taken place in his Department since November 1992 and indicate, in each case, whether the result was the maintenance of in-house provision, or whether the service was contracted out.

Mr. Baldry: Only one of the projects in the Department's market-testing programme which involves exposing in-house functions to competition has yet reached the stage where a contract or service level agreement has been awarded. The market testing of a research project commissioned by the Department from the Building Research Establishment has resulted in the award of a contract to an outside bidder.

New Age Travellers

Mr. Aspinwall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total estimated cost of establishing a site of 15 pitches for new age travellers at Gipsy lane, Burnett, Avon.

Mr. Baldry: The cost of providing an authorised site for gipsies, as defined in section 16 of the Caravan Sites Act 1968, has been estimated by Avon county council as £795,500.

Liverpool Housing Action Trust

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what factors were taken into account in determining which tenders were acceptable for shortlisting for the housing management contracts for the Liverpool HAT; what (a) guidelines and (b) procedures were used for evaluating the tenders; and if he will publish them;

(2) what information will be given to those organisations or individuals who submitted tenders for management contracts for Liverpool HAT which were rejected as to why they were not acceptable;

(3) if he will list those organisations or individuals which have been shortlisted for the management contracts for Liverpool HAT, indicating which are black-based associations.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 18 June 1993]: Responsibility for awarding the contracts rests with the Liverpool housing action trust. The HAT board is evaluating tenders received in accordance with standard public procurement procedures and against the criteria in the information pack sent to prospective tenderers and in the tender document. I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Library.

Any future discussion between the HAT and tenderers on tenders not selected for shortlisting is a matter for the HAT board.

I shall write to the hon. Member with the names of those shortlisted organisations which agree to the release of their names. Information was not sought in the tender process on the ethnic backgrounds of tenderers.

EDUCATION

Access Funds, Liverpool University

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received from Liverpool university about access funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: One, from the assistant registrar of Liverpool university. I announced on 14 June that a total of £23·8 million will be available for access funds in England for the 1993-94 academic year. This represents an increase of over £2 million—nearly 10 per cent.—over 1992-93. We believe that if properly targeted to genuinely needy students, this should be sufficient for the purpose of supplementing an already generous student support package of grants and loans.

Grant-maintained Schools

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many (a) county primary schools and (b) voluntary-aided primary schools have applied for and been granted grant-maintained status; and what percentage these are of all schools in these categories.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is given in the table.

| | Primary schools operating/approved for self-governing governing status | As a percentage of all schools in the category |
|---|---|---|
| TOTAL | 139 | 0·7 |
| of which | | |
| county or former county | 96 | 0·8 |
| voluntary or former voluntary | 43 | 0·7 |
| of which | | |
| VA[1] or former VA and SA[2] or former SA | 23 | 0·6 |
| VC[3] or former VC | 20 | 0·7 |

[1] Voluntary aided.
[2] Special agreement.
[3] Voluntary controlled.

School Governors

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will bring forward proposals to clarify the legal liabilities of individual governors of (a) local education authority maintained schools, (b) voluntary-aided schools and (c) grant-maintained schools; and what plans he has to underwrite the legal liabilities of school governors.

Mr. Forth: The Education Bill currently before Parliament provides for the incorporation of governing bodies of LEA-maintained schools. This will ensure that governors do not incur any personal liability for decisions taken in good faith. Subject to Royal Assent, the Department will be issuing guidance on incorporation later this year. A separate fact sheet on legal liabilities is available on request to governing bodies of self-governing —grant-maintained—schools.

It is for local education authorities and governing bodies to cover legal liabilities with their own insurers.

Assisted Places

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the lowest, highest and average sum of money paid for an assisted place in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Forth: In 1991-92, the lowest fee charged by a school participating in the scheme was £2,025. However, assisted places are subject to a means-tested contribution from parents. Hence the lowest cost to the Exchequer is nil where the parental contribution exceeds the fees charged. The highest cost to the Exchequer would be a pupil at the school charging the highest fee—£8,595—accepted under the scheme, who for reasons of low parental means was entitled to full fee remission. The average cost to the Exchequer for an assisted place was £3,100. These figures relate to England only.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many children received assisted places at schools in 1990, 1991, 1992 and the current year to date.

Mr. Forth: There were 26,740 children on assisted places in the academic year 1990-91, 27,641 in academic year 1991-92 and an estimated 28,670 assisted pupils in the current academic year 1992-93. These figures relate to pupils in England only.

First-choice Schools

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of parents secured the school of their first choice for their children in (a) 1979 and (b) the last year for which figures are available (i) nationally and (ii) for each local education authority, and for (1) primary and (2) secondary schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not collected centrally.

National Curriculum

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he intends to extend the national curriculum and tests to the private education sector.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has no plans to extend the national curriculum and the associated testing and assessment arrangements to schools in the independent sector. It is for independent schools themselves to decide whether to implement the national curriculum. Some have already decided to do so. As the arrangements become better established, I expect many more to follow.

Religious and Physical Education

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the principal religions in Great Britain for the purposes of section 8(3) of the Education Reform Act 1988.

Mr. Robin Squire: It is not for my right hon. Friend, but for each local agreed syllabus conference, to determine the religions to be included in its syllabus for religious education in the light of the requirements of the law.

Youth Service

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proposals he has to provide local authorities with appropriate guidelines on providing a youth service; and if he will make a statement on the policy and the priority to be attached to a youth service by local authorities.

Mr. Boswell: The Department's circular 1/93 of 5 January 1993, "The Further and Higher Education Act 1992", made it clear that local education authorities have a duty to secure the provision of adequate facilities for further education, including the youth service. The duty is placed on LEAs, and it is primarily for them to decide on their policies and the priority to be given to their local youth services in the light of local needs and circumstances.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the expenditure on the youth service for (a) 1990-91, (b) 1991-92 and (c) 1992-93; and what is his forecast for expenditure in 1993-94.

Mr. Boswell: Expenditure by LEAs in England on the youth service in 1990-91 was £241·7 million (cash). For 1991-92, the provisional total is £248·8 million (cash). This total includes provisional figures for six LEAs and excludes one outstanding LEA return. Outturn figures are not yet available for 1992-93, and forecasts are not made for future years' expenditure on the youth service.

Disabled Students

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many students in each of the universities and institutions of higher education in England and Wales are registered disabled; and what proportion they represent of the student population in (a) Wales, (b) England and (c) Wales and England combined.

Mr. Boswell: Disability is not currently recorded on the statistical records of higher education students.

PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Asil Nadir

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answers to the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith) on 8 June, Official Report, column 138, when and where the Minister of State, Northern Ireland Office, the hon. Member for East Hampshire (Mr. Mates), met Mr. Asil Nadir during the 10 days prior to Mr. Nadir travelling to northern Cyprus.

The Prime Minister: That is a matter for my hon. Friend.

Registration Campaigns

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister what the budgets are or were for the operation of the most recent registration campaigns for (a) the sale of British Telecom shares, (b) overseas voters and (c) electoral registration by United Kingdom residents.

The Prime Minister: Details of the costs of the BT3 share offer will be reported to Parliament in due course, following completion of the sale. These will include, and separately identify, the costs of marketing and the share information office. The sum of £672,000 was spent in the 1992-93 financial year in Great Britain on advertising to encourage people to register to vote. Advertising in support of electoral registration is not carried out in Northern Ireland. A publicity campaign to make British citizens living abroad aware of their new voting rights wasd carried out in 1990 only, at a cost of £705,000.

Teaching Company Scheme

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Prime Minister what proportion of the teaching company scheme budget is being transferred from the Department of Trade and Industry to the Office of the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 16 June 1993]: None.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Value Added Tax

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the total official revenue that will accrue to the Exchequer in a full year of the imposition of VAT at the rate of 5 per cent. on (a) domestic fuel and power and (b) categories one, three, six, seven, eight, 10, 11, 12 and 13 contained in annex H of directive 92/77/EEC.

Sir John Cope: Estimates of the effect on VAT revenue that would occur in a full year from a 5 per cent. rate are as follows:

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| (a) Domestic fuel and power—yield | 740 |
| (b) Annex H selected items—cost | −450 |

These estimates are for 1992-93 and, unlike those published in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report", make no allowance for behavioural change.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is his best estimate of the number of recipients of invalidity benefit who would have an increased tax bill if invalidity benefit was taxed as income; and what would be the average increase;

(2) what is his best estimate of the number of recipients of invalidity benefit who would pay tax whose only income was invalidity benefit if that benefit was taxed as income; and what the average tax bill would be for that group;

(3) what is his best estimate of the yield to the Treasury in a full year of taxing invalidity benefit as income.

Mr. Dorrell: Approximate estimates are that the yield at 1993-94 levels, from making invalidity benefit taxable would be about £500 million.

The estimated number of recipients who would have an income tax liability and the average increase in tax is shown in the table:

| | Number of taxpayers with invalidity benefit liable to tax | Average increase in tax with invalidity benefit liable to tax (£ a year) |
|---|---|---|
| All recipients of invalidity benefit | [1]900,000 | 550 |
| Invalidity benefit recipients with no other income | 200,000 | 100 |

[1] Of which some 250,000 already have an income tax liability.

Child Benefit

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his best estimate of the yield to the Treasury in a full year of treating child benefit as income for income tax purposes.

Mr. Dorrell: At 1993-94 levels the revenue yield would be about £600 million, assuming that the benefit was taxed as the mother's—or lone father's—income.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will estimate what the saving would be of taxing child benefit as part of the woman's income in 1993-94 and 1994-95;

(2) if he will estimate what the saving would be of taxing child benefit as part of the man's income in 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 17 June 1993]: The revenue yield at 1993-94 levels would be about £1·3 billion if child benefit was taxed as the father's—or lone mother's—income and about £0·6 billion if taxed as mother's—or lone father's—income.

Estimates for 1994-95 will depend on the levels of child benefit and on tax rates and allowances for that year.

Government Employees (Holidays)

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many privilege holidays in addition to bank holidays are enjoyed by employees in central Government.

Mr. Dorrell: Civil servants receive 2½ days' holidays, in addition to the eight public and bank holidays in the calendar year. These holidays are fixed by tradition and taken as follows: a half-day on Maundy Thursday afternoon, a day for the Queen's birthday and an additional day at Christmas.

Workplace Nurseries

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further representations he has received on tax relief for workplace nurseries.

Mr. Dorrell: We have received a number of representations on this subject, as we have on many other tax reliefs. They have ranged from suggestions to give tax relief for all child care to representations that there should be no change.

Privatisation Revenue

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he estimates privatisation revenue will be in 1993-94.

Mr. Dorrell: In his autumn statement of 12 November 1992, the former Chancellor, my right hon. Friend the Member for Kingston-upon-Thames (Mr. Lamont), announced that the privatisation proceeds for 1993-94 are estimated to be £5·5 billion.

Income Tax

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the estimated full-year costs or savings of changing income tax by (a) raising the upper limit of the 20p band to £2,750, (b) raising the 25p rate by 1p, (c) introducing a 35p in the pound rate for taxable income from £23,700 to £28,700, (d) raising the 40p in the pound rate to 45p on taxable income over £35,000 and (e) introducing a 50p in the pound rate on taxable income over £45,000.

Mr. Dorrell: Latest estimates of the cost or savings of each measure compared with the regime announced in the March 1993 Budget are as follows:

Direct revenue yield ( + ) or cost ( − ) in full year at 1993-94 income levels

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| (a) Increasing width of the lower rate band to £2,750 | −240 |
| (b) Raising the basic rate of tax by 1 per cent. | 1,500 |
| (c) Charging 35 per cent. tax rate on taxable income between £23,700 and £28,700 | −330 |
| (d) Charging 45 per cent. tax rate on taxable income in excess of £35,000 | 1,000 |
| (e) Charging 50 per cent. tax rate on taxable income in excess of £45,000 | 1,500 |

The estimates do not allow for any behavioural effect that might result from such changes to the tax system and do not include capital gains tax.

Forward: Civil Service Catering

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for the future of Forward: Civil Service Catering.

Mr. Nelson: My right hon. Friend the former Chancellor told the House on 27 March 1991, Official Report, columns 410-11, that he had decided that the Civil Service Catering Organisation—as it was then known—should be reorganised with the aim of transferring it into the private sector.

Since the announcement, substantial changes have been made, including renaming the organisation as Forward: Civil Service Catering, and I believe it is now ready for privatisation. Financial advisers have been appointed to assist in this process. Parliamentary approval to this new service will be sought in a supplementary estimate for Her Majesty's Treasury vote—class XVII, vote 1. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure of up to £400,000 on preliminary expenses will be met by repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund.

Forward is profitable and has shown its ability to win business in a fully competitive situation. Privatisation will open the way for it to compete for business outside the public sector.

On privatisation, Forward staff would transfer on their existing terms and conditions in accordance with the Transfer of Undertakings (Employment Protections) Regulations 1981.

There will be full consultation with the trade unions involved.

Pensioners (Income Tax)

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the number of pensioners above income support level who do not pay income tax.

Mr. Dorrell: About 4·5 million at 1993-94 levels.

Sterling

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 16 June, Official Report, column 613, what estimates his Department has made of the effect of the depreciation of sterling against the ecu since September 1992 in terms of the level of sterling receipts; and if he will list those receipts, by European Community programme.

Sir John Cope: The level of sterling receipts which the United Kingdom will receive as a result of the depreciation of sterling against the ecu since September 1992 cannot be estimated with any precision. It depends on various uncertainties, including continuing exchange rate changes, the timing of receipts from the Community and the availability of projects providing value for money.

Lottery Duty

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the direct effect on revenue in the years 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96 of introduction of the clauses in chapter II of part I of the Finance (No. 2) Bill had they come into effect from 6 April.

Sir John Cope: The revenue yield depends on the turnover of the national lottery, which is difficult to estimate. Annual turnover in the region of £1·5 billion would provide a duty yield of £180 million. This would be broadly offset by reductions in the yield of other taxes including those on other forms of gambling.

Gross Domestic Product

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the gross domestic product per capita for (a) Hong Kong and (b) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nelson: Figures for Hong Kong are published in the United Nations "Statistical Yearbook for Asia and the Pacific".

Figures for the United Kingdom are published in table 8 of "Economic Trends". Copies of both publications are available from the Library of the House.

Excise Duty

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the operation of the new rules governing the calculation of excise duty on beer.

Sir John Cope: The first indications from official and trade sources are that the new beer duty system, which was introduced on 1 June, is working well. Customs is continuing to liaise closely with the trade to ensure that the new arrangements are implemented as smoothly as possible. At a late stage, the Brewers Society has claimed that the new rate is not likely to prove fiscally neutral and Customs is studying its submissions. In the meanwhile, we have no reason to alter the estimate that the change involves a shortfall of duty to the Exchequer, for 1993-94 only, of about £200 million.

NORTHERN IRELAND

"Unfinished Business"

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what amount of funding was given by the Community Relations Council to the film "Unfinished Business".

Mr. Ancram: £6,000.

Library Services (Charges)

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what representations he has received in connection with the proposed introduction of charges for library services;

(2) what steps he will take to review article 45 from the Library Services (Northern Ireland) Order in relation to the charges for library services.

Mr. Ancram: Following publication, for consultation purposes, of the draft Education and Libraries (Northern Ireland) Order 1993, nine responses were received about article 45, together with a letter from the hon. Gentleman. For the most part, these representations sought to ensure that the basic library lending service would remain free of charge and I am happy to give that assurance.

I have no plans to review article 45 at present.

Cattle (Tuberculosis)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the current situation regarding additional or alternative cattle tuberculosis tests in Northern Ireland; and what steps he has taken to secure derogation powers under EC directives to use such tests.

Mr. Ancram: The Department of Agriculture is currently seeking to develop a blood test suitable to detect bovine tuberculosis. A pilot trial was carried out in 1990-91 with encouraging results and a larger scale field trial is now under way.

This trial will be completed later this year and until the results of the trial have been fully analysed it will not be possible to seek EC agreement to the use of a blood test to detect TB.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cattle were slaughtered in each of the last five years as reactors to tuberculosis testing; and if he will show how many of these were subsequently shown to actually have tuberculosis.

Mr. Ancram: The information is as follows:

| Year | Number of reactor cattle slaughtered | Number of cattle confirmed to have tuberculosis[1] |
|---|---|---|
| 1988 | 1,470 | 731 |
| 1989 | 2,493 | 1,337 |
| 1990 | 3,124 | 1,409 |
| 1991 | 4,108 | 1,586 |
| 1992 | 4,601 | 1,653 |

[1] Post-mortem findings and/or laboratory examination.

While all the slaughtered cattle were given a post-mortem examination, only visible lesions indicating an advanced stage of TB can be detected in this way. The presence of TB is more readily detected in live animals by the tuberculin test.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what significance is given to badgers as a factor in the epidemiology of cattle tuberculosis in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: Badgers are not believed to be a significant source of TB infection in cattle in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Samuel Devenney

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will now re-open inquiries into the death of Mr. Samuel Devenney, following information forwarded to him by the hon. Member for Falkirk, West.

Mr. Mates: This is a matter for the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary, to whom I have passed the correspondence received from the hon. Member.

Phosphorus Flares

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many phosphorus flares or incendiary devices have been washed up on the Northern Ireland coastline in the past year; and what action he has taken to identify the source of these phosphorus flares and to prevent more being deposited on Northern Ireland beaches.

Mr. Mates [holding answer 14 June 1993]: I am advised that up to 7 June 1993, a total of 205 phosphorus flares had been washed up on the Northern Ireland coastline. A contract has been let to a waste disposal company for the collection and disposal of any of these flares which are identified and notified to the Department of the Environment (Northern Ireland). It is believed that the majority of the flares are from private vessels and merchant shipping which have been washed or thrown overboard; in addition, a proportion may have been illegally dumped.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

World Service

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the number of listeners to the World Service expressed per kilowatt of transmitter power.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The latest information indicates that some 4,895 people listen to World Service direct broadcasts for every kilowatt of power transmitted. This figure does not include listeners to World Service programmes transmitted by other broadcasters under rebroadcasting arrangements.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many FCO staff working for the communications engineering department at transmitter sites in the United Kingdom and overseas have been transferred to the World Service; and what was the impact on the grant in aid of the transfer of CED transmitter sites and Ascension island services.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No FCO staff were transferred to the World Service, but four engineering and two industrial staff employed by the FCO were transferred to BBC Transmission, a separate body. The impact on the grant in aid of these and other transfers was cost neutral since, where necessary, funds to cover the costs of the additional responsibilities were transferred from the FCO to the World Service grant in aid. The total amount transferred was £6·43 million.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much of the World Service increase in budget since 1980 has been spent on upgrading and replacing old transmitters.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The amount spent by the World Service on such projects under the 1981-1991 audibility improvement programme was £96·4 million—at outturn costs. Between 1980-81 and 1991-92 the annual total World Service grants in aid rose from £55 million to £159·6 million.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on hours broadcast per employee in the World Service.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The latest information available indicates that the World Service achieved 15·3 hours of broadcasting output per employee in 1992-93.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on audience figures for World Service broadcasting in (a) China, (b) eastern Europe, (c) Africa and (d) the rest of the world.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The latest audience figures for World Service broadcasts for these areas are as follows:

(a) Eastern Europe, excluding countries of the former Soviet Union: 4·5 million
(b) Africa (South of Sahara): 26 million
(c) Rest of the world: 93·5 million, of which 50·5 million are in the sub-continent and 12 million in the middle east and north Africa.

No data are available for mainland China.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which language services it is presently planned to cease broadcasting from the World Service.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There are no plans at present for the World Service to discontinue any language services.

Turkey

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Kurdish information centre regarding the subject of human rights in Turkey; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office recently received a copy of a circular letter from the "Kurdistan Information Centre", a London-based organisation. The letter listed Kurdish Workers Party (PKK) conditions for an extension of its March ceasefire in Turkey.

We regret the PKK's decision to end its unilaterally declared ceasefire and the subsequent escalation of violence in Turkey's southeast. We frequently make clear to the Turkish Government the importance we attach to combating terrorism within a legal framework and with full respect for human rights.

East Timor

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Indonesian Government on the implementation of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights resolution calling for the United Nations special rapporteur on torture and extrajudicial executions and the United Nations working groups on arbitary detention and on enforced and involuntary disappearances to be allowed to conduct investigations in East Timor.

Mr. Goodlad: We have urged the Indonesians—most recently during the visit to Indonesia in April by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs—to co-operate with the United Nations in implementing the resolution.

Seal Culls (Russia)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence or information his Department has received on the number of baby seals culled in the Arklane region of Russia for (a) the current year to date, (b) 1992 and (c) 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 15 January, Official Report, column 822.

Gibraltar

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has to secure for Gibraltar a place on the European Committee of the Regions.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Final decisions on the allocation of seats on the European Committee of the Regions have yet to be taken. Nomination of representatives will be made in good time before the coming into force of the Maastricht treaty.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

EC Assistance, London

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he supports the proposal for European Community assistance for inner London.

Mr. Sainsbury: Negotiations on the Commission's proposed amendments to the current regulations of the European structural funds, including the eligibility criteria and method of selection of objective 2 areas, are unlikely to be agreed before the end of July. Only when revised regulations have been agreed by the Council of Ministers can consideration be given to the designation of particular areas for assistance in the subsequent period.

Fuel Cell Research

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total amount invested in fuel cell research by his Department for 1993-94; and what are the totals invested in such research (i) in the European Community, and (ii) for all Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development members.

Mr. Eggar: My Department's expected expenditure of about £0·8 million this year on advance fuel cell research provides a focus for United Kingdom activity and assists companies to participate in European programmes. Under the last EC Joule round, about £10 million of public funding was allocated to 17 projects on fuel cells recommended for support of which 10 involved at least one United Kingdom participant.

The total research expenditure—industry and government—on fuel cell research is estimated to be about £50 million a year for the EEC and about £100 million a year for all OECD countries.

National Welsh Omnibus Services Ltd.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 21 April, Official Report, column 118, if he will make a statement on the progress of consideration by the Insolvency Service of the national Welsh bus company.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The report on the conduct of the directors of National Welsh Omnibus Services Ltd. is still under consideration. The Secretary of State has until 2 January 1994 to bring proceedings should it be decided that it is in the public interest to do so.

Warren Spring Laboratory

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the economic and public expenditure effects, and effects on research expertise in environmental technology in Britain, of closing Warren Spring Laboratory.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's pursuant reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Blaby (Mr. Robathan) on 10 June 1993, Official Report, column 303. My right hon. Friend made a long-term assessment of all these matters and concluded that they favoured the creation of the National Environmental Technology Centre as announced on 10 June.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consideration he gave to PA consultancy group's position as a business rival to Warren Spring Laboratory at the time PA consultancy group was appointed to review the future of Warren Spring Laboratory.

Mr. McLoughlin: The PA consultancy group was selected after a process of competitive tendering and with the knowledge that it is a company with an international reputation which could be relied upon to act with complete integrity.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many staff, and what present Warren Spring Laboratory functions, he proposes to transfer to Harwell.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 15 June 1993]: My aims with regard to both the staff and the business activities of the Warren Spring Laboratory were given in my right hon. Friend's pursuant reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Blaby (Mr. Robathan) on 10 June 1993, Official Report, column 303. The precise details and numbers are still being decided.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what plans he has for the revenue received from Glaxo for the sale of the former site of Warren Spring Laboratory in Stevenage;

(2) if he will make a statement on (a) the sum paid by Glaxo for the Warren Spring Laboratory site in Stevenage and (b) if the revenue will be used to secure the future of the laboratory's expertise and staff.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's pursuant reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Blaby (Mr. Robathan), on 10 June 1993, Official Report, column 303.

Eastern and Central Europe

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 22 March, Official Report, column 485, (1) if he will list those institutions currently receiving funding or other assistance from his Department for work undertaken in eastern and central Europe; if he will specify the nature of the assistance involved; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the assistance programmes available to British institutions involved in work in eastern and central Europe;

(3) what assistance his Department is currently providing to the British engineering sector involved in work in eastern and central Europe; if he will specify the nature of the assistance involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department provides a comprehensive range of services to assist the very many United Kingdom companies and other bodies which are interested in the region, including support for outward missions—sometimes led ministerially—and participation in overseas trade fairs as well as the provision of general and specific information about the markets and the opportunities in them. Information about export and consultancy projects under bilateral, EC and multilateral-funded assistance programmes is also available and my Department encourages United Kingdom bodies to exploit such opportunities.

The major reorganisation of the DTI's export services which was recently announced by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade will enhance the service provided by the Department.

A detailed list of all DTI assistance for exporters is included in the latest British Overseas Trade Board annual report 1992-93. A copy of the report has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

A large number of British engineering companies are already active in central and eastern Europe and avail themselves of the services already mentioned.

Information on the number of individual British institutions which receive funding or assistance from the Department is not available, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Electricity

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his Department's latest estimate of total electricity generating capacity for the year 2000.

Mr. Eggar: The Department does not prepare estimates of future generating capacity. The National Grid Company is required by its licence to prepare each year a statement known as the seven-year statement. The most recent statement includes an assessment of electricity demand up to the year 2000 and several scenarios of generation capacity.

Softwood Imports

Mr. Gallie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of current United Kingdom imports of timber is of softwoods.

Mr. Needham: In 1992, 76·5 per cent. of United Kingdom imports of timber were softwoods.

Saudia Arabia

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the total value of United Kingdom exports to Saudi Arabia for each year from 1980, broken down into civil and defence-related exports.

Mr. Needham: Information on United Kingdom visible trade is published in "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics", a copy of which is available in the Library.

For reasons of commercial confidentiality, it has been the consistent policy of successive Governments not to disclose particulars of defence trade with other countries. It is therefore not possible to provide a breakdown into civil and defence-related exports.

Bilateral Trade Agreements

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what monitoring his Department is doing into the extent of bilateral trade agreements by individual EC member states with the United States of America; if he will make it his policy to enter into such agreements separately from the European Commission negotiating rounds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: There is an annual decision by the Council of the European Community listing previous bilateral agreements between individual member states and third countries which remain in operation to the extent that their provisions do not conflict with Community law. The European Commission is responsible for negotiating the Community's trade agreements—in consultation with the member states, which approve the outcome—since such matters fall within the Community's common commercial policy. The United Kingdom cannot deviate from Community law in this respect.

Beer Orders

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to publish his Department's response to the fourth report of the Agriculture Select Committee of the current Session on the "Effects of the Beer Orders on the Brewing Industry and Consumers", HC 402; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department is considering this report carefully and intends to respond to the Agriculture Select Committee within the usual two-month period, that is, by 20 July. It will be for the Committee to decide whether to make that response public.

Atomic Energy Authority

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the ability of the Atomic Energy Authority at Harwell to provide a full environmental intergrated research service covering physical, biological, chemical and engineering subjects.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 15 June 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's pursuant reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Blaby (Mr. Robathan) on 10 June 1993, Official Report, column 303. I expect the new National Environmental Technology Centre to provide such services.

Inntrepreneur Estates Ltd.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will arrange for the publication of an interim report of his Department's investigation of the pub leasing policies and practices of Inntrepreneur Estates Ltd. as soon as possible, and thereafter consider initiating a full and public inquiry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 14 June 1993]: My right hon. Friend, the President of the Board of Trade and I have received a number of representations about Inntrepreneur Estates Ltd. pub leasing arrangements. My Department has been looking into the specific points raised and I expect replies to be sent shortly.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 7 June, Official Report, columns 161-62, what investigations he has initiated into the Inntrepreneur scheme operated by Grand Metropolitan Enterprises within the brewery industry; upon what basis these investigations were begun; who is being consulted; to whom evidence can be submitted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 10 June 1993]: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade and I have received a number of representations about Inntrepreneur Estates Ltd. pub leasing arrangements. My Department has been looking into the specific points raised and I expect replies to be sent shortly.

Libyan Technicians

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action his Department is taking to ensure that United Kingdom companies do not breach the UN embargo on Libya by training Libyan technicians to maintain airframes, engines and avionics which have significant military as well as civil potential.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 17 June 1993]: The Libya (United Nations Sanctions) Order—"the order"—1992, which came into effect from 15 April, prohibits the provision of any technical advice, assistance or training related to the supply, delivery, manufacture, maintenance or use of any goods specified in part A of Schedule 1 to the order to any persons connected with Libya except under the authority of a licence granted by the Secretary of State.

Any applications to undertake training courses or seminars for Libyan nationals whether within the United Kingdom or elsewhere are considered on a case by case basis. It is not our practice to disclose details of licence applications.

Departmental Company Reports

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when his Department expects to publish their report on the Atlantic and B and C companies.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 18 June 1993]: Inspectors were appointed on 15 June 1990 under section 432 of the Companies Act 1985 to investigate and report on the affairs of Atlantic Computers plc and Atlantic Computer Systems, plc, both major companies in the British and Commonwealth group. The inspectors are in the final stages of their investigation but have not yet submitted their report; I will consider publication when it is received.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Western Sahara

37. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further plans there are to provide aid for the people of the Western Sahara.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have no plans to provide bilateral aid for the people of the Western Sahara, but continue to contribute finance and personnel to the United Nations mission responsible for organisation and conduct of the referendum which we hope will take place this year.

Vietnam

38. Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on aid to Vietnam.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have committed some £8 million in aid to Vietnam since our programme resumed in 1990. It is focused on reintegration of the returning migrants and support for economic reform. We are sending a mission to Vietnam next month to discuss an expansion of technical co-operation.

Bosnia

40. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what limitations have been placed on humanitarian aid to Bosnia following the Washington agreement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The joint action programme agreed in Washington on 22 May 1993 has placed no limitations on humanitarian aid to Bosnia.

Forestry

41. Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on the forestry implications of aid projects.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have received representations on the forestry aspects of the aid programme from Members of Parliament, agencies and individuals.

Environmentally Sustainable Projects

42. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are taken by his Department to ensure that its aid projects are environmentally sustainable.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: All Overseas Development Administration projects are subject to environmental assessment according to the guidelines and procedures described in the Overseas Development Administration's "Manual of Environmental Appraisal".

AIDS (Africa)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what additional resources he plans to make available to combat the spread of AIDS in Africa.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: To date, over £16 million has been spent in support of programmes in Africa to prevent the spread of HIV and AIDS. We have committed a further £2 million this year and we are ready to do more. Other initiatives are being considered.

Nigeria

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what United Kingdom assistance has been given to the construction of Abuja, Nigeria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No United Kingdom assistance has been given to the construction of Abuja.

Indonesia and Tanzania

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the amount of aid granted to (a) Indonesia and (b) Tanzania in each of the last 10 years; and what proportion was used to finance the purchase of British goods.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: United Kingdom gross bilateral aid to Tanzania and Indonesia from 1983 to the end of the financial year 1991-92 was as follows:

£'000

| | Tanzania | Indonesia |
|---|---|---|
| 1983 | 30,384 | 12,358 |
| 1984 | 33,033 | 28,292 |
| 1985 | 17,967 | 33,649 |
| 1986 | 12,715 | 8,898 |
| 1987 | 28,789 | 12,223 |
| 1987-88 | 33,617 | 14,660 |
| 1988-89 | 31,956 | 17,366 |
| 1989-90 | 20,060 | 21,616 |
| 1990-91 | 41,403 | 24,600 |
| 1991-92 | 32,454 | 34,425 |

The basis on which these figures are recorded was changed from calendar to financial years with effect from 1992; the previous four financial years have been included above for ease of comparison.

Statistics on the proportion used to finance the purchase of British goods and services are not available on a country basis.

Soviet Union (Contamination)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent initiatives have been taken by the overseas development administration to assist countries of the former Soviet Union in cleaning up environmental contamination.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The know-how fund has financed two projects in Ukraine; the first to study environmental clean up priorities in the Kiev region post Chernobyl; and the second to provide equipment and training to help measure radioactivity levels in food products in the Kiev region.

In May 1993, we financed a study visit to Britain by Russians involved in radioactive waste management. The know-how fund hopes to begin several further environmental projects in Russia in the coming months.

Sudan

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the United Kingdom's contribution to the international relief effort in south Sudan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Britain has committed almost £21 million in humanitarian assistance to southern Sudan since the international relief effort, Operation Lifeline Sudan was established in 1989. More than £2 million of this has been committed this year.

A senior ODA official is participating in an EC troika visit to the area from 18 to 23 June to assess the situation and consider how further help can best be provided.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Market Testing

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list all the market tests that have taken place in his Department since November 1992 and indicate, in each case, whether the result was the maintenance of in-house provision, or whether the service was contracted out.

Mr. Sproat: Since November 1992, my Department has contracted out a range of new central services, including mailroom services, minor maintenance, office cleaning, reprographics, security, central typing and secretarial cover. The Department has also contracted out the provision of computer equipment and new associated services.

Subject to a tendering exercise, the Historic Royal Palaces agency will contract out unskilled ground maintenance work at Hampton Court palace. The manning of vehicle entrances, ticket checking and security control room at the Tower of London has been contracted out and staff redeployed.

The other agency, the Royal Parks, is currently market testing building works services and estates management and an announcement on the outcome will be made shortly.

Non-terrestrial Broadcasting

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has received regarding the ownership regulations on non-terrestrial broadcasting.

Mr. Brooke: The subject has been raised at meetings with broadcasters and in letters this year from two hon. Members and from members of the public.

Television Licence Fee

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what are his plans for setting future increases in the television licence fee.

Mr. Brooke: In January 1991, following a study by Price Waterhouse, the Home Secretary announced a five-year television licence fee strategy: the licence fee increase for April 1991 would be set at retail prices index (RPI) minus 3 per cent., followed by increases at RPI for the next four years. In addition, the Government gave an undertaking to reassess the position before the increase due in April 1994.

Today I have appointed Touche Ross to assess the BBC's progress in achieving the efficiency and revenue gains identified by Price Waterhouse in 1990; to advise me on the scope for any further gains; and to advise whether RPI linkage is appropriate for the licence fee increases in the next three years until the renewal of the charter.

The longer-term future of the television licence fee will be considered as part of the review of the BBC's royal charter.

HEALTH

Birth Statistics

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of live births per year in each of the last five years; and what percentage of live births required special care in a neo-natal unit in each of those years.

Mr. Sackville: Live births in England 1988-92.

| Year | Live births |
|---|---|
| 1988 | 654,363 |
| 1989 | 649,357 |
| 1990 | 666,920 |
| 1991 | 660,806 |
| 1992 | 651,784 |

Approximately 6 to 10 per cent. of new-born babies require care exceeding normal routine care at some stage.

Consultants

Ms Primaraolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the numbers of (a) consultants in neonatology and (b) neo-natal intensive care beds in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: The available information is shown in the tables.

Consultant neonatologists are not identified separately in the Department's census of medical staff, but are included under paediatrics.

Consultants employed during the past 5 years England (whole-time equivalent) 30 September 1987 to 1991.

| Year | Paediatrics |
|---|---|
| 1987 | 571·5 |
| 1988 | 597·2 |
| 1989 | 678·8 |
| 1990 | 699·1 |
| 1991 | 723·0 |

Neo-natal cots in regionally designated intensive care wards and non-maternity wards.

| Year | Cots |
| 1987-88 | 3,567 |
| 1988-89 | 3,512 |
| 1989-90 | 3,451 |
| 1990-91 | 3,374 |
| 1991-92 | 3,424 |

Note:—Figures include cots used for various levels of care; from the most intensive level for seriously ill babies to special care—which is needed for babies who need attention exceeding normal routine care.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 18 March, Official Report, column 347, what is the mean age at which doctors achieve consultant status in England.

Dr. Mawhinney: The mean age of consultants appointed during the year ending 30 September 1991 in England was 39.

Intensive Care Cots

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are her Department's recommendations on the number of nurses needed per cot, and the number of neo-natal intensive care cots required nationally.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for local decision, taking account of professional guidelines and particular local circumstances.

Nurses

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the evidence for the statement in a Department of Health press release (H93/707) of 20 April that the turnover rate among nurses has dropped substantially.

Mr. Sackville: Better pay and better conditions have resulted in a more stable workforce, which in turn enhances quality of care. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's statement that there is recent encouraging evidence which shows that the turnover rate amongst nurses has dropped substantially, to less than 10 per cent. overall and to as low as 3 per cent. in some areas, was based on information exchanged during the normal course of meetings and discussions with regional health authorities.

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish details of the numbers of qualified, unqualified and learner nursing staff who joined the NHS in 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Sackville: The available information is shown in the tables.

Source: English National Board annual reports 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish details of the total number and whole-time equivalent number of health care assistants or health care support workers employed wholly or primarily in nursing roles by the NHS in 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish details of the numbers of qualified nursing or midwifery staff joining the NHS in 1990, 1991 and 1992 who (a) were newly qualifying student nurses with employed status, (b) were newly qualifying project 2000 students, (c) were registered nurses entering the NHS after a period of non-employment, (d) joined NHS units directly after being employed by another NHS unit and (e) joined NHS units directly after being employed in other nursing, such as general practitioner nursing, nursing homes, independent hospitals, etcetera.

Mr. Sackville: The available information is shown in the table.

Prescribed Items (Cost)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated percentage of prescribed items dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors which cost less than 20p.

Dr. Mawhinney: Approximately 5 per cent.

Dental Health

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of dentists by family health services authority and in total who have given notice of their intention to deregister adults and children in the last two years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information available centrally is the number of dentists, by family health services authority and in total, who have given notice to deregister patients since 3 July 1992. This is shown in the table. We are advised by family health services authorities that they are able to assist patients who seek their help in obtaining national health service dentistry. Since July 1992 total registrations have increased by 2·63 per cent. from 27,314,952 to 28,034,677 as at 30 April 1993.

Deregistration can occur for a number of reasons for example, patients moving away from the area, or dentists retiring and can be instigated by dentists or patients.

Dryburn Hospital

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the fulfilment of the statutory consultation period in respect of the scheme by Dryburn hospital to convert one of two paediatric wards into a day ward; how much money has so far been spent; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We understand that the North Durham district health authority is considering the future of these wards and will consult the community health council on any proposals for substantial variations to sevices, as required by the Community Health Council Regulations 1985.

Voluntary Organisations

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the awards given to voluntary organisations under the section 64 general scheme of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 during the financial year 1992-93.

Mr. Bowis: In 1992-93, grants totalling £18·3 million were awarded under the section 64 general scheme to 312 voluntary organisations in England. This represents a real terms increase of nearly 8 per cent. over 1991-92 and of 47·5 per cent. over 1978-79. Details are given in the table.

Residential Care

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will raise the capital or savings limit of £8,000 over which a person must pay the full cost of a place in residential care; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The capital limit is kept under review, but we have no current plans for change.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have had to sell their homes in order to pay for the costs of care in a residential or nursing home since the implementation of community care on 1 April; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Cancer and Diet

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement about the setting up of a Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy (COMA) committee on cancer and diet, giving details of the terms of reference and the name of the chairman and members.

Mr. Sackville: The Chief Medical Officer, Dr. Kenneth Calman, in his role as chairman of the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food (COMA), has asked Professor Alan Jackson, from the department of human nutrition at the university of Southampton, to chair a new working group. Its terms of reference are "To advise on the relationship between nutrition and the development of cancer and to make recommendations."

Members of the COMA working group on diet and cancer will include:

Dr. Sheila Bingham—Medical Research Council Dunn Clinical Nutrition Centre, Cambridge

Professor Nicholas Day—Professor of Public Health, University of Cambridge

Professor Anthony Dayan—Department of Toxicology, St. Bartholomew's Hospital Medical School, London

Dr. Michael Kemp—Medical Research Council, London (representing the secretariat of the UK Cancer Co-ordinating Committee)

Dr. Barrie Margetts—Department of Human Nutrition, University of Southampton

Professor James Parry—Department of Genetics, University of Swansea

Dr. Stanley Vennit—Institute of Cancer Research Sutton

Dr. Christine Williams—Nutritional Metabolism Group, School of Biological Sciences, University of Surrey

The first meeting of the working group will be in July and the chairman hopes that the report will be ready in 1996.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 22 February, Official Report, columns 483-84, what information on NHS trusts her Department intends to include in the summarised accounts; and when she expects them to be published.

Dr. Mawhinney: The summarised accounts of national health service trusts in England for 1991-92 comprise an income and expenditure account, a balance sheet and a cash flow statement together with notes to the accounts.

Responsibility for the audit and publication of the accounts lies with the National Audit Office.

GP Fund Holders

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 16 June, Official Report, column 620, if she will list those GP fund-holding units in the Yorkshire region which overspent their budgets in 1991-92; and what consequent action was taken by her Department.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally. It is for the Yorkshire regional health authority to take any action it considers appropriate.

Anophthalmia and Microphthalmia

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what research is being carried out into the existence of clusters of anophthalmic and microphthalmic suffering children in areas where Benomyl, Carbendazim or related products are being used; how many clusters of anophthalmic children have been located in the United Kingdom and in what areas; and how many children are affected;

(2) what surveys she has commissioned as to what proportion of cases of anophthalmia and microphthalmia are caused by environmental factors.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 16 June 1993]: On the basis of available data, the evidence does not suggest an increase in anophthalmia or confirm the existence of clusters; nor is there any evidence to link Benomyl or similar products to these conditions. I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the Minister for Health gave the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 20 May at column 259, for details of the research proposal. As designed, the research proposal will seek to examine cases of anophthalmia in Great Britain over the last five years so that an assessment can be made about any differences between urban and rural areas and the geographical distribution of cases. The proposed study is restricted to anophthalmia because of the extreme difficulty in diagnosing the severity of microphthalmia in early life. The researchers intend to keep in close contact with colleagues at Moorfields eye hospital, who see a large proportion of these cases and are carrying out their own study into anophthalmia and microphthalmia, including geographical factors. This is due to be completed in October. This information will provide a sampling frame for any further studies which may be necessary.

These studies will help us to find out more about these rare and tragic conditions, including any possible environmental factors.

Information obtained from the register of congenital malformations maintained by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys (OPCS), which maintains a record of congenital malformations registered in the first seven days of life, is contained in the table.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Prosecutions

28. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Attorney-General if he will initiate a review of the Crown Prosecution Service guidelines on whether or not to prosecute.

The Attorney-General: The guidelines are set out in the code for Crown prosecutors. They are regularly reviewed by the Director of Public Prosecutions in consultation with the Law Officers.

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the extent to which the CPS consults the police before it decides to discontinue a case.

The Solicitor-General: When considering discontinuance, Crown Prosecution Service lawyers are instructed to consult the police in all save the most exceptional circumstances.

Police (Paperwork)

29. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Attorney-General what steps he is taking to reduce the volume of paperwork imposed on the police by the Crown Prosecution Service.

The Solicitor-General: The Crown Prosecution Service is committed to requiring from the police only such paperwork as the interests of justice dictate.

Mr. Asil Nadir

30. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Attorney-General how many representations he has had from other hon. Members about the case of Mr. Asil Nadir.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 10 June, column 334.

Lenient Sentences

31. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement about the use of his power to appeal against lenient sentences.

The Attorney-General: Since 1989, when the power to refer unduly lenient sentences was introduced, 117 references have been made to the Court of Appeal, which has increased just over 82 per cent. of the sentences it has reviewed.

SCOTLAND

Market Testing

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all the market tests that have taken place in his Department since November 1992 and indicate, in each case, whether the result was the maintenance of in-house provision, or whether the service was contracted out.

Mr. Lang: No market tests involving in-house bids have been completed since November 1992. Work is continuing on the market tests in my 1992-93 programme and I expect to make an announcement on the results of the programme later in the year.

Drug Dealing (Evictions)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on how many persons since 1980 have been evicted from local authority or other public sector housing because of drug-dealing activities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Science and Technology

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will designate one of his Ministers to be responsible for his Department's contribution to the Government's science and technology "Forward Look".

Mr. Lang [holding answer 16 June 1993]: Paragraph 2·37 of the recent White Paper "Realising Our Potential —A Strategy for Science, Engineering and Technology" describes the preparation of the "Forward Look" by the Office of Science and Technology. Government Departments will participate through the existing, well-established machinery of the official and ministerial Cabinet committees on science and technology.

WALES

Tourism

6. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the income from tourism in Wales in 1992: and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: About £1·3 billion.

Drug Misuse

12. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his assessment of the success of the World Health Organisation/Council of Europe initiatives to reduce drug misuse in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The fight against drug misuse in Wales is carried out on many fronts including the European Drug Prevention Week last November, which I judge to have made a very worthwhile contribution to all our efforts.

Economy

13. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on prospects for the Welsh economy during 1993-94.

Mr. Redwood: The prospects are good: unemployment has started to fall, output is up and business confidence is high. The recovery is under way in Wales.

Hospital Treatment

14. Sir David Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) in-patients and (b) out-patients were treated in NHS hospitals in Wales in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what the figures were in 1979.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In 1991-92, the NHS in Wales treated 500,340 in-patients and 554,680 new out-patients compared to 349,700 and 428,740 respectively in 1979.

NHS Trusts

15. Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress is being made in the setting up of NHS trusts in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There are currently 14 operational NHS trusts in Wales. My right hon. Friend has today initiated formal public consultation on 10 applications which he has received seeking NHS trust status from 1 April 1994.

Hospital Beds

16. Dr. Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met representatives of area health authorities in Wales to discuss future provision of hospital beds.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I am in continual contact with representatives of all health authorities in Wales and the former Secretary of State for Wales, my right hon. Friend the Member for Wirral, West (Mr. Hunt), and I met all chairmen on 15 April.

Assisted Areas

17. Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent representations he has received on alterations to assisted areas in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: Since taking office, I have received several representations on the assisted areas review. We hope to make an announcement before the parliamentary recess, following the necessary clearance by the European Commission.

Youth Training

18. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to meet the chairman of Targed to discuss the need to improve youth training opportunities in north-west Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The former Secretary of State met the chairmen of the Welsh training and enterprise councils regularly to discuss a range of issues and my right hon. Friend intends to continue that practice.

Inward Investment

19. Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest figures for inward investment from overseas into Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Wales continues to attract high levels of inward investment. In the 12 months to 31 May 1993, the 195 projects recorded promise in excess of 13,500 jobs, and a capital investment of almost £900 million.

Welsh Development Agency

20. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to increase the financial resources of the Welsh Development Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Decisions on the agency's resources for future years will be decided in the course of the public expenditure survey in the usual way.

Beach Pollution

21. Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the awards by the Tidy Britain Group to Welsh resorts; and what steps are being taken to reduce sewage pollution on Welsh beaches which have failed to comply with mandatory EC coliform standards.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Over 90 per cent. of beaches nominated by Welsh local authorities were credited with national seaside awards by the Tidy Britain Group. This is a significant increase over the number of awards made last year and represents a substantial achievement requiring exacting standards of water quality and beach management.

The large majority of bathing waters in Wales identified under the European Commission bathing waters directive already meet the directive's mandatory standards. A major investment programme is in hand by Dwn Cymru, most of which will be in place by the end of 1995, to enable all designated bathing waters in Wales regularly to meet these standards.

Constitutional Change

22. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received about constitutional change.

Mr. Redwood: None.

Ponty Brenin Primary School

23. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit Ponty Brenin primary school in Gorseinon, Swansea to meet pupils and teachers to discuss his education policies.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to do so, but I shall bear the suggestion in mind in considering my next programme of school visits.

Labour Statistics

24. Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the Welsh unemployment figures.

Mr. Redwood: I welcome the four consecutive months of falling unemployment in Wales.

National Eisteddfod

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to visit the national eisteddfod in Builth Wells; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I have received an invitation to the eisteddfod and will decide whether to attend nearer the time.

Sex Discrimination

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many claims were made to tribunals in Wales under the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 for each year since 1979; how many separate employers were involved; how many of these claims were successful; and what was the average amount of compensation awarded in each year.

Mr. Redwood: The information requested is not available prior to 1991-92. That which is available is given in the table:

Claims made to tribunals under Sex Discrimination Act 1975 in Wales[1]

|---|---|---|
| Applications registered | 78 | 106 |
| Number of respondents[2] | 70 | 58 |
| Number of successful cases | 4 | 0 |
| Average award | £3,535 | — |

[1] Provisional.
[2] The number of firms or individuals named in a case. There may be more than one per claim.

Head Injuries

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many deaths have occurred in each year since 1979 in Wales where the underlying cause of death was recorded as being from a head injury.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The number of deaths to residents of Wales in each year since 1979 where the underlying cause of death was recorded as being from a head injury are shown in the following table:

| | Number |
|---|---|

Hepatitis C

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of hepatitis C have been recorded (a) amongst registered drug users and (b) in total in Wales in each year since 1989.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not available. Cases of hepatitis C are not separately notifiable.

Infant Mortality

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures showing (a) the infant mortality rate per 1,000 live births and (b) the perinatal mortality rate per 1,000 total births in (i) Wales and (ii) each district health authority in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is published for the years 1986 to 1991 in the Welsh Office publication "Health and Personal Social Services Statistics for Wales", No. 19 1992, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, together with the respective dates, those meetings of the EC Council of Ministers which were attended by ministers in his Department in the latest 12 months.

Mr. Redwood: Over the last year Welsh Office interests have been represented at EC meetings by ministerial colleagues from the lead department in the subject area concerned, and where relevant by senior officials from the Welsh Office to advise those Ministers. I will be visiting Commissioners in Brussels soon to pursue Welsh interests.

NHS Staff

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will give details of the number of unqualified NHS nursing staff joining the NHS in 1990,

1991 and 1992, who were (a) joining directly after completing full-time education, (b) aged under 21 years, (c) joining from other NHS units, (d) joining from other care sector employment, (e) joining from other employment, (f) joining from non-activity in the labour market or (g) joining from unemployment;

(2) if he will give details of the number of qualified nursing or midwifery staff joining the NHS in 1990, 1991 and 1992 who were (a) newly qualifing student nurses with employment status, (b) newly qualifying Project 2000 students, (c) registered nurses entering the NHS after a period of non-employment, (d) joining NHS units directly after being employed by another NHS unit or (e) joining NHS units directly after being employed in other nursing;

(3) how many qualified, unqualified and learner nursing staff joined the NHS in 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will give details of the distribution of average gross weekly earnings per person for each of the NHS clinical nursing and midwifery grades, listing the percentages of each grade earning under (a) £140, (b) £150, (c) £170, (d) £180, (e) £190, (f) £200, (g) £210, (h) £220, (i) £230, (j) £240, (k) £250, (l) £275, (m) £300 and (n) those earning £300 and over, in 1991 and 1992;

(2) what were the average gross weekly earnings and make-up of pay by type or allowance for each of the clinical grades for nursing and midwifery staff in 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not held centrally.

Mr Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many qualified NHS nurses and midwives, unqualified NHS nursing staff, nursing learners there were in 1989, 1990, 1991 and 1992 in (a) numbers and (b) as a percentage of the total NHS nursing and midwifery staff.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is in the following table:

Nursing and midwifery staff in post (whole-time equivalents (WTE)) as at 30 September

| Year | Qualified | | Unqualified | | Learners | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | WTE | Per cent. | WTE | Per cent. | WTE | Per cent. |
| 1989 | 17,850 | 63·7 | 7,069 | 25·2 | 3,118 | 11·1 |
| 1990 | 17,986 | 64·0 | 7,031 | 25·0 | 3,075 | 10·9 |
| 1991 | 18,010 | 64·4 | 7,019 | 25·1 | 2,934 | 10·5 |
| [1]1992 | 18,096 | 65·8 | 7,355 | 26·7 | 2,069 | 7·5 |

[1]Unqualified staff are staff paid as grade A, B or nursery nurses. The 1992 figures exclude about 64 whole-time equivalent nursing and midwifery staff employed by Pembrokeshire NHS trust for whom details of grade are not known centrally. In addition there are about 1,000 student nurses who have been reclassified as students following the introduction of Project 2000 nursing education reforms.

Junior Doctors

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of junior doctors working an average of more than 83 hours a week in Wales on 1 April.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No junior doctors were contracted to work more than 83 hours per week on average, on 1 April 1993.

River Pollution

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being taken to ensure that disused coal and metal mines do not leak dangerous chemicals into Welsh rivers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The National rivers Authority has been reviewing the extent of the problem of pollution from abandoned mines in England and Wales. The Government are, at the same time, considering the framework of legal responsibility for this pollution. Separately the authority's Welsh region is undertaking a survey, to which the Welsh Office is contributing, the objectives of which are to identify all ferruginous discharges emanating from or connected with abandoned coal mines in the region and to determine their impacts on the water quality, biological quality and fishery status of the receiving waters.

Disused Quarries

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being taken in Wales to encourage the owners of disused quarries to restore them to a natural state; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Advice on the reclamation of mineral workings is given in the joint Department of the Environment/Welsh Office minerals planning guidance note 7 (MPG7). MPG7 refers to the derelict land grant scheme, administered by the Welsh Development Agency, which encourages the reclamation of derelict land to bring it back into beneficial use or to improve its appearance. The grant is available to private individuals and others.

Council Tax

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the average council tax payment due in each district council area in Wales in the current financial year.

Mr. Redwood: The average council tax set in each district council area in 1993-94 is given in the following table. The average amount due to be paid in each area will be reduced by the average council tax benefit granted for that area. Information on district benefit levels is not held centrally.

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what local authorities in Wales he intends to cap in respect of council tax.

Mr. Redwood: I have today laid before the House a draft order, under section 57 of the Local Government Finance Act 1992, setting out my decision on the final cap for Aberconwy borough council.

On 26 April my predecessor announced that he proposed to designate Aberconwy borough council for capping. He proposed a cap of £8,566,950, a reduction of £167,745 on the authority's budget of £8,734,695. On 21 May, Aberconwy wrote to challenge the proposed cap and suggested an alternative amount of £8,734,695—the same as its original budget.

In taking my decision, I have considered all the available relevant information, including the case made by the authority in support of a higher cap, and the impact of the flooding in the borough as a result of the severe weather between 10 June and 12 June 1993.

As a result, I have decided that in the current circumstances of the authority it would not be reasonable to proceed with the cap proposed by my predecessor and I have therefore decided to set the cap at £8,734,695—the level of Aberconwy borough council's original budget.

My decision arises from wholly exceptional circumstances in Aberconwy because of the flooding and the substantial unforeseen costs which the authority will have to bear, even allowing for assistance under the Bellwin scheme which I announced on 14 June. In the absence of the flooding, I would have proceeded to cap the borough council's budget at the proposed level and on the basis of the estimates it has given me, I still expect the council to draw on its reserves and make savings on its original budget to pay for the extra expenditure and revenue loss caused by the floods. The council and other authorities in Wales should be clear therefore that I am determined to ensure that all local authorities in Wales budget in line with my plans in future years.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures showing (a) the budget requirement, including parish precepts of all local authorities in Wales, (b) the income per council from non-domestic rates as a total figure and as a percentage figure and (c) the income in respect of council tax.

Mr. Redwood: The information requested is given in the table:

Local Authority Budget Requirements, Non-Domestic Rates and Council Tax Income, 1993-94

| | Budget requirement | Income[1] from non-domestic rates | as a percentage of Budget requirement | Income[1] from Council Tax |

Housing Management

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales by what date he plans to implement compulsory competitive tendering of local authority housing management in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to the hon. Member for Clwyd, North-West (Mr. Richards) on 17 December 1992, Official Report, columns 313-14.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what further representations he has made to the German Government over the proposed transport of toxic waste from Germany to the ReChem incineration plant at Pontypool.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Government have made no further representations.

NHS Trusts (Chief Executives)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a copy of the advertisements placed in the press by his Department for each of the positions of NHS trust chief executives in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The responsibility for the placing of any such advertisement rests with the individual NHS trust.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to assess the views of the public on the extent of the historical and community links between Blaenau Gwent and Merthyr in relation to the proposed new unitary authority combining the two district boroughs.

Mr. Redwood: I shall give very careful consideration to all the views that have been received.

M4

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest figures of traffic flows on the M4 from (a) New House roundabout to Coldra, (b) Coldra to Malpas interchange, (c) Malpas to Tredegar park and (d) Tredegar park to Tongwynlais; and what they were for the previous four years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Traffic flows on the M4 between Newhouse and Coryton are as follows:

| | | Annual average daily flows | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Road | Section | 1988 | 1989 | 1990 | 1991 | 1992 |
| M4 | Newhouse to Magor | 39,200 | 44,000 | 44,300 | 43,400 | 45,100 |
| M4 | Magor to Coldra | — | 45,900 | 45,800 | 45,200 | 47,000 |
| M4 | Coldra to Caerleon | — | 64,650 | 71,600 | 66,700 | 67,500 |
| M4 | Caerleon to Malpas | 67,200 | 74,900 | 76,900 | 76,950 | 77,500 |
| M4 | Malpas to Tredegar Park | — | 78,900 | 81,100 | 81,000 | 81,800 |
| M4 | Tredegar Park to Castleton | — | 66,000 | 71,400 | 68,500 | 74,200 |
| M4 | Castleton to Coryton | 35,000 | 38,000 | 43,000 | 40,850 | 42,700 |

Note: All flows 24 hour annual average daily flows.

DEFENCE

RAF Flying Hours

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the figures for the average number of hours flown by RAF crews indicating time spent at (a) low-level flying and (b) medium-level flying in each year since 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many representations he has received on the subject of compensation for members of the British Nuclear Test Veterans Association; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: About 40 representations have been received on this matter from hon. Members since the beginning of the year.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his Department's policy to compensate those veterans who were exposed to damaging levels of radiation during testing between 1952 and 1967; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The Government would consider sympathetically a claim for compensation on behalf of any ex-service man who suffered illness from radiation through participation in the British atmospheric nuclear test programme. Not a single case of illness, however, has ever been shown to have been so caused. Almost all the personnel involved received little or no radiation from the nuclear tests. There is no evidence of increased mortality or of increased overall cancer incidence among British nuclear test veterans.

Crown Proceedings (Armed Forces) Act 1987

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to amend the Crown Proceedings (Armed Forces) Act 1987 so that claims would be permissible for accidents that occurred before 15 May 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The Government have no plans to amend the Crown Proceedings (Armed Forces) Act 1987.

The question of whether the change made in 1987 should be retrospective was fully debated in the House at the time. It was decided that the new Act would not be retrospective. I see no reason to take a different view now.

Intellectual Property Rights

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what response he has made to requests to protect intellectual property rights after contractorisation.

Mr. Aitken: Any information transferred to a contractor is subject to a standard obligation of confidence which limits the use of the information to the purposes of the contract.

Anti-Missile Systems

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what projects he is engaged in, and with which partners, to explore the possibility of theatre anti-missile protection systems.

Mr. Aitken: We are currently engaged in a NATO ballistic missile defence (BMD) study based on a postulated risk of accidental or deliberate ballistic missile attack against NATO in the post-cold war era. We are also defining an internal pre-feasibility study into possible BMD systems to counter potential threats against the United Kingdom and our forces deployed overseas.

Upholder Submarine

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence upon what date it was decided not to proceed with the planned expenditure of £3·5 million on moving the Upholder class of submarine from Gosport to Devonport.

Mr. Hanley: No such decision has been taken, but no further expenditure will be committed until the future of the Upholder class has been decided.

Apprenticeships

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many officially recognised apprenticeships have been completed by persons employed by his Department in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Aitken: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, over the past 10 years the Ministry of Defence has recruited some 8,300 civilian apprentices into disciplines recognised by the national trade unions.

The intake numbers were as follows:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| 1983 | 1,257 |
| 1984 | 1,260 |
| 1985 | 1,034 |
| 1986 | 1,025 |
| 1987 | 674 |
| 1988 | 691 |
| 1989 | 683 |
| 1990 | 708 |
| 1991 | 574 |
| 1992 | 393 |

Aircraft Incident (Taunton)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will ensure that the hon. Member for Taunton is sent a report on the outcome of the inquiry into the incident over the Taunton area on 15 June, when a Royal Navy aircraft dropped its fuel tanks; and if he will make an interim statement.

Mr. Hanley: I can confirm that a Navy Sea Harrier operating in the Taunton area on 15 June suffered an electrical fault which caused its two external fuel tanks to be released. The tanks landed in fields. There were no injuries. An investigation is currently in hand and my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member when this has been completed.

Gulf Trust Fund

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money has been released to date from the Gulf Trust fund; and to how many recipients.

Mr. Hanley: Total expenditure to date from the Gulf Trust is £753,857, some of which has been in the form of loans on beneficial terms. Recent payments made by the benevolent funds have yet to be reimbursed from the Gulf Trust. 161 beneficiaries have so far been provided with assistance from the trust together with four charitable bodies and three charitable funds.

EMPLOYMENT

Training

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to review the supervision of the advice given on training to clients of his Department by departmental offices and by agencies to whom clients are recommended for training.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Employment Service (ES) advisers are trained in techniques to diagnose client need so that they may suggest a suitable job or training opportunity. If a client feels they have been misinformed, the ES operates an easy to use complaints system.

Someone who is interested in training and enterprise council (TEC) provided training will be given more detailed guidance by the training body or an independent guidance agency appointed by the TEC. TECs are required to operate quality control procedures and will take up any complaint made to them by a client.

I have been advised that these procedures are working in a broadly satisfactory way and there is no need for a fundamental review. Guidance can, however, be a complex area and clients are occasionally misinformed. Where these cases are brought to our attention the matter is always investigated.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to increase the allowances paid to young people on the youth training scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: There are no plans to increase minimum youth training (YT) allowances. Minimum YT allowances are set at levels which reflect the fact that trainees are involved in the learning process and I believe current levels are sufficient to meet the normal requirements of trainees living in the parental home.

Trainees who live independently may apply for income support if they consider their income is insufficient to meet their needs. Employers are the main beneficiaries of the Government's investment in training and are strongly encouraged to supplement trainee incomes—an estimated 30 per cent. of YT trainees are employed and receive wages.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take steps to ensure that representatives of district and borough councils are appointed to the boards of the TECs; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: It is for TECs themselves to decide the membership of their boards within the broad framework set out in their contract with my Department. I am satisfied that TEC boards have adequate representation of their local authorities.

Apprenticeships

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Warley, West (Mr. Spellar), of 14 June, Official Report, column 452, what definition of apprenticeships was used in in his answer; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Respondents to the Labour Force Survey self-classify themselves when answering appropriate questions about apprenticeships. However, if clarification is needed interviewers are provided with the following guidance note:

'Normally an apprenticeship commences at the age of 16 or 17 and is usually completed by the age of 21 after a minimum of three years.

Include:

Indentured apprenticeships;

Those registered with a national body, eg. National Joint Council for the Building Industry;

Persons with an employer's certificate of completion;

Those recognised by an industrial training board or by a trade union for membership purposes;

Articled clerks—those serving a period of training as accountants, solicitors etc;

Hairdressers who are undergoing a planned training programme.

Exclude:

Persons who have been upgraded through informal (or formal) training and/or experience;

Architectural draughtsmen.'

Apprenticeships are only part of the system of delivering vocational training. The 1980s saw the introduction, and expansion, of training for young people through the youth training initiatives. In addition, many young people opt to acquire vocational training through the further education system.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many fully indentured apprenticeships have been completed in each of the past 10 years; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many of those persons who are recognised by the labour force survey as having completed an apprenticeship in 1992 had taken in excess of two years' training to achieve it.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is not available.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in what circumstances TECs finance apprenticeships which take in excess of two years to complete; and how many such apprenticeships were funded by TECs during 1991.

Miss Widdecombe: Training and enterprise councils (TECs) provide training opportunities under youth training (YT) for young people leading to approved qualifications at or above national vocational qualification level 2 standard. A TEC may support a young person undergoing apprenticeship training for the duration of the apprenticeship period, subject to the trainee remaining under 25 years of age. The Labour Force Survey shows that some 52,000 apprenticeships were operating under YT in the spring of 1991.

Federation of Economic Development Authorities

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has now replied to the letter dated 20 May to his Department from the Federation of Economic Development Authorities in relation to each of the points raised with him in that letter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Yes. I replied on 3 June.

TRANSPORT

East London River Crossing

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of the European Commission's reasoned opinion on the environmental impact of the proposed east London river crossing and its effect on Oxleas wood.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Transport in London to the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Austin-Walker) on 18 May 1993, Official Report, columns 92-93.

Underground Rail Systems

Ms Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to which other major European cities have underground rail systems which either break even or make an operating profit.

Mr. Norris: Detailed information on the financial performance of underground railway systems outside Britain is not collected by the Government. In any case, direct comparisons between complex systems operating under very different financial regimes are extremely difficult to make.

Public Transport Demand

Ms Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration in his evaluation of the potential application of road pricing to inner London has been given to the impact on public transport demand, particularly on London Underground; and if road pricing assessments will include an evaluation of how far the public transport system can cope with the additional demand without significant modernisation.

Mr. Norris: The likely impacts on public transport demand will be estimated as part of the evaluation exercise on city congestion charging in London.

West Coast Line

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the plans for the upgrading of the west coast line.

Mr. Freeman: Re-equipping the west coast main line is an investment priority. I understand that British Rail has set aside funds for design work and plans to begin renewing the infrastructure next year. Decisions on the precise phasing of the renewal programme will need to have regard to public expenditure constraints.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what steps he is taking to ensure that contractors constructing the channel tunnel rail link use main arterial routes only;

(2) what steps he is taking to ensure that contractors constructing the channel tunnel rail link locate their work sites so as to avoid disturbance to homes.

Mr. Freeman: Union Railways is currently preparing a code of practice for construction as part of its environmental handbook, which will be published in due course.

Motor Cycles

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will continue to resist proposals for outlawing motor-cycles by the European Community where the power is in excess of 100 brake horse power.

Mr. Key: The EC Council of Ministers adopted on 14 June a common position on the proposal for a directive on motor cycle power, which will permit higher powered motor cycles up to a limit of 94kW (125bhp) to be approved for registration in the United Kingdom until the end of the century. The proposal will now go to the European Parliament for Second Reading. It would be premature to speculate on the outcome.

Traffic Regulation Conditions (Buses)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many traffic regulation conditions involving bus services have been recommended by the traffic commissioners, and how many he has refused, in each year since 1985;

(2) what factors he takes into account when determining his response to a traffic regulation condition involving bus services.

Mr. Freeman: Traffic regulation conditions are determined without reference to the Secretary of State, by traffic commissioners, who are quasi-judicial independent bodies. They may only be imposed if commissioners are satisfied that they are required to prevent danger to road users or to reduce severe traffic congestion.

An appeal may be made to the Secretary of State against the determination of the traffic commissioner. Factors to be taken into account in deciding the appeal will vary according to the nature of the appeal, but a pre-condition is that the traffic commissioner has acted within his powers.

The number of traffic regulation conditions imposed each year since 1985 is as follows:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| 1986 | 2 |
| 1987 | 9 |
| 1988 | 5 |
| 1989 | 1 |
| 1990 | 1 |
| 1991 | 1 |
| TOTAL | 22 |

There have been five appeals against traffic regulation conditions made to the Secretary of State since 1985. Three were dismissed; one was allowed; and one was allowed in part, but the traffic regulation condition was varied.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what consideration he has given to the financial and environmental benefits of increasing weight limitations on heavy goods vehicles;

(2) what plans he has to increase weight limitations on heavy goods vehicles.

Mr. Key: We are considering the responses to a consultation paper we issued on a proposal to increase the maximum gross weight to 44 tonnes for six-axle articulated lorries and drawbar trailer combinations carrying goods to and from railheads. Some respondents have argued that there are benefits in allowing such a weight increase more widely. The financial and environmental factors are among those that we shall take into account in coming to a decision.

Transport Council

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the result of the Transport Council held in Luxembourg on 7 and 8 June 1993.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 11 June 1993, c. 383-84]: The Transport Council resumed on 19 June the meeting that it had held on 7 and 8 June. I represented the United Kingdom.

The Council resolved the long-standing issues of road freight vehicle taxation and charging of road freight cabotage. This agreement was fundamentally based, as the Danish presidency acknowledged, on work carried out by the United Kingdom presidency. I am delighted to say that this completes the single market in transport and that British interests were fully protected. This agreement will provide a significant opportunity for British hauliers in European markets.

The Council agreed that the definitive Community arrangements on road haulage cabotage—the right to carry loads within another country—will come into force on 1 July 1998. The present Community cabotage authorisation and quota system will continue until then, with the total quota for the Community for two month cabotage authorisations being increased on 1 January 1994 to 30,000, and annually from 1 January 1995 by 30 per cent.

The Council agreed on a broad framework to be applied by all countries in introducing permits, as indicated as one option in our Green Paper "Paying for Better Motorways". The details of this are entirely consistent with the options I set out in the Green Paper.

The Council agreed that the maximum annual user charge for road freight vehicles should be 1,250 ecu, to be reviewed every two years, with the first review by 1 January 1997. The definition of roads that may be covered is essentially motorways and similar roads, with a possible extension to other roads under a Community procedure.

The Belgian, Danish, German, Luxembourg and Netherlands delegations announced that they had reached an agreement on a common user charge system for their territories, under which one permit will cover the use of roads in all five countries. This will be better for British hauliers than individual charges in each of the member states. The agreement provides for charging to start from 1 January 1995, with reduced charges for the first three years for Greek transport operators and for the first two years for Irish and Portuguese.

The Council agreed on minimum rates of vehicle tax, and that until the end of 1997 five member states can apply rates up to 50 per cent. below the minimum rates.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioners (Mortgages)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has of the number of pensioners who own their own homes and have repaid their mortgage.

Mr. Hague: In 1989, the latest year for which figures are available, over half of all pensioners owned their own homes. Of these, 94 per cent—or 3·5 million—owned their own homes outright with no mortgage commitments.

Unemployment

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to re-include 16 to 18-year-olds who are out of work and not in education into unemployment registers.

Mr. Burt: None. All 16 to 18-year-olds have available to them either employment, further education or a guaranteed training place.

Market Testing

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list all the market tests that have taken place in his Department since November 1992 and indicate, in each case, whether the result was the maintenance of in-house provision, or whether the service was contracted out.

Mr. Hague: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Dundee, East (Mr. McAllion) on 24 February at column 618. There have been no further market tests completed by this Department since that date.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) whether sufferers from Huntington's disease, motor neurone disease and ataxia are to be excluded from eligibility for assistance by the independent living (1993) fund; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what criteria will be used to identify those terminally ill disabled people who are to be excluded from assistance by the independent living (1993) fund.

Mr. Scott: Questions of eligibility for assistance from the independent living (1993) fund are a matter for the trustees of the fund.

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he will take to provide support for severely disabled people who are terminally ill following the decision to exclude them from assistance by the independent living (1993) fund.

Mr. Scott: Support for people who are terminally ill is already provided in many forms by statutory, voluntary and charitable agencies.

Pensions

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many married women between the ages of (a) 60 to 65 years, (b) 65 to 75 years and (c) 75 to 85 years do not qualify for a retirement pension or occupational pension;

(2) how many married men between the ages of (a) 60 to 65 years, (b) 65 to 75 years and (c) 75 to 85 years are receiving a retirement pension or an occupational pension;

(3) how many married couples over 65 years are dependent on the husband's retirement or occupational pension.

Mr. Hague: The information is not available. Neither the retirement pension statistics nor the family expenditure survey—upon which the pensioner income series is based—provide reliable information on both the state retirement pension and the occupational pension received by members of married couples.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost of raising the basic state retirement pension to a level at which income support and housing benefit would cease to be payable to pensioners; and by how much the standard rate of income tax would have to be raised to raise the same sum.

Mr. Hague: The additional cost of increasing the basic retirement pension to the higher pensioner rate of income support would be £3·4 billion. This represents a full-year extra cost in 1993-94 net of savings made by the consequent reduction in spending on income related benefits.

The basic rate of income tax would have to be increased by 8p to raise this amount.

It is not possible to estimate a level of retirement pension at which all pensioners cease to be eligible for housing benefit as entitlement depends on the level of rent paid, and rents vary widely. As an illustration of the cost involved I estimate that it would cost £11·2 billion net in 1993-94 to increase retirement pensions to a level where income support and housing benefit entitlement would cease for pensioners paying the average local authority weekly rent paid by pensioners in receipt of housing benefit—£26·64 in May 1991, the latest available figures.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will revise the current disability handbook on myalgic encephalomyelitis to reflect (a) its severe disabling nature and (b) recent research findings;

(2) if he will transfer the entry on myalgic encephalomyelitis in the disability handbook from the chapter on chronic fatigue syndromes to the chapter on certain neurological disorders.

Mr. Scott: The entry on myalgic encephalomyelitis (ME) in the "Disability Handbook" is currently being revised and will be transferred to the chapter on "Certain Neurological Disorders", when the revision is complete. It will reflect the consensus view of the nature and severity of the condition, taking into account recent research evidence.

National Insurance

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many employed earners paid national insurance contributions at the contracted-out standard rate; and how many people earned above that year's upper earnings limit for national insurance purposes, in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Hague: About 9·6 million employed earners paid some national insurance contributions at the standard contracted-out rate in 1990-91.

In the same year, 1·8 million of all contributors who paid class 1 contributions had earnings at or above the annual earnings limit.

Source: DSS internal sample of 1 per cent. of national insurance contributors.

State Earnings-related Pension Scheme

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many individuals currently (a) contribute towards a state earnings-related pension, (b) do not pay SERPS because they are in an occupational scheme, and (c) do not pay SERPS because they are in a personal pension scheme.

Mr. Hague: During 1990-91, the latest year for which information is available, employed earners paid national insurance contributions as follows:

| | Great Britain millions |
|---|---|
| (i) At the standard not contracted out rate | 11·6 |
| (ii) At the contracted out rate because of membership of an occupational pension scheme | 8·2 |
| (iii) A mixture of both (i) and (ii) above | 1·4 |
| (iv) At the standard not contracted out rate (included in (i) and (iii)) but subsequently had a rebate of contributions paid into an appropriate personal pension | 4·1 |

Source: 1 per cent. sample of national insurance contribution records.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many members of personal pension schemes who have opted out of the state earnings-related pension scheme he expects to opt back into SERPS over the next five years;

(2) how many members of personal pension schemes who opted out of the state earnings-related pension scheme have opted back into SERPS.

Mr. Hague: It is not possible to estimate the numbers of people likely to opt back into the state earnings-related pension scheme (SERPS), since the decision as to whether or not to opt back depends on an individual's particular circumstances.

We estimate that some 76,500 United Kingdom personal pension holders had rejoined SERPS by the end of 1990-91, the latest year for which figures are available. This estimate is based on a 1 per cent. sample of national insurance contributors and may include people who have left and rejoined SERPS more than once.

Social Fund (Rent Deposits)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects the pilot scheme enabling people to receive payments from the social fund for rent deposits to report on the pilot project.

Mr. Scott: There is no such scheme. However, the Department of the Environment is currently funding a pilot rent deposit scheme as part of the rough sleepers initiative in central London.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to study the implications of the transfer of housing benefit administration from local authorities to the Benefits Agency.

Mr. Burt: There are no proposals for such a transfer. In March this year the Department issued guidelines designed to help individual local authorities to make informed decisions about whether or not to contract out those aspects of benefit administration which the law permits.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps his Department are taking to increase the take-up of housing benefit.

Mr. Burt: Information on housing benefit is available at all Benefits Agency and unemployment benefit offices, although, as responsibility for the administration of housing benefit lies with individual local authorities, they are in the best position to undertake local publicity and initiatives to improve local take-up.

Latest estimates of housing benefit take-up, for 1989, which were published earlier this year, show 91 per cent. of available benefit being claimed.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to introduce compensation to tenants when local authorities do not issue interim payments for housing benefit purposes.

Mr. Burt: We have no such plans. Local authorities are responsible for the administration of housing benefit and it is for them to decide whether any recompense should be made following their investigation of individual complaints. In addition, if the local government ombudsman finds maiadministration and injustice in a particular case, the judgement can include a recommendation about financial compensation.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to issue a national form for reporting change of circumstances for housing benefit.

Mr. Burt: We have no such plans. Full statutory responsibility for the administration of the housing benefit scheme rests with local authorities. That responsibility extends to the design and production of appropriate claim forms. Authorities may produce supplementary forms where they consider it would help to streamline benefit administration.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out in a table for every year since 1984 the amount of housing benefit going to tenants (a) in local authority housing, (b) in housing association properties and (c) in private rented housing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: The available information is in the table.

| | [1] [2] Rent Rebates £ million | [1] [3] Rent Allowance £ million |
|---|---|---|
| 1983-84 | 1,980 | 536 |
| 1984-85 | 2,146 | 687 |
| 1985-86 | 2,296 | 881 |
| 1986-87 | 2,419 | 996 |
| 1987-88 | 2,506 | 1,030 |
| 1988-89 | 2,718 | 1,055 |
| 1989-90 | 2,946 | 1,337 |
| 1990-91 | 3,345 | 1,396 |
| 1991-92 | 3,659 | 2,399 |
| [4]1992-93 | 4,445 | 2,903 |

Source:—The source of the data is the departmental report.

[1] Rent rebates are housing benefit in respect of local authority tenants; rent allowances are housing benefit paid to tenants in privately rented accommodation.

[2] Includes transitional payments introduced when the responsibility for housing benefit was fully transferred from supplementary benefit to housing benefit. (1983-84)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of the average council rent is the maximum non-dependant deduction for housing benefit.

Mr. Burt: The maximum non-dependant deduction in 1993-94 is estimated to represent approximately 65 per cent. of the average local authority rent in Great Britain.

Fraud

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress his Department has made in encouraging local authorities to reduce council tax and housing benefit fraud; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The Department has recently undertaken several initiatives to heighten fraud awareness amongst local authority staff and to encourage local authorities in their anti-fraud work:

From April 1993 authorities will not only receive an increase in benefit subsidy, from 25 per cent. to full rate, for overpayments resulting from fraud but authorities will also share in benefit savings they achieve above specific baseline figures.

In May 1993, a model national fraud service level agreement was signed, which had been prepared by the Department, in consultation with the local authority associations and the Benefits Agency. The agreement provides a framework for effective two-way liaison between fraud sections in local authorities and Benefits Agency sector fraud.

In 1992-93, the Department, in conjuction with the Benefits Agency training unit, offered free fraud training to authorities and funds have now been secured for further training in 1993-94.

The Department will be involved in and do all it can to support the newly formed London-wide team of local authority specialists which has been set up to co-ordinate authorities' anti-fraud efforts across borough boundaries.

Local Authorities (Rents)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to implement the Audit Commission's recommendation that local authorities should be able to apply to the rent officer every six months.

Mr. Burt: Under current arrangements, local authorities cannot normally refer to the rent officer for a fresh determination within a period of 12 months, but there are circumstances in which referral within this period is permitted. We have no plans to amend the general 12-month referral period.

Income Support (Mortgage Interest)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants were paid income support for mortgage interest in each year since 1988 (a) as a total, (b) who were pensioners, (c) who were unemployed and (d) who were disability premium recipients; and if he will provide an annual cost for each category in both current prices and 1988 prices.

Mr. Burt: The information is in the table.

Income support recipients with mortgage interest considered in their assessments

Source: Income Support Statistics Annual Inquiries, May 1988 to 1992.

Notes:

1. The figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand. Cost figures are given to the nearest hundred thousand pounds.
2. Figures are given for the numbers of income support recipients who have mortgage interest considered in their assessment. The annual costs have been estimated from the weekly amount of mortgage interest considered in the assessment. In practice the amount of income support paid to the recipient may be reduced due to assumed contributions from non-dependants living in the household.
3. Some "Pensioners" may also receive a disability premium. These people have been counted as "Pensioners" rather than "Disability premium recipients".
4. Costs at 1988 prices have been calculated using the gross domestic product deflator.

Walsall Council (Bus Passes)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 10 June, Official Report, column 333, when he expects to conclude his discussions with Walsall council over its refusal to comply with legislation allowing blind people in receipt of the disability living allowance to have the concessionary bus pass; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We remain engaged in discussions with the council and hope to conclude them in the near future. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as the discussions are completed to let him know their outcome.

Industrial Deafness

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people were in receipt of (a) invalidity pension and (b) invalidity allowance owing to being incapable to work because of industrial-induced deafness in each year since 1979.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many claimants of invalidity benefit in each constituency in the London borough of Brent are aged to (a) 18 to 30 years, (b) 31 to 40 years, (c) 41 to 50 years and (d) 51 to 65 years;

(2) how many claimants of invalidty benefit there were in (a) the London borough of Brent and (b) the Brent, South parliamentary constituency at the latest available date.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many male and female claimants of invalidity benefit there were in Pendle in each year since 1990.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants of invalidity benefit in Pendle are aged (a) 18-30 years, (b) 31-40 years, (c) 41-50 years and (d) 51-65 years.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people currently in residential care are in receipt of invalidity benefit.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the proportion of registered disabled persons currently in receipt of invalidity benefit.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people were in receipt of (a) invalidity pension and (b) invalidity allowance for each year since 1979.

Mr. Scott: The information is in the table.

Numbers receiving invalidity pension and invalidity allowance

| Date | Invalidity pension | Invalidity allowance |
|---|---|---|
| 2 June 1979 | 609,900 | 505,100 |
| 31 May 1980 | 614,500 | 512,100 |
| 30 May 1981 | 632,600 | 533,000 |

| 30 March 1991 | 1,306,000 | 534,600 |

Notes:

1. Based on a 1 per cent. sample of claimants; the latest date for which information is available is 30 March 1991.

2. The estimated average number of people receiving invalidity benefit at any one time during 1992-93 is 1,490,000 (source: departmental report).

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give for each benefit office the number of claimants in receipt of invalidity benefit in May 1979 and at the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not available.

Industrial Disablement Pension

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people received industrial disablement pension in each year since 1979.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is in the table:

Estimated average numbers of recipients[1] at any one time

Thousands

| 1991-92 | 295 |
| 1992-93 | 295 |

[1] The information is taken from departmental reports. The figures include recipients of industrial injuries disablement pension and/or reduced earnings allowance.

DSS Employees (Fraud)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many DSS employees have been charged with fraud in each year since 1979; what was the value of this fraud; and what is the estimated total value of frauds committed by DSS employees for each of those years.

Mr. Hague: The information is in the table.

Information is not available for the period 1979 to 1983, and only partial details are available for the period 1984 to 1987. There is no basis on which to estimate the total value of unknown fraud committed. The figures in column 4 relate to the value of fraud on the part of DSS employees detected each year. Where criminal prosecution was not considered to be appropriate the incidents were dealt with by internal disciplinary measures.

| Year | Number of staff prosecuted | Amount of fraud involved (£) | Known total value of internal fraud |

Mr. Terry Green

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what consideration he gave in deciding to appoint Mr. Terry Green as a non-executive director with the Benefits Agency to his immediately preceding status as a civil servant in the agency;

(2) if he will publish the terms and conditions relating to the recent appointment of Mr. Terry Green as a non-executive director of the Benefits Agency.

Mr. Hague: The appointment of non-executive members of the Benefits Agency management team is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. John McAllion, dated 18 June 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what consideration he gave in deciding to appoint Mr. Terry Green as a non-executive director with the Benefits Agency to his immediately preceding status as a civil servant in the Agency and if he will publish the terms and conditions relating to his appointment of Mr. Terry Green as a non-executive director of the Benefits Agency.

We have recently been looking, within the Benefits Agency, at the roles and responsibilities of the directors who form the Benefits Agency Management Team. We concluded that it would be appropriate to reduce the number of full-time executive directors from six to five, but that it would also be desirable to appoint two part-time non-executive members of the Team, particularly to contribute to the strategic thinking of the Agency. I have been very pleased to appoint Terry Green as a non-executive member of the Management Team with a special interest in customer service issues. In that role he will be able to develop the work he led on customer service when he was employed by the Agency.

The terms and conditions relating to this appointment are not yet the subject of a formal contract but it has been agreed that Mr. Green will work for three days a month. Details of an individual's remuneration are regarded as confidential, but the daily fee payable to Mr. Green is well within the normal range for this type of appointment. He will also be reimbursed travel and subsistence expenses in accordance with the normal Benefits Agency rules. His immediately preceding status as a civil servant was relevant only to the extent that he is able to bring to our deliberations considerable knowledge of customer services issues in the Benefits Agency. The normal rules of the Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme relating to re-employment will be applied.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Comfrey

Mr. Hain: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if individuals may import comfrey products for their private use; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The advice of the Government's independent expert committees is that consumption of comfrey products containing high levels of pyrrolizidine alkaloids may give rise to toxic effects in humans. With the co-operation of the principal health food trade associations, I have taken action to protect consumers by securing the removal of relevant products from sale. However, this is not a legislative prohibition.

Tobacco Subsidy

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the EC subsidy for tobacco growing in ecu and sterling for 1991 and 1992; and what is the estimated level for 1993.

Mr. Jack: Community expenditure on tobacco amounted to 1,330 mecu (£931 million)[1] in 1991 and 1,233 mecu (£873 million)[2] in 1992. For 1993, the last year in which the unreformed regime applies, it is forecast at 1,401 mecu (£1,110 million)[3].

[1] £1 = 1·4291 ecu
[2] £1 = 1·4130 ecu
[3] £1 = 1·2617 ecu

Agriculture Council (Voting)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 27 May, Official Report, columns 687-88, what were the voting figures for each decision taken at the Agriculture Council held in Brussels on 24 and 25 May; and if she will make it her policy to include in future statements on council meetings information on whether formal votes were taken.

Mr. Jack: The Agriculture Council, which met from 24 to 27 May, reached agreement in principle on the 1993 price proposals and related measures; no formal vote was taken. The various measures were adopted at the subsequent Council on 14 June. No formal vote was taken but five member states registered votes against a measure increasing milk quotas and one against a measure extending the sugar regime. My right hon. Friend and I will in future indicate in statements on Council meetings whether formal votes were taken.

Coastal Protection

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the current criteria for grant-aiding coast protection and sea defence works; what changes she is expecting to make in the criteria; how much of the East Anglian coastline she expects to meet the criteria in the next two years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The basic criteria for grant-aiding coast protection and sea defence works are that they should be technically sound, economically worth while and environmentally acceptable. The protection of life is the paramount objective, but in considering applications for grant aid, there is a presumption that natural coastal processes should not be disrupted except where life or important natural or man-made assets are at risk. In recent months, the Ministry has published revised and expanded guidance on project appraisal and new guidance on environmental aspects of coastal defences, so that operating authorities are aware of how the criteria are applied. Application of the criteria is kept under review, but no changes are foreseen at present.

The need for improvements to some coastal defences in East Anglia is recognised. Several major grant-aided schemes are already under way or in the course of preparation. It is not possible to say how much of the East Anglian coastline will meet the critera for grant aid in the next two years, as it is for the local operating authorities, in the first instance, to decide what schemes to bring forward for approval. However, it is likely that a major part of the Ministry's grant provision will continue to be directed to the Anglian region.

Sea Level

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies her Department has conducted in the last five years into the impact to the British coast which would be caused by a rise in the sea level of a quarter of a metre; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The Ministry continues to fund a number of flood and coastal defence research projects relating to climate change and possible sea level rise, designed to ensure that we are in a position to assess the likely impact on the coast and to plan our response. These include the assessment of changes in the probability of sea levels in storms and of the impact of any changes in wave and storm climate on beaches. In addition, the Ministry funds a national system of tide gauges and recent work has been carried out to relate these to a global reference system so that changes in sea level and geological movements can be separately identified.

A further item of research the Ministry has sponsored in the period mentioned involved an economic appraisal of the consequences of climate-induced sea level rise for the East Anglian coast between Hunstanton and Felixstowe, which was carried out by the university of East Anglia. The research indicated that a strategy of raising defences as required would be economically worth while and current Ministry advice is that new or improved defences should include an allowance for future sea level rise based on estimates by the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change.

Equine Viral Arteritis

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Bury St. Edmunds (Mr. Spring) of 10 June, Official Report, columns 307-8, whether national provisions in force at the time the stallion which was possibly infected with equine viral arteritis was imported into the United Kingdom afford the same degree of protection to the United Kingdom as the provision set out in article 20(2) of the EC directive 90/496/EEC, (a) against inadequate third country veterinary certification and (b) when equidae are, or are suspected of being, infected with or contaminated by an infectious or contagious disease.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The animal health rules applicable to the import of horses into Great Britain at the time the stallion was imported were of at least equivalent effect to those now required under EC rules. Where there is evidence of inadequate veterinary certification, this is always taken up with the country concerned.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, when regulation No. 3295 implementing Council directive 90/496/EEC came into force; on what date article 27 of that directive stipulates that it should have been brought into force in the United Kingdom; what are the reasons for the difference in dates; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Animals and Animal Products (Import and Export) Regulations 1992 (SI 1992 No. 3295) came into force on 1 January 1993.

Article 27 of directive 90/426/EEC required member states to bring into force implementing laws, regulations and administrative procedures from 1 January 1992. The provisions were implemented in Great Britain under existing legislation pending the coming into force of SI 1992 No. 3295.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when her Ministry first received representations from the Animal Health Trust that a relaxation in the rules governing the import of horses and farmed livestock would make the United Kingdom vulnerable to equine viral arteritis.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: As soon as it was realised that specific provisions in relation to EVA were not to be included in the EC animal health rules of equidae, the industry was advised to strengthen the existing voluntary code of practice designed to guard against the introduction of disease into the breeding stock.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what effect the timing of the implementation of directive 90/496/EEC, on animal health conditions governing the movement and import from third countries of equidae, had with respect to the importation of horses infected with equine viral arteritis and farmed livestock testing sero-positive to foot and mouth.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The timing of implementation of directive 90/426/EEC, which does not apply to farmed livestock, has had no effect on the importation of horses infected with EVA.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what measures are presently in place, or are due to be implemented, which might restrict the United Kingdom's ability to halt the importation of animals infected with equine viral arteritis or other non-notifiable diseases;

(2) whether the United Kingdom is able to act independently of other EC nations within the context of the European single market, to protect against the importation of equidae infected with equine viral arteritis and farmed livestock testing sero-positive to foot and mouth.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: EC rules require that animals entering the Community or moving between member states must be certified as free from clinical signs of disease. Member states may return animals not complying with this requirement.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action the Government are taking to ensure that equine viral arteritis is included on the list of notifiable diseases listed in schedule 5 to the Animals and Animal Products (Import and Export) Regulation 1992.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: None, because EVA is not required under EC rules to be notifiable in member states.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when a vaccine will be available to tackle equine viral arteritis virus; and why stocks were not available in the United Kingdom for immediate use.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: An application for an inactivated vaccine has recently been received by the Veterinary Medicines Directorate and is being assessed as quickly as possible.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the most recent figures on the number of premises and horses known to have been infected with equine viral arteritis.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: According to information provided by the Animal Health Trust, active infection has been found on six of 14 premises currently under voluntary movement restrictions. Eighty-eight horses have, to date, tested seropositive.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what national rules have been in force pending the implementation of directive 90/496/EEC; and what protection these rules provided against the importation of equidae infected with equine viral arteritis.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: National rules in force prior to impiementation of directive 90/426/EEC required horses to be tested seronegative to equine viral arteritis prior to importation.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action her Department is taking to assist in the eradication of equine viral arteritis from the United Kingdom; and by when she expects eradication to have been achieved.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury St. Edmunds (Mr. Spring) on 10 June 1993, columns 307-308.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research her Ministry has financed towards the development of a genetically engineered killed vaccine for equine viral arteritis.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: None, although research into the equine viral arteritis virus is currently taking place at the Central Veterinary Laboratory, Weybridge and the Animal Health Trust, Newmarket for which a total of £0·25 million has been allocated over three years.

Animal Imports

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list each country from which horses and cattle cannot be imported into the United Kingdom until a quarantine requirement has been fully met.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Current animal health rules for imports of horses and cattle into the United Kingdom do not include any quarantine requirements, although imports from a number of countries are subject to pre-export or post-import isolation.

Animal Diseases

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list those animal diseases currently present in the EC but not in the United Kingdom, which are not listed as notifiable diseases, and against which the United Kingdom is, or will be, prevented by EC legislation from imposing import restrictions on horses and farmed livestock.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Member states are only required to report to the Commission and each other outbreaks of diseases which are notifiable under EC rules. Information on non-notifiable diseases is only available from a variety of sources and is not comprehensive or necessarily current.

Food From Britain

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the level of funding given to Food From Britain for each of the last five years and the projected funding for each of the next three years.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 18 June 1993]: The information is as follows:

Government grant to Food From Britain

| | £000 |
|---|---|
| 1988-89 | 4,186 |
| 1989-90 | 4,500 |
| 1990-91 | 4,500 |
| 1991-92 | 4,500 |
| 1992-93 | 4,757 |
| 1993-94 | [1]5,010 |
| 1994-95 | [2]5,249 |
| 1995-96 | [2]5,400 |

[2] Provision.

Sheep Quotas

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what financial support she plans to provide for those farmers deprived of sheep quota after the national reserve is exhausted; and if she will make a statement;

(2) when she expects to announce details of the distribution of reserve sheep quotas;

(3) if she will publish, on a regional basis, the number of farmers deprived of quota as a result of the new sheep quota regulations.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 17 June 1993]: Producers who received sheep annual premium in 1991 and claimed in 1992 have an automatic entitlement to sheep quota. Where producers are not covered by the automatic rules, they will be able to apply for quota to the national reserve, if they fall into certain priority categories. All farmers, including those who are unsuccessful in obtaining quota from the national reserve, will be able to acquire quota through the transfer and leasing provisions the Government have negotiated. It is expected that details of the distribution of the national reserve quota for sheep will be made available later in the summer.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Judges

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many judges aged 70 years or over are sitting on the circuit bench (a) full-time and (b) part-time; and how many of these are recorders or assistant recorders.

Mr. John M. Taylor: As at 1 June 1993, there were 16 full-time circuit judges aged 70 or over. In addition there were 29 deputy circuit judges and 12 recorders aged 70 or over, who may sit part time. There were no assistant recorders aged 70 or over.

Market Testing

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list all the market tests that have taken place in his Department since November 1992 and indicate, in each case, whether the result was the maintenance of in-house provision, or whether the service was contracted out.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Since November 1992 the Lord Chancellor's Department has commenced market tests in eight areas: internal audit; pay services; Public Trust Office taxes division; Public Trust Office typing services; Statutory Publications Office; printing and forms supply; IT services; and court building and estates management. To date, seven separate market tests have been completed in the court building and estates management area, which all resulted in the services being contracted out. These services were formerly provided by the Property Services Agency. Save for internal audit, the market tests in the remaining areas are still proceeding and no decisions have been taken. In the case of internal audit an in-house provision has been maintained.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Redundant Farm Buildings

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what grant aid is available for the purpose of restoring redundant farm houses and associated buildings in order that they may once again form the basis of an active farming unit.

Mr. Brooke: If the hon. Member's focus is a Scottish one, I suggest that he writes to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland. In England, since 1989, English Heritage has been contributing funds towards the barns and walls conservation scheme, in the Swaledale and Arkengarthdale conservation area of the Yorkshire Dales national park—a joint initiative also involving the national park, Richmondshire district council, the Countryside Commission and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. Grants of up to 80 per cent. are available to farmers and landowners to enable them to bring the buildings back into working condition, using traditional materials and repair techniques. Nationally, English Heritage is able to give grants for the repair of historic buildings of outstanding historical or architectural interest—usually those listed grade I or grade II—or those situated in designated conservation areas.

National Lottery

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has for the national lottery to contain an instant lottery element.

Mr. Sproat: The types and mix of games for the national lottery will be for the operator to propose. The licensing of individual games under clause 6 of the National Lottery etc. Bill will be the responsibility of the director-general.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Northern Ireland Court of Appeal

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a further statement on the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland's progress in considering the cases referred to him by the Northern Ireland Court of Appeal in its judgment in the case of R v. Latimer and others delivered on 29 July 1992.

The Attorney-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland considered the judgment of the Court of Appeal and all other then available facts and information. On 5 August 1992, 10 February 1993 and 27 April 1993 the director issued interim directions to the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary requesting that further reports, information and witness statements be obtained. The majority of these further reports, information and witness statements have been obtained by the Royal Ulster Constabulary and submitted to the director. A small number of witness statements remain outstanding.

When all the matters requested in these interim directions have been received and considered, a decision as to whether criminal proceedings will be instituted will be taken. It is expected that this decision will be taken in the near future. I refer the hon. Member to the replies that I gave to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) on 11 November 1992 at columns 835-36 and to the right hon. Member for Strangford (Mr. Taylor) on 27 January 1993 at column 709.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Wheel Clamping

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number and names of individuals and organisations who responded to the public consultation exercise on wheel clamping.

Mr. Maclean: Approximately 2,400 copies of the consultation paper were distributed and 184 responses have been received. Respondents were not asked to agree to the publication of their names when their comments were invited and it would not be appropriate now to identify them. However, the table shows the categories to which these respondents belong.

|---|---|
| Landowners: | |
| hospitals | 7 |
| estates | 10 |
| national organisations | 9 |
| local organisations | 22 |
| individuals | 8 |
| Wheelclamping companies | 11 |
| Motorists | 13 |
| MPs and Members of the House of Lords | 8 |
| Local authorities | 46 |
| Police | 23 |
| Other bodies (including other Government departments and public and private organisations representing a wide variety of interests) | 27 |

In addition, since 1 April 1992, we have received 199 letters forwarded by MPs and Members of the House of Lords, and 107 letters sent direct to the Home Office or other Government Departments commenting on this issue.

Police Batons

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will agree to a pilot project on the use of the expandable side-handled baton being monitored by (a) the Association of Chief Police Officers, (b) the Police Federation, (c) the Chief Inspector of Constabulary and (d) an independent research and assessment team.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 21 June at column 2.

Rabies

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce tougher sentences for offenders contravening anti-rabies laws; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The maximum penalty for offences under the Rabies (Importation of Dogs, Cats and Other Mammals) Order 1974 is an unlimited fine and/or 12 months' imprisonment. We have no plans to increase it.

Wickham Laboratories

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the outcome of the investigations into allegations by the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection in respect of Wickham laboratories.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Home Office Animals (Scientific Procedures) Inspectorate and the Medicines Control Agency have investigated allegations made by the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection (BUAV) into procedures and practices at Wickham laboratories.

The investigation did not find substantiated some of the principal allegations against Wickham, but it did disclose poor local management, resulting in lax attitudes and practices among certain staff. These included a readiness to falsify test and environmental data on occasions. There was also one case of unnecessary animal use. Some aspects of the technical training were unsatisfactory: initial training was poorly structured and unrecorded and left some basic gaps in coverage. The system also lacked formal assessment of competence before unsupervised tasks were allocated to new employees.

My right hon. and learned Friend has concluded that direct responsibility for the failures detected by the investigation lies with the individual who was line manager for the named day-to-day care person at the time to which the BUAV allegations relate, and who was himself named day-to-day care person at the time of the Home Office investigation. My right hon. and learned Friend has directed that he be replaced as named day-to-day care person and deputy project licence holder, and that his personal licence be revoked. In addition, the individual who was named day-to-day care person at the time of the BUAV investigation has been warned that particular attention will be paid to her current skills and knowledge if in future she should apply for a personal licence. A number of other members of Wickham staff have received letters of admonition, reminding them of the importance of a proper understanding of their responsibilities and obligations under the legislation.

In addition to action in respect of individuals, my right hon. and learned Friend has directed:

- that Wickham agree with the inspectorate a formal training scheme for all animal unit staff, including full records of training given and an assessment of expertise for specific tasks being made from the beginning of each individual's employment;
- that Wickham's standard operating procedures relating to the care, husbandry and euthanasia of animals should be revised to the satisfaction of the inspectorate and to reflect best current practice.

It has been made clear to Wickham that a serious view has been taken of the lapses which this investigation has revealed, and that Wickham's operation will be subjected to particularly close scrutiny in the future. The Animal Procedures Committee has been informed of the outcome of the investigation, and has endorsed the action taken.

Other allegations made by the BUAV were not substantiated, and the inspectorate had reservations about some of the evidence presented in support of the allegations. In particular, the investigation did not find that there had been unauthorised reuse of animals, or that animal suffering had resulted from poor accommodation, or that problems had arisen from a potential conflict of interests among the senior management at Wickham. On the latter point, however, the Animal Procedures Committee has decided to look in general terms at the conflicts which may arise when the posts of certificate holder, project licence holder and named veterinary surgeon are not all held by separate individuals.

The BUAV alleged that unnecessary animal testing took place. I am satisfied, however, that all the work carried out at Wickham was properly licensed under the Act. The general issue of animal testing performed to satisfy the requirements of regulatory authorities is currently being examined by the Animal Procedures Committee, and I look forward to receiving its advice.

Finally, I understand that the Medicines Control Agency's conclusion is that although there were operational and procedural deficiencies at Wickham, they do not call in question the validity of the particular tests, nor do they raise doubts about Wickham's continued operation as a contract research establishment. A range of improvements has been insisted upon by the agency and it will be keeping the situation under close review.

Prosecution Statements

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to give the defence the right to see prosecution statements in summary trials; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: We have no plans at present to extend to defendants accused of summary offences the provisions of the Magistrates Courts (Advance Information) Rules 1985. The issue is, however, within the terms of reference of the Royal Commission on Criminal Justice and we will consider carefully any recommendations it might make.

Unit Fine System

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider establishing a restrospective scheme to compensate those individuals who have been disadvantaged by the unit fine system after it has been replaced.

Mr. Maclean: No.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many claims have been made to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board in each of the last three years; how many have been successful; how many have gone to appeal and then been accepted; and what have been the shortest, longest and average times each year to deal with cases that have gone to appeal.

Mr. Maclean: The latest available information, provided by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board (CICB), is summarised in the following tables.

Table 1
Claims received and decisions made by CICB

| | 1989-90 | 1990-91 | 1991-92 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Claims received | 53,655 | 50,820 | 61,400 |
| Awards offered and accepted at first decision stage | 25,577 | 32,135 | 35,268 |
| Applications for appeal | 7,203 | 8,123 | 9,258 |
| Appeals heard | 3,897 | 6,265 | 8,731 |
| Successful appeals | 2,349 | 3,055 | 3,981 |

Time between application for appeal and hearing

| | 1989-90 per cent. | 1990-91 per cent. | 1991-92 per cent. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Up to 3 months | 1 | 4 | 3 |
| 3 to 6 months | 3 | 8 | 13 |
| 6 to 9 months | 6 | 10 | 15 |
| 9 to 12 months | 18 | 11 | 14 |
| Over 12 months | 72 | 67 | 55 |
| | 100 | 100 | 100 |

Note: The numbers relating to awards, applications for appeals and appeals heard in any one year do not necessarily relate to claims received in that year, or to each other.

Police Mergers

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those police authorities that have been considered for amalgamation (a) during his period of office as Home Secretary and (b) during the past 10 years; and which proposals did not proceed because of the current procedure for amalgamation (i) as the only or primary reason and (ii) as a contributory reason.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 19 May 1993]: No police authorities were considered for amalgamation during the term of office of my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Rushcliffe (Mr. Clarke). At the time of the abolition of the metropolitan county councils, consideration was given to possible changes in the relevant police force areas. No changes were made because it was felt unlikely that reorganisation would improve effectiveness. The amalgamation procedure was not a factor in this decision.

Complete records for the last 10 years are not available. However, the records that are available indicate that detailed consideration has not been given to the amalgamation of any other force areas during that time.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

World Service

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to enhance the output and reputation of the World Service.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In discussions with the World Service in March and April this year we reached broad agreement on plans for the next funding triennium (April 1994 to March 1997), and on priority areas for development, funded from savings elsewhere in the World Service. These plans, which remain subject to the outcome of the current public expenditure survey, take account of the need to respond to changes in the former Soviet Union, and include the introduction of two central Asian languages.

Trade Representatives

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) diplomats and (b) trade representatives there are in each United Kingdom diplomatic post overseas.

Mr. Goodlad: The total number of United Kingdom diplomats (with the rank of second secretary and above) serving in United Kingdom diplomatic posts overseas is 1,263.

The total number of trade representatives at these posts, including locally engaged staff, is 451.

A breakdown of the figures by post is as follows:

Foreign and Commonwealth Office diplomatic posts overseas

| Country | Post | Number of diplomats | Trade representatives[1] |

Thailand

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current state of development of the proposed construction of the new transmitter in Thailand for the BBC World Service; and when the construction will be completed.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have reached agreement in principle with the Thai authorities for the construction of a BBC World Service relay station in Thailand. Detailed site survey work, which is required before final project approval can be given, is about to begin. The target date for completion of the project is 1996.

UN Security Council

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions the United Kingdom ambassador to the United Nations has had with his American, Russian, French and Chinese counterparts in New York following the proposal by the United States ambassador that Germany and Japan be allocated permanent seats on the United Nations Security Council; and what discussions Her Majesty's Government have had with the United States Administration over the proposal.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have regular discussions with the Americans and other permanent members of the Security Council on a range of United Nations issues, including Security Council reform. The Americans have aired their views, which are not new, in the context of the Secretary-General's request for member states to submit views on Security Council reform by the end of June. Many states, including the United Kingdom, will be sending replies and we will play a full part in the debate.

UN Peace-keeping Operations

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much the United Kingdom's contribution was to the United Nation's peace-keeping operations for each of the last 10 years; and what form each contribution took.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: United Kingdom assessed contributions to the United Nations for peacekeeping operations for calendar years 1983 to 1992 inclusive are shown in table A.

We also contribute contingents to a number of operations.

Table B shows average manpower totals for FY89/90 onwards and the costs. Figures are not available for personnel involved in peacekeeping operations before 1989.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution has been made by the United Kingdom towards the training of persons involved in peacekeeping by the United Nations in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The preparation and training of United Kingdom personnel participating in United Nations peacekeeping operations is undertaken by the United Kingdom armed forces before each deployment. Over the last 10 years the United Kingdom has contributed personnel to the following peacekeeping operations:

MINURSO—United Nations Mission for the Referendum in the Western Sahara
UNFICYP—United Nations Peackeeping Force in Cyprus
UNIKOM—United Nations Iraq/Kuwait Observer Mission
UNTAC—United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia
UNPROFOR—United Nations Protection Force (in the former Yugoslavia)
UNTAG—United Nations Transitional Assistance Group (Namibia)

Narcotics

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total of the United Kingdom's funding for overseas programmes to combat the production and trade in narcotics in each of the last five years, with each programme shown separately.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The figures for Departments' overseas programmes to combat the production and trade in narcotics for the last five years are as follows:

| | Foreign and Commonwealth Office £ | Overseas Development Administration £ | Home Office £ |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1988-89 | 664,572 | n/a | 1,985,000 |
| 1989-90 | 4,267,927 | 7,941,400 | 2,267,000 |

| 1992-93 | 2,802,303 | 3,627,631 | 4,428,000 |

n/a = not available.

ODA figures relate to projects aimed both directly and indirectly at reducing drug production and trafficking in developing countries.

In addition, £94,000 from the seized asset fund was allocated to drugs-related assistance to overseas governments in 1992-93.

NATIONAL FINANCE

EC Economic Statistics

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current (a) inflation rate, (b) budget surplus or deficit as a percentage of gross domestic product, (c) public debt as a percentage of gross domestic product and (d) long-term interest rate, of each of the EC member states.

Industrial Research and Development

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to offer tax incentives to encourage companies in the United Kingdom to invest in industrial research and development.

Mr. Dorrell: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster's recent White Paper on science and technology reiterated our view that we do not consider there to be a case for further general tax incentives for spending on research and development.

Profit Distribution

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information his Departments has on the percentage of company profits distributed as dividends in each year since 1978 for each G7 country excluding Canada and for Austria, Belgium and the Netherlands.

Mr. Nelson: The available information is provided in the OECD's "National Accounts Volume II", a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library.

Income Tax

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total tax liability of each decile of taxpayers in each year since 1979-80 in (a) current prices and (b) 1979-80 prices; and how many taxpayers were in each decile in each year.

Mr. Dorrell: Estimates are given in the tables. For years up to and including 1989-90 married couples are counted as one taxpayer and their incomes are combined. Following the introduction of independent taxation, for 1990-91 onwards husbands and wives are counted separately. The figures in the table have been rounded to the nearest £100 million and may differ slightly from the totals shown.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the revenue change in a full year at 1993-94 income levels and assuming existing levels of personal allowances of replacing the present rates and thresholds of income tax with a structure in which (a) the first £2,500 incurred tax at 20 per cent., (b) £2,500 to £30,000 at 25 per cent., (c) £30,000 to £50,000 at 30 per cent., (d) £50,000 to £75,000 at 40 per cent., (e) £75,000 to £100,000 at 50 per cent., (f) £100,000 to £250,000 at 60 per cent. and (g) over £250,000 at 70 per cent.

Mr. Dorrell: The estimated revenue cost in a full year at 1993-94 income levels from imposition of the specified regime is £510 million. This does not allow for any behavioural effect that might result from such changes to the tax system and does not include capital gains tax.

New Change Building

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in resolving the dispute concerning outstanding payments to contractors on project 1215 at New Change, EC4 on behalf of the Bank of England; and when Mr. R. Simpson, the managing director of R. M. Simpson Ltd. (Heating Engineers) of London SE26, can expect a reply from the Chief Secretary to his letter to him of 19 March.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 14 June 1993]: I have no record of receiving such a letter, although I now have a copy. My private secretary wrote to Mr. Simpson on 21 June.

Personal Investment Authority

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has about the costs to date of the proposed personal investment authority.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 16 June 1993]: The PIA is a company limited by guarantee which will be applying to the Securities and Investments Board for recognition as a self-regulating organisation under the Financial Services Act. The costs to date are a matter for the company.

Excise Duty

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the value to the Exchequer of excise duty levied on (a) beer, (b) wine and (c) spirits, for the latest financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 21 June 1993]: The information requested, for the year ending March 1993, is as follows:

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| Beer | 2,377 |
| Wine and made wine | 979 |
| Spirits | 1,659 |

NORTHERN IRELAND

Market Testing

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all the market tests that have taken place in his Department since November 1992 and indicate, in each case, whether the result was the maintenance of in-house provision, or whether the service was contracted out.

Mr. Mates: Eleven tests have been completed in Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office since November 1992. Five of these were won by the in-house providers, two by outside contractors and four by a combination of both, as follows:

Transit (computer systems)—Contracted out
Bridge inspection vehicles—Retained in-house
Roadman training centre—Retained in-house
Road testing machines—Retained in-house
Castlenavan Quarry—Combination
Grounds maintenance (two tests)—Retained in-house
Sewer maintenance—Combination
Sludge maintenance (two tests)—Combination
Catering—Contracted out

EC Council of Ministers

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list, together with the respective dates, those meetings of the EC Council of Ministers which were attended by Ministers in his Department in the latest 12 months.

Mr. Mates: None. Northern Ireland's interests like those of the rest of the United Kingdom at EC Council meetings are represented by the Minister with the lead United Kingdom policy responsibility.

Clubs

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he intends to publish in the near future the review of the Registration of Clubs (Northern Ireland) Order 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The review is still in progress. In due course, the Government will publish proposals for amending legislation.

Education and Library Boards

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the annual cost of administering each education and library board in each of the last three years.

Mr. Ancram: The information is as follows:

| Year | Belfast | North-Eastern | South-Eastern | Southern | Western |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | £ million | £ million | £ million | £ million | £ million |
| 1990-91 | 6,229 | 6,840 | 6,727 | 7,227 | 6,365 |
| 1991-92 | 8,903 | 8,962 | 8,080 | 9,155 | 7,496 |
| [1]1992-93 | 7,888 | 7,429 | 6,266 | 7,360 | 6,532 |

[1] Estimated

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the education authorities in Northern Ireland and the total number of pupils for which each education and library board is responsible.

Mr. Ancram: The education authorities in Northern Ireland are the five education and library boards and the total numbers of pupils are as follows:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| Belfast | 66,183 |
| Western | 65,478 |
| Northern-Eastern | 74,328 |
| South-Eastern | 64,300 |
| Southern | 75,030 |

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) full-time and (b) part-time (i) teachers and (ii) other staff were employed in each education and library board area in Northern Ireland in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Ancram: The latest information relates to 1992-93 and is as follows:

| Board Area | Teachers | | Other Staff | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Full-time | Part-time[1] | Full-time | Part-time |
| Belfast | 3,635 | 58 | 1,557 | 2,683 |
| North-Eastern | 3,994 | 118 | 1,741 | 4,365 |
| South-Eastern | 3,410 | 77 | 1,260 | 3,263 |
| Southern | 3,964 | 95 | 1,730 | 4,199 |
| Western | 3,507 | 34 | 1,823 | 4,735 |

[1] Information is not available on the number of part-time teachers. The figures in this column are based on the number of part-time teacher hours worked, expressed as full-time equivalents.

Note: Data for teachers covers all those employed in schools in the boards' areas, but not necessarily by the boards. Figures for other staff relate to boards' staff only.

Education Department

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total number of people employed in the Department of Education (Northern Ireland) in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Ancram: The information is as follows:

| Year | Number |
|---|---|
| 1984 | 568 |
| 1985 | 588·5 |
| 1986 | 602 |
| 1987 | 606 |
| 1988 | 615·5 |
| 1989 | 621 |
| 1990 | 638·5 |
| 1991 | 631 |
| 1992 | 622 |
| 1993 | 655 |

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the annual cost of administering the Department of Education (Northern Ireland) in each of the last three years.

Mr. Ancram: The costs for each of the last three financial years were:

| Year | £ million |
|---|---|
| 1990-91 | 12·5 |
| 1991-92 | 13·0 |
| [1]1992-93 | 14·8 |

[1] Provisional outturn.

Pensions

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the actual and estimated future annual totals for old age pension payments to people resident in Northern Ireland annually from 1990 to the year 2000.

Mr. Ancram: I refer the hon. Member to table 9.22 of the Government's Public Expenditure Plans for Northern Ireland (Cmnd 2216), a copy of which is in the Library. Expenditure plans for the years 1996 to 2000 are not yet available.

European Community Funding

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much of the annual transfers of EC moneys to Northern Ireland are (a) payments to Northern Ireland under each specific EC fund and (b) payments channelled via the United Kingdom Government and not explicitly identified as common agricultural policy transfers or other such transfers.

Mr. Mates: The greatest part of the annual transfers of EC monies to Northern Ireland are made via the United Kingdom Government as payments from either the European regional development fund, the European social fund or the European guidance and guarantee fund (EGGF). Other small payments are made by the European Commission direct to recipients which are not passed through the United Kingdom Government.

The majorty of payments under the guarantee section of the EGGF are made centrally on a United Kingdom basis through the Intervention Board Executive Agency and are not recorded on a territorial basis. There are no other transfers of EC monies to Northern Ireland via the United Kingdom Government.

Babies (Eye Defects)

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list for each year from 1976 to the latest available date, the numbers of babies born in Northern Ireland with (a) no eyes, (b) small eyes, (c) damaged optic nerves and (d) all recorded eye defects; and if he will estimate the comprehensiveness of the recorded information.

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 15 June 1993]: The information is not collated centrally in the form requested. During the years 1980 to 1988, five babies were born in Northern Ireland with no eyes, 47 with small eyes and 28 with cataract. The number of babies born with eye defects between 1976 and 1981 were as follows:

| | No eyes or small eyes | Other eye defects |
|---|---|---|
| 1976 | 2 | 2 |
| 1977 | 2 | 1 |
| 1978 | 2 | 3 |
| 1979 | 12 | 22 |
| 1980 | 12 | 29 |
| 1981 | 12 | 19 |

The Northern Ireland genetics service, which has provided the information, believes it to be reasonably comprehensive.

PRIME MINISTER

Horse Racing

Q7. Mr. Paice: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on Government policy towards the horse racing industry.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

the Government are keen to see the industry prosper and, as my hon. Friend knows, we have in recent months taken various measures to help it to do so. I also welcome the establishment of the new British Horseracing Board and wish it success in its aim of putting racing in this country on a sound financial footing.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what response he is making to the letter on THORP from the Japanese groups delivered to him on 15 June.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

So far as I am aware, no trace of the letter can be found.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his public statements on THORP since November 1990.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave to the right hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown) on 17 June 1993 at columns 987-88.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list those hon. Members with whom he has had meetings to discuss THORP since November 1990.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister meets hon. and right hon. Members regularly and discusses a range of topics.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 22 June.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has been attending a European Council meeting in Copenhagen.

Irish Republic (President)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Prime Minister what has been the cost to the United Kingdom of each visit made by the present President of the Irish Republic to Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Workplace Creches

Ms Abbott: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list, for the Civil Service in the Whitehall area, how many (a) men and women are directly employed, (b) buildings are used and (c) workplace creches are in place, or so much of the information requested as is available.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

In the Whitehall area there were approximately 4,560 men and 3,080 women employed in the home civil service at 1 April 1993.

There are 27 common user estate buildings and two civil service workplace nurseries. A further nursery serving this area is scheduled to open in November. A number of Departments and agencies also have places in a private nursery in the vicinity.

TRANSPORT

British Transport Police

Sir Anthony Durant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the Government's conclusions on the response to the consultation document "The Future Status of British Transport Police".

Mr. Freeman: We have today issued our conclusions on the consultation exercise and I am arranging for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House. I welcome this opportunity of confirming our decisions that overall control will remain in the public sector; that a provision in the operator's licence will make it compulsory to use BTP for the administration of law and order on the railway; and that there will be levels of policing laid down which operators will be required to provide.

The Government do not intend to change the policing of London Underground. The London Underground area of the BTP will continue largely as at present to provide these services.

A5 (Dunstable Bypass)

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the target date of autumn 1993 for the publication of draft orders under the Highways Act for the A5 Dunstable bypass stated in the letter from the then Minister for Roads and Traffic to the hon. Member for South West Bedfordshire of 23 March remains in place.

Mr. Key: We hope to publish draft orders next spring. The delay results from a need to examine more fully the environmental impact of the road on the sensitive areas through which it passes. I will write to the hon. Member.

Air Accident Report

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on air accident report 3/93; and what action he plans to take, and when, on the recommendations in this report.

Mr. Norris: This accident report, by my Department's air accident investigation branch (AAIB), relates to an incident on 9 March 1992, when an aircraft suffered damage soon after take-off from Frankfurt and diverted to London Heathrow. The AAIB has made a thorough analysis of this incident and its causes and consequences and have produced a valuable and comprehensive report.

The AAIB has made two recommendations, directed at the Civil Aviation Authority (CAA). These recommendations have been accepted and the appropriate alterations will be included in the next amendment to the Manual of Air Traffic Control Part I, due on 28 June 1993.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date he sent a copy of air accident report 3/93 to the Library.

Mr. Norris: No copies of air accident report 3/93 were sent to the Library. Copies of AAIB reports are sent to the Library in the event of accidents and incidents likely to attract considerable public interest or where Members have indicated a particular interest in the investigation.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many hon. Members were sent copies of air accident report 3/93 when it was published on 9 June.

Mr. Norris: None. The air accidents investigation branch (AAIB) send copies of their reports to all Members of Parliament who express an interest in a particular investigation.

The AAIB published an interim bulletin on this accident in June 1992 but no Members indicated an interest in receiving a copy of the formal investigation report.

Railway Track Support Grant

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will require a reassessment of rail freight rates in light of the proposed track support grant; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if the track support grant is to be made available to the Cambrian coast railway; and if he will make a statement;

(3) when he expects to make an announcement regarding the level and distribution of track support grant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We envisage that Railtrack will be able to accept on to the rail network any freight flow which can cover its avoidable costs. The track charge grant is aimed at assisting flows which cannot cover those costs. It follows that grant will be flow specific, not route specific. The public expenditure provision for the new grant will be determined in the course of the current public expenditure planning round.

Taxis

Dame Angela Rumbold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps will be taken under the new proposed regulations to ensure that ex-licensed black cabs are not used for other taxi purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: At present, the law requires that when a vehicle licensed as a taxi in London is sold, or the licence has expired without plans for renewal, the vehicle licence plate must be returned to the licensing authority. Once this has been done the taxi becomes a private vehicle and although it can be used as a minicab, it is an offence to use it to ply for hire. In addition, the display of any sign or notice on it which includes the words "taxi", "cab" or "hire" is prohibited.

Outside London, a London-type taxi may be used as a hackney carriage if it is licensed by the local district council, but it may not be used as a private hire vehicle at all because it might be mistaken for a taxi. If unlicensed it may be used as a private car only.

Dame Angela Rumbold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is proposing to take to enforce prosecution of unlicensed minicabs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Minicabs in London are not licensed, and their use for pre-booked journeys is perfectly legal. It is illegal for them to accept hirings in the street. The police already have powers to take action in such cases.

I am, however, reviewing the regulation of taxis, minicabs and private hire vehicles in England, including London, and I hope to publish a Green Paper on this subject shortly.

A418

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when his Department will publish its proposals for the A418 trunk route in Buckinghamshire.

Mr. Key: Preparations are in hand to consult the public about the A418 west of Aylesbury to Wing proposals later this year.

Portwood Roundabout

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to give the approval and finance for the installation of traffic lights at the Portwood roundabout giving access to the M66.

Mr. Key: Approval has already been given to install lights on the Portwood roundabout so that traffic leaving the M63 does not queue on the motorway. Funds have been made available to carry out the work this financial year.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Milk

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what plans she has to help the milk industry following the reduction of EC financial support for the school milk scheme; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what is her policy towards the provision of subsidised school milk; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Until the Commission presents its detailed proposals for expenditure under the school milk scheme in 1994, I am not able to make a clear statement of future policy in this area.

Common Land

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans she has to introduce legislation regarding common land and overgrazing; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: As regards legislation concerning common land, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn) on 8 June at col. 291.

Environmentally damaging overgrazing on common land and elsewhere is being tackled under legislation covering hill livestock compensatory allowances (HLCAs) and the environmentally sensitive areas scheme. We plan to adjust other livestock premiums to complement the action already being taken on HLCAs. In addition, we have carried out consultations on a new moorland scheme which will also contribute to reducing overgrazing.

Ewe and Suckler Cow Premiums

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the criteria by which the national reserve of ewe and suckler cow premium is distributed to applicants.

Mrs. Shephard: The categories to be covered by the national reserve were the subject of a consultation exercise, and the details are currently being finalised. The necessary national legislation will be made later in the summer.

New Farmers

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what capital incentives are available to make farming more accessible to new entrants.

Mrs. Shephard: No capital incentives available are aimed specifically at new entrants to the farming industry. However, young farmers (those under 40) taking out first improvement plans under the farm conservation grant scheme are eligible for additional grant of 25 per cent. of the normal rates of grant towards the cost of capital investments of benefit to conservation and the environment.

CAP Fraud

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the total amount of expenditure by the EC's administration concerned with seeking out fraud in the operation of the comon agricultural policy over the most recent 12 months for which figures are available; what is the value of the fraudulent activities which they discovered during this period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: A number of units within the Commission have an interest in dealing with CAP fraud. Information on their administrative costs is not available as the general budget of European Communities does not give this detail.

The Commission's annual report on the fight against fraud includes details of CAP fraud and irregularities and measures to combat these. The 1992 report and action programme for 1993, COM(93)141 final, was the subject of explanatory memorandum 6203/93 of 20 May 1993 submitted by the Paymaster General. A copy of the report was placed in the Library of the House.

Redundant Farm Buildings

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what grant aid is available for the purpose of restoring redundant farm houses and associated buildings in order that they may once again form the basis of an active farming unit.

Mrs. Shephard: My Department does not offer grant aid for the restoration of redundant dwellings on farms. However, grants are available under the farm and conservation grant scheme for the repair or refurbishment of traditional farm buildings currently in agricultural use using traditional materials and construction methods.

EMPLOYMENT

Disabled People

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to improve the way his Department gives assistance towards meeting the employment needs of people with disabilities.

Mr. David Hunt: I have asked the Employment Service to introduce a new major programme for people with disabilities from 1 April 1994. It will be called "access to work" and will assist people who need help to overcome barriers to work resulting from disabilities.

Access to work replaces and adds to the help currently available under the special aids to employment, adaptations to premises and equipment, fares and work, and personal reader service schemes, which will be wound up. More people with a wider range of needs will be helped. Assistance will no longer be limited to prescribed, specific forms. Within resources available, it will be provided flexibly to meet need.

Access to work will be open to unemployed, employed or self-employed clients registerable as disabled with priority for unemployed people. New forms of help available will include communication support for deaf people, adaptations of vehicles to get to work, and support workers for people with severe physical disabilities, mental illness or with learning difficulties.

In addition, from 5 July 1993, unemployed deaf people will be able to get help towards the cost of communicators at job interviews. Trials of other forms of communicator support for deaf people entering employment will be taking place in four locations during 1993. Lessons learned will be taken into account in access to work.

Under access to work there will be an upper limit, at a level to be specified as soon as possible, to the amount of financial help any one individual can receive over a five year period, but entitlement to support will begin again after five years. Employers will be asked to make a 50 per cent. contribution towards assistance for employees who have worked for them for six months or more. These contributions will be capped over the five year period at a level to be specified. Employers will also be expected to pay for the cost of one-off items of equipment or help costing less than £100 for their employees who have worked for them for six months or more. Employers will not be asked for any contribution for new recruits or employees who have worked with them for less than six months.

The job introduction scheme, which encourages employers to take on people with disabilities for short trial periods, will continue separately. The business on own account scheme, which currently provides assistance with general business setting up costs to only a very small number of severely disabled people, will be discontinued. However, those wanting to enter self-employment will be eligible for help under access to work.

I believe that the introduction of access to work will be an important step in helping to release, in the workplace, the individual potential and initiative of people with disabilities and to meet their employment needs.

CBI

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he will next meet the chairman of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss training issues.

Miss Widdecombe: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is looking forward to an early meeting. Such meetings are held regularly.

Youth Unemployment

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in the borough of Rochdale have been unemployed for more than a year.

Miss Widdecombe: Information on claimant unemployment by duration is available quarterly and on the unadjusted basis only.

In April 1993, in the Rochdale local authority district, there were 3,586 claimants who had been unemployed for more than one year.

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the measures taken to reduce unemployment in the 18 to 25 years age group.

Miss Widdecombe: All unemployed people in the 18 to 25 years age group are eligible, subject to qualifying criteria, for the full range of employment, enterprise and training measures available through the employment service, training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies. This is in addition to the advice and placement help which the employment service offers all unemployed people through its job centre network.

Fishing Companies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many fishing companies went into liquidation from 1975 and passed their obligation to pay redundancy to his Department; and how many fishermen were paid redundancy in each case.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is not available in the form requested.

Unemployment, Barnsley

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for each of the three Barnsley constituencies the latest figures for (a) unemployment, (b) those who have been unemployed for one year, (c) those who have been out of work for at least five years and (d) those on training courses.

Miss Widdecombe: Information on claimant unemployment by duration is available quarterly, for the months of January, April, July and October, and on the unadjusted basis. The information requested is given in the table.

Information on the numbers of people on training courses is collected at training and enterprise council (TEC) level and shows that in March 1993 there were 6,300 people on employment training and youth training courses in the Barnsley and Doncaster TEC area.

Non-seasonally-adjusted claimant unemployment by duration—April 1993

| | Total | Unemployed over one year | Unemployed over five years |
|---|---|---|---|
| Barnsley Central | 4,329 | 1,746 | 233 |
| Barnsley East | 3,892 | 1,478 | 242 |
| Barnsley West and Penistone | 4,016 | 1,437 | 205 |

Redundancies

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will now publish the Government's case to the European Court of Justice concerning employee representation under the EC Collective Redundancies Directive 1975.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 14 June at column 451.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many redundancies were notified in the latest year for which figures are available, expressed as a percentage of the total work force in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the north-west and (c) the travel-to-work areas of Accrington and Rossendale, Blackburn, Burnley and Pendle in east Lancashire.

Miss Widdecombe: Data on redundancies are obtained from the quarterly Labour Force Survey which provides figures for Great Britain only. Estimates of the numbers of redundancies, in the three months prior to each survey, are shown in the table. Information for travel-to-work areas is not available.

| | Great Britain | Percentage of employees | North West | Percentage of employees |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Spring 1992 | 322,000 | 1·5 | 32,000 | 1·4 |
| Summer 1992 | 278,000 | 1·3 | 35,000 | 1·5 |
| Autumn 1992 | 310,000 | 1·4 | 29,000 | 1·2 |
| Winter 1992 | 344,000 | 1·6 | 45,000 | 1·9 |

Disabled People

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action has been undertaken to date by his Department to implement the recommendations of the EC Council of Ministers in 1986 on the subject of disabled people and employment within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Many of the issues covered by the EC Council of Ministers' recommendations had already been addressed by the United Kingdom prior to 1986. Since then we have:

- carried out a thorough review of all our employment and training provision for people with disabilities;
- undertaken wide-ranging consultations on proposals to improve the effectiveness of that provision;
- improved the local specialist disability services for employers and individuals by introducing placing assessment and counselling teams;
- ensured that equal opportunities principles apply to the delivery of training provision through training and enterprise councils and local enterprise councils;
- made delivery of employment rehabilitation more accessible locally through contracts with the voluntary sector;
- introduced a disability symbol so that employers who are committed to employing people with disabilities can communicate this publicly. The symbol was strengthened from 1 June 1993 so that employers who use the symbol now have to agree to five specific commitments to action relating to good employment practices;
- taken positive action to ensure that people with disabilities have priority for a place on each of the Department's main employment and training programmes for which they are suitable and eligible;
- announced improvements to our special schemes, which through the introduction of access to work next year, will increase both the range of help available to disabled people to overcome barriers to work and the number of disabled people who can be helped;
- reviewed the funding arrangements for our sheltered employment and will shortly be issuing a consultative document with proposals to improve their effectiveness.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy to issue guidelines to employers outlining what constitutes reasonable cause for the dismissal of a registered disabled person.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is a question of fact for the court to decide whether there is reasonable cause under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 for a particular dismissal. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is not given any statutory power to lay down guidelines of the kind suggested.

Guidance to employers on their obligations under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 is given in a leaflet "Employers Obligations—Notes for Guidance" which is issued by the employment service.

Advice to employers on employing disabled people, whether or not they are registered, is contained in the code of practice on the employment of disabled people available from the employment service. This is a voluntary code and there is no legal obligation on employers to observe it. We would expect that if an employer acted in accordance with the guidance and spirit of the code it would be most unlikely that a court would hold him or her to have acted unreasonably.

Hazardous Substances

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of the implementation of paragraphs 77 and 78 of the approved code of practice in regard to the survey conducted under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The impact of paragraphs 77 and 78 (regarding the monitoring of exposure to hazardous substances at the workplace) was covered in a two-part survey on the regulations, carried out by inspectors from the Health and Safety Executive and local authorities.

The full report of the evaluation will be published in July and I will arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library.

Manufacturing Jobs

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has about the number of manufacturing jobs in each European Community region in each year since 1980; and what proportion of the regional total number of jobs they represented.

Miss Widdecombe: Statistics on employment by European Community region are published by the EC Statistical office in a series of reports entitled "Regional Statistics". Published reports covering years up to 1985 are available in the Library. Reports covering later years are in preparation but no publication date has yet been announced.

Maternity Provisions

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to implement the new maternity provisions set out in the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill before October 1994.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: All the provisions of the EC Pregnant Workers Directive will be implemented in United Kingdom law by October 1994, as the directive requires.

Job Losses, Stoke on Trent

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what meetings he, or officers in his Department or agencies or consultancies under his Department, have organised to discuss the effect of job losses in Stoke on Trent.

Miss Widdecombe: Meetings are held when appropriate by officials of the Employment Department, the employment service and the Staffordshire training and enterprise council to discuss the effect of job losses in Stoke on Trent. The most recent meeting was held on 6 May 1993 and another is planned for 28 July.

DEFENCE

Gulf War (Depleted Uranium)

13. Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the use of depleted uranium during Operation Desert Storm.

Mr. Hanley: Depleted uranium was used by coalition forces in tank armour and ammunition. British use in the conflict was confined to a small number of rounds of tank ammunition.

Royal Naval Engineering College, Manadon

14. Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the consultation on the proposals to close the Royal Naval Engineering college at Manadon to be completed.

Mr. Hanley: Comments on the consultative document which outlines our proposals for the future of the Royal Navy first degree engineer officer training and the Royal Naval Engineering college, Manadon, a copy of which is in the Library of the House have been requested by 1 July 1993. In response to a request from the trades unions however I am happy to announce an extension of 10 working days.

Service Accommodation (Cyprus)

15. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the capital expenditure used in the provision of new and renovated accommodation for (a) families and (b) single service personnel in Cyprus for the past five years.

Mr. Hanley: In the five financial years ending on 31 March 1993, capital expenditure on service families' accommodation in Cyprus has been £13,191,000, all of which was for new accommodation. Capital expenditure on accommodation for single service personnel has been £8,897,000 of which £7,384,000 was for new accommodation and £1,513,000 for renovation.

International Commitments

16. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received about the ability of existing regiments and battalions to meet all current international commitments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: I have received a number of representations from hon. Members and their constituents. The Government's position is set out in its response to the Defence Committee's Second Report, Session 1992-93, on "Britain's Army for the 90s", which the Committee published on 16 June.

Exports

17. Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will assess the share of the world market achieved by British defence exports in 1992 and so far in 1993.

Mr. Aitken: In 1992, Britain's share of the world defence export market (in terms of new contracts let) was 20 per cent.—putting us in second place only to the United States of America. Based on our achievements so far this year we believe that we are on course to retain this market share.

Overseas Service

18. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many armed forces personnel are currently serving on duty outside the United Kingdom; and in which principal locations.

Mr. Hanley: On 1 April 1993, the number of United Kingdom regular forces serving overseas was 70,436. The main locations were:

Continental Europe (including former Yugoslavia)
Cyprus
Elsewhere in the Mediterranean, near east and Gulf
Hong Kong
Elsewhere in the far east and Gibraltar.

Bosnia

19. Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to meet other EC Defence Ministers to discuss the deployment of troops in Bosnia.

Mr. Rifkind: I met a number of my European colleagues at a meeting of NATO's Defence Planning Committee in Brussels on 25 May. Our discussions covered a wide range of issues, including the deployment of forces in the former Yugoslavia. I keep in regular contact with other European Defence Ministers on such matters, which remain under continuous review.

Job Opportunities (North Yorkshire)

20. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement about Ministry of Defence job opportunities in North Yorkshire.

Mr. Aitken: Plans that will result in the reduction, rationalisation and transfer-out of posts in North Yorkshire have already been announced, and work is continuing to ensure that a cost-effective balance is achieved between our front-line forces and supporting infrastructure, but I can assure the hon. Member that there will continue to be a large MOD presence in the county.

Royal Naval Reserve

21. Ms Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make an announcement on the future of the Royal Naval Reserve.

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the announcement made by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 17 June at columns 1009-12.

United Nations Peacekeeping

22. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many United Nations peacekeeping and other operations involve British service men and women; and what are the numbers posted to these operations.

Mr. Hanley: As at early June the numbers of British service personnel serving with United Nations operations was as follows:

|---|---|
| Former Yugoslavia (UNPROFOR) | 2,446 |
| Cyprus (UNFICYP) | 592 |
| Cambodia (UNTAC) | 122 |
| Western Sahara (MINURSO) | 15 |
| Iraq-Kuwait (UNIKOM) | 15 |

Hydrographic Department

23. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the planned work of the Hydrographic Department.

Mr. Hanley: The Ministry of Defence Hydrographic Department will continue to provide specialist input to defence programmes and plans and specialist advice to other Government Departments.

Departmental Residential Property

24. Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on empty residential property owned by his Department.

Mr. Hanley: Empty residential properties which are surplus to long term requirements are sold wherever possible. Empty properties which are required in the long term but for which there is no immediate need are wherever possible leased to local authorities and over 900 properties are currently on lease in this way. Not all empty properties are surplus to requirements however as some are undergoing major maintenance or refurbishment and others are earmarked for incoming families and future deployments.

Exports

25. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps his Department is taking to assist United Kingdom defence industries to increase the proportion of their output supplied to overseas markets.

Mr. Aitken: Within my Department, the Defence Export Services Organisation assists United Kingdom defence industry market and sells its products and services overseas. We provide a wide range of advice and services including the promotion of exhibitions, the compilation of market surveys, help with foreign contacts and the offer of training and advice to customer countries.

Yugoslavia

26. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British troops are in former Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: On 15 June there were 2,608 British forces personnel on the ground in the former Yugoslavia.

Eurofighter

27. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the meetings he has held with his European colleagues about the progress of the Eurofighter 2000 so far in 1993.

Mr. Aitken: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has not discussed Eurofighter 2000 with his German, Italian and Spanish counterparts this year. I met the State Secretaries of the partner nations on 5 April in Bonn to review progress on the project and I have discussed this matter with my German counterpart, Herr Schönbohm, on two further occasions.

29. Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next plans to meet his European colleagues to discuss the Eurofighter 2000.

Mr. Aitken: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to meet his German, Italian and Spanish counterparts to discuss Eurofighter 2000.

Belize

28. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on the timetable for withdrawal of the British garrison from Belize.

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 14 June at col. 475 and the answer that my right hon. Friend the Member for Watford gave my hon. Friend the Member for Bosworth (Mr. Tredinnick) on 13 May at cols 561-62.

Market Testing

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the market tests that have taken place in his Department since November 1992 and indicate, in each case, whether the result was the maintenance of in-house provision, or whether the service was contracted out.

Mr. Aitken: The information requested is as follows:

| Activity | Result In house/ Contractorised |
|---|---|
| Flight checking services 115 Squadron—RAF Benson | Contractorised |
| Domestic services Gateway house—RAF Brize Norton | Retained in house |
| Engineering and Supply/Multi-activity contract RAF Scampton | Contractorised |
| Elementary flying training RAF Topcliffe | Contractorised |
| Catering—A and AEE Boscombe Down | Contractorised |

| Activity | Result In house/ Contractorised |
|---|---|
| Grounds maintenance Royal Marine Establishments | Retained in house |
| Domestic and administration services Wethersfield | Contractorised |

HEALTH

Mental Hospitals

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many mental hospitals there were in each region and nationally in each of the last 15 years.

Mr. Bowis: The available information is shown in the table.

| All psychiatric hospitals | 1978 | 1979 | 1980 | 1981 | 1982 | 1983 | 1984 | 1985 | 1986 | 1987-88 | 1988-89 | 1989-90 | 1990-91 |

For years 1987-88 to 1990-91 mental handicap community units have been excluded. These units can generally be defined as facilities staffed by the NHS and managed separately from any hospital, which is located in the community, and provides not more than 24 residential places for people with learning disabilities.

Neonatal Units

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many neonatal units there were in each of the last five years; and how many of these units had a named consultant in charge.

Mr. Sackville: The information available on the number of neonatal units in the last five years is shown in the table. Every baby in a neonatal intensive care cot will have a consultant paediatrician who is responsible for that baby's care.

Dioxins

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she has taken to calculate the effect of dioxins on humans.

Mr. Sackville: The expert Advisory Committee on the Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment has reviewed the toxicology of dioxins on a number of occasions. It has set a tolerable daily intake (TDI) for dioxins of 10 picograms per kilogram body weight per day. Provided that individual intakes of dioxins do not exceed this level no risk to health is anticipated.

Hospital Services, London

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she plans to publish the reports of the six reviews of specialties in London; and what role their advice will play in decisions about the future of hospital services in London.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The specialty reviews will be published in full tomorrow and copies will be placed in the Library and Vote Office at 10.30 am. The chairmen of the review teams will hold a press conference to coincide with the publication.

The Government set out their proposals for improving the National Health Service in London in "Making London Better", published on 16 February, copies of which are available in the Library. The specialty reviews were announced then, in response to a recommendation in Sir Bernard Tomlinson's report. The independent review teams were established to address the extensive duplication and fragmentation of services in six specialties (cancer; cardiac; neurosciences; renal; plastic surgery and children's specialist services) and make recommendations on their future disposition. Their reports are independent advice to Ministers and the NHS, not statements of Government policy.

Work on developing the proposals set out in "Making London Better" has progressed well since February. The recommendations of the specialty reviews represent a further necessary stage in that process, but not its conclusion. The review recommendations will form part of a complex jigsaw of factors informing decisions about the future pattern of services in London. The recommendations will be fed into the local process—already well under way—of developing sensible and sustainable proposals which meet the Government's objectives of improved patient care, support for excellence in teaching and research and value for money. Academic interests must be taken into account. Above all, proposals must be supported by NHS purchasers, reflecting patient preferences through the internal health market. No decisions are being taken to close any hospital, or make major service changes, on the basis of the specialty reviews alone.

"Making London Better" set out a timetable for long-term change. Clearly, some issues will be resolved more quickly than others. We anticipate that the main proposals for the future configuration of services will be put forward in the autumn. Proposals for major changes to services would, of course, be subject to full statutory public consultation, according to established procedures.

Persistent Vegetative State

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the implications of the case of Anthony Bland for the funding by the national health service of the care of patients who have been in PVS for more than one year in cases where the patient's family wish treatment to continue.

Mr. Sackville: None. Decisions on the care of patients in persistent vegetative state (PVS) are made by doctors in consultation with the care team and the patient's relatives/friends. Treatment of PVS patients, in common with all chronically ill long-stay patients, is funded from national health service resources.

WALES

Pensions

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) members and (b) dependants are currently in receipt of (a) civil service pensions, (b) NHS pensions, (c) teachers' pensions, (d) armed forces pensions and (e) local government pensions in Wales; and what is the average amount of pension for (i) members and (ii) dependants in each category.

Mr. Redwood: Separate information for Wales on civil service, national health service, teachers and armed forces pension recipients is not readily available. Figures for the eight Welsh county councils, which include 77 other bodies whose superannuation funds are run by these councils, are given in the table.

Pensions and Annuities, 1991-92

| | Number at 31 March 1992 | Average Pension/annuity[1] (£ per person) |
|---|---|---|
| Retired employees | 36,952 | 2,396 |
| Dependants | 8,128 | 894 |

Source: Local Government Superannuation Funds returns.

Cardiff Bay Development Corporation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 11 June, Official Report, column 346-48, if he will list the urban investment grants given by the Cardiff Bay development corporation, over the past eight quarters broken down by the same statistical headings.

Mr. Redwood: The information is as follows:
Project—NCM relocation
Developer—ABP (Grosvenor Waterside)
Grant paid—£550,000 (January-March 1993)
Total grant approved—£2·5 million
Private investment—£14·5 million
Forecast permanent jobs—400

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many urban investment grants have been made in excess of £250,000 by the Cardiff Bay development corporation; to which property developers or owners they have been made; and how many other offers the corporation has made of over £250,000 which were not taken up.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the details of urban investment grants made by Cardiff Bay development corporation in the reply given today. The corporation has made no other offers over £250,000 which were not taken up.

Quarrying

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by mineral planning authority the number of quarrying prohibition orders that have been issued, the number of appeals that have been made against them, and the inspector's decision in each case, over the last 10 years.

Mr. Redwood: There has been one. The order was made by Mid Glamorgan county council in respect of Ewenny quarry at Bridgend. Two objections were made to the order and following a public inquiry the inspector recommended that the order be not confirmed. The former Secretary of State accepted that recommendation and his decision was issued accordingly. There is at present an application by the county council before the High Court challenging the decision.

European Parliamentary Constituencies

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the review of boundaries for European parliamentary constituencies in Wales to be completed; and what consultations he proposes to hold on the membership of the committee to conduct such a review.

Mr. Redwood: These are matters for my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary.

Local Education Authorities

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the expenditure on administration by each local authority in each of the last three years.

Mr. Redwood: Information for 1989-90 and earlier years is not available on a consistent basis and is not yet available for 1992-93. The information available is given in the table:

Local education authority net current expenditure on administration

|---|---|---|
| Clwyd | 5,992 | 7,903 |

n/a = Not available.

Flooding, Llandudno

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people registered at the emergency centres during the recent flood at Llandudno; how many were offered alternative accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr.Redwood: Aberconwy borough council reports that some 3,800 people have so far registered at the emergency centres at Llandudno and Conwy. Of these, about 2,500 have been offered alternative accommodation, but the number requiring medium to long-term alternative accommodation is thought to be nearer 1,000. The borough council is, of course, continually updating these figures.

Linseed

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to ensure that Welsh linseed farmers will be paid the same as their English counterparts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Payment rates for linseed have been calculated under the rules of the arable aid payment scheme. The yield regions for future years are under discussion.

Craft Industry

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to help the craft industry in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The craft industry makes an important contribution to the economic and cultural life of Wales and a wide range of assistance is available from the Welsh Development Agency, Development Board for Rural Wales and the Welsh Arts Council

Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 17 June, Official Report, column 728, in which non-departmental public body each vacancy exists; and for how long the vacancy has existed.

Mr. Redwood: The information requested is shown in the following table. Since 11 June, two vacancies have been filled: one on the Sports Council for Wales and one on the Board of the Cardiff Bay development corporation.

Appointments made by the Secretary of State for Wales

Strategic Planning Guidance

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answers of 27 May, Official Report, column 716, and 17 June, Official Report, column 726, what plans he has for arrangements for remuneration of the Assembly of Welsh Counties for its costs in (a) carrying out the strategic planning guidance exercise and (b) publicising it.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply my right hon. Friend gave to him on 27 May.

ENVIRONMENT

Environmental Management

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to participate in the Institute of Waste Management conference in Torbay from 15 to 18 June; and what recent meeting he has had with officials of the institute regarding the completion of waste management legislation.

Mr. Yeo: I addressed the opening session of the Institute of Waste Management conference on Tuesday 15 June. I shall be meeting representatives of the institute and of the National Association of Waste Disposal Contractors and local authority associations soon to discuss waste management licensing.

New Age Travellers

Mr. Aspinwall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what legal action he intends to take to remove (a) the new age travellers and (b) their vehicles trespassing on land at Gipsy lane, Burnett, Avon, owned by his Department; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what measures he intends to take to protect the Wynne family from disturbance arising from trespass of vehicles occupied by new age travellers on his department's land adjacent to their home at Gipsy lane, Burnett, Avon;

(3) what discussions he has held with the chief constable of Avon and Somerset about removal of illegal trespassers from his Department's land at Gipsy lane, Burnett, Avon;

(4) when he intends to introduce measures (a) to end the open-ended financial commitment to meet new age travellers' accommodation needs and (b) to give local authorities stronger powers to deal quickly with illegal camping.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State directed Avon county council in 1990 under the Caravan Sites Act 1968 to make additional accommodation available for gypsies as only one site had been provided in Avon at that time. It is for the council to comply with that statutory directon and determine where sites should be located.

I announced legislative proposals on 31 March 1993 to give local authorities stronger powers to tackle illegal camping and to repeal the duty to provide sites and the power to provide grant. I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my right hon. Friend, the Member for Woking (Sir C. Onslow) on 31 March at column 291. But the duty remains in force until it is repealed and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State remains responsible for ensuring that Avon county council complies with the duty and the direction.

PSA services offered this surplus former Crown Suppliers depot at Burnett for sale on the open market in October last year and the council made an offer to purchase the property in order to develop it as a gipsy caravan site. Travellers have camped illegally on the site since the council's intentions became public.

PSA services, as current owner of the site is preparing to take action for possession under order 113 of the rules of the supreme court.

PSA services and its agents, Building Management South and West have liaised with the police on handling throughout, and have had discussions with Mr. and Mrs. Wynne about their position. I understand that a gated fence has been erected to prevent encroachment by the travellers on to Mr. and Mrs. Wynne's property.

It is open to the council to apply for Exchequer grant to cover the capital costs of developing this site if it obtains planning permission to develop it as a gipsy caravan site. Gipsies are defined in the 1968 Act as "persons of nomadic habit of life whatever their race or origin" and it is for the council to decide who is or is not a gipsy, and to ensure that sites are only provided for—and used by gipsies.

The cost of providing an authorised site on this land for gipsies, as defined in section 16 of the Caravan Sites Act 1968, has been estimated by Avon county council as £795,500.

Methane Emissions

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what prospects there are for reducing methane emissions from closed landfill sites; and what licensing requirements he will make for (a) existing and (b) new landfill sites in respect of methane emissions.

Mr. Yeo: The Government have published guidance on dealing with gas from closed landfill sites, and is undertaking further work on methods of controlling methane emissions. Resources are made available to authorities for investigation and remedial measures by means of supplementary credit approvals.

Conditions in individual waste disposal licences are a matter for waste regulation authorities. The Government issue guidance to authorities on the discharge of their licensing functions. In particular, revised guidance on landfill gas was issued as Waste Management Paper No. 27 in 1991; further guidance on licensing, which will deal with the need to control methane emissions, is in preparation.

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research has been undertaken by his Department into methane gas emissions from landfill sites.

Mr. Yeo: The Department recently commissioned the Energy Technology Support Unit (ETSU) of the Department of Trade and Industry to conduct a preliminary study on the subject. Their report was made available in draft form to the Watt committee and to the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution for their study of waste incineration. The final report will shortly be available as a departmental research report.

The ETSU study showed that there is considerable uncertainty about the contribution of landfills to United Kingdom methane emissions. Preliminary estimates lie in the range of 0·6 to 5·3 Mt/year, with a best estimate of about 2 Mt/year. Given the level of uncertainty in the input level, it is not possible to predict the level of emissions to within a factor of two of the best estimate. There are two main sources of uncertainty: waste arisings data and information on the amount of methane oxidation that occurs close to the surface of a landfill.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the cost to the United Kingdom economy of implementing the carbon dioxide targets agreed at Toronto in 1988.

Mr. Yeo: No targets were agreed by the United Kingdom Government at Toronto in 1988.

Community Charge

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in rank order all local authorities in England showing receipts of community charge in 1992-93 as a percentage of the expected yield.

Mr. Baldry: I am arranging for the information requested to be placed in the Library of the House.

Landfill Directive

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the revised version of the EC landfill directive from the European Commission.

Mr. Yeo: The European Commission has indicated that they expect to present their revised proposals for a landfill directive towards the end of June.

Local Government Holidays

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many extra-statutory holidays, in addition to bank holidays, are enjoyed by employees in local government.

Mr. Curry: This is entirely a matter for local government. We understand from the Local Government Management Board (the employers organisation) that in addition to statutory and other general national holidays, national agreements entitle local government employees to a further two extra-statutory holidays the timing of which are determined by local authorities after consultation with their employees.

Biodiversity

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 7 June, Official Report, column 113, if he will make a statement on the issues discussed and decisions taken at the Trondheim biodiversity conference in May.

Mr. Yeo: The Trondheim conference on biodiversity, convened by the United Nations Environment Programme, discussed a large range of issues associated with the provisions of the convention on biological diversity. This was one of a number of meetings being held to provide expert opinion which will inform the decisions to be made by the intergovernmental negotiating committee and in time by the conference of the parties to the convention.

Building Management South-East

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what steps he is taking to remedy the management and control weaknesses which have been identified by the investigation of his Department's internal audit and central inquiry unit into allegations of irregularities at BMSE contracting division;

(2) if he will name the contractor whose activities have given rise to concern to his Department's internal audit and central inquiry unit during its investigation into allegations of irregularities at BMSE contracting division;

(3) if he will place in the Library a copy of the findings of his Department's internal audit and central inquiry unit's investigation into allegations of financial irregularities in the BMSE contracting division.

Mr. Curry: The following steps have been taken to remedy the management and control weaknesses identified by the internal audit and central inquiry unit investigations:

- an experienced civil service senior manager was brought in to take overall charge of Building Management South East contracting division while a detailed recovery plan was prepared
- the contracts of two members of staff have not been renewed
- a new financial controller has been appointed
- a management action plan has been agreed and implementation of it is being monitored by the BMSE board

I do not propose to name the contractor whose activities have given rise to concern, as investigations into the case continue.

It is not customary to place copies of internal audit and central inquiry unit reports in the Library. They are available to the staff of the Comptroller and Auditor General in the usual way.

Waste Incineration

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to respond to the Royal Commission on environmental pollution report on waste incineration; and if he will indicate the nature of his proposed response.

Mr. Yeo: The Government have welcomed the report from the Royal Commission on environment pollution on the incineration of waste as a comprehensive and clear analysis of the role of incineration as a waste management option. It describes incineration in a positive and reassuring light and is likely to go a long way to offsetting public concerns about incineration. The Government will be making a full response to the commission's report in due course.

Community Care Housing

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will ensure that the Housing Corporation capital funding to meet community care housing needs is maintained at or above the 1989-90 levels; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to increase the Housing Corporation capital funding to meet community care housing needs for new schemes to allow new building levels to equal the 1989-90 level.

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will increase the proportion of Housing Corporation capital funding to meet new schemes for community care housing needs to levels at or above those given in 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The Housing Corporation continues to provide support for 3,000 special needs bed spaces a year, which attract revenue funding from the special needs management allowance. The corporation also provides capital support for further units of accommodation—up to 1,500 in the current year—suitable for people with special needs, but not requiring revenue support. No decisions have yet been taken about future levels of expenditure.

There are many ways of meeting the housing needs arising from community care, including general needs social housing funded by the corporation, in which tenants can receive non-residential care support. Overall, resources for the corporation's approved development programme have been doubled from £935 million in 1989-90 to over £1·8 billion this year.

The corporation's allocations to housing associations are made in response to the housing strategies prepared by local housing authorities. They in turn are consulted by the social services agencies about their community care strategies.

Housing (Elderly People)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the housing needs of people over 80 years in Stoke on Trent, North constituency and in the United Kingdom as a whole.

Mr. Baldry: The Department commissioned Ernst and Young management consultants to carry out an independent study of the housing needs of elderly and disabled people, including those aged 80 years and over. The study has been completed and a series of reports covering different elements of the programme of research is being prepared.

The Ernst and Young study is restricted to England and will produce representative findings at national and regional levels. Separate studies of the housing needs of elderly and disabled people have been undertaken in recent years by the Scottish Office and the Northern Ireland Office.

Guidance to local housing authorities will be produced, using the Ernst and Young research, on methods for assessing the needs of elderly people and the comparative costs of different housing and care options to meet their needs. This guidance is referred to in paragraph 18 of the joint circular (10/92) issued by my Department and the Department of Health on housing and community care.

Leasehold Reform, Housing and Urban Development Bill (Advisory Body)

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to establish an advisory body in respect of the provisions of the Leasehold Reform, Housing and Urban Development Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I have announced that the Government are prepared to contribute, for up to three years, towards the cost of a body giving advice on the leasehold reform provisions of the Bill. The Leasehold Reform Co-ordinating Committee has prepared a scheme for an advisory agency and is presently seeking to attract funding from various professional bodies and other organisations.

Interim Development Orders

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to revoke all interim development orders which conflict with good environmental standards and sound environmental protection; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment gave on 22 January 1993 at columns 457-58.

Nuclear Industry

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what procedures exist to ensure that the information supplied by BNFL in respect of applications for authorisation for proposed radioactive discharge limits fulfils the requirements of environmental assessment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 16 June 1993]: Details of the procedures used by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to assess the radiological implications of the radioactive discharges proposed by BNFL in its applications for new discharge authorisations for Sellafield, including the thermal oxide reprocessing plant, are given in the explanatory memoranda which accompanied the public consultation documents. Copies of these memoranda are in the Library of the House.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the application from BNFL for authorisation for proposed new radioactive discharge limits from the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield fulfils the requirements of environmental assessment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 16 June 1993]: The information provided by BNFL in support of their applications for new radioactive discharge authorisations for Sellafield, including the thermal oxide reprocessing plant, was sufficient to enable Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to conduct detailed assessments of the radiological implications of the company's proposed discharges. These assessments confirmed that doses resulting from the proposed discharges would be well within national and international limits.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made in accordance with EC directive 84/467 Euratom of the projected costs and benefits which will arise from the operation of the BNFL thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 16 June 1993]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, together with my right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, is currently considering a report by Her Majesty's chief inspector of pollution and the MAFF inspectorates on the recent consultation on applications for revised authorisations under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 for radioactive discharges from the Sellafield site. The revised authorisations would take into account (amongst other things) the operation of the THORP plant.

Any decision on the applications will be made in accordance with national and EC law, including the relevant requirements of Directive 84/467/Euratom.

EDUCATION

Pupil Testing

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is his present estimate of the costs of the testing of 14-year-old pupils under the arrangements required by his Department (a) by local education authorities and (b) by his Department; and if he will express the figure for the confirmed expenditure as a sum per pupil involved.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department provides support under the grants for education support and training programme for local authority expenditure on training for teachers about national curriculum assessment. In the financial year 1993-94, grant at the rate of 60 per cent. supports £17 million of expenditure for the in-service training of teachers. Over the last three years £50·6 million has been supported for this purpose. Information on the precise proportion of this expenditure which relates to the testing of 14-year-olds is not available.

Tuition Fees

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to ensure that universities are not permitted to charge top-up fees for undergraduate courses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: The Government have given maximum independence to universities and colleges to manage their own affairs. To intervene in the setting of tuition fees would cut across that principle and would exceed my right hon. Friend's legal powers. Public funding for higher education is sufficient. It totals over £4 billion in England and over £270 million in Wales in 1993-94.

EC Students

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps have been taken to obtain funding from the European Community or other member states in respect of the costs resulting from the enrolment of European Community students for third-level courses in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Boswell: Students from other EC member states attending designated courses of higher education in the United Kingdom qualify for an award covering their course fees up to a specified maximum, where they satisfy basic eligibility conditions similar to those for students who live in the United Kingdom. Reciprocal rights apply to United Kingdom students studying elsewhere in the EC. The Department regularly discusses the distribution of funds for the various EC student mobility programmes with the Commission and representatives of other member states.

EC Students

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many European Community students enrolled for third-level courses in the United Kingdom in (a) 1990, (b) 1991 and (c) 1992; what amount of tuition fee was forgone in respect of European Community students enrolling for third-level coures in the United Kingdom in (i) 1990, (ii) 1991 and (iii) 1992; and what was the total cost of the education of European Community students enrolling for third-level courses in the United Kingdom in (1) 1990, (2) 1991 and (3) 1992.

Mr. Boswell: In the academic years 1990-91 and 1991-92 there were respectively 26,837 and 33,133 students from other EC member states studying third-level courses at institutions in the United Kingdom. Data for 1992-93 are not yet available. Except in exchange programmes, higher education institutions have not forgone tuition fees in respect of these students, who, depending on circumstances, either receive an award covering the cost of fees or pay the fees themselves. The cost of provision for EC students is not recorded separately.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if he will list, by local education authority area, those grant-maintained schools already operating on 1 April which (a) have received their final budgets for the 1993-94 financial year and (b) have yet to receive their final budgets for the 1993-94 financial year;

(2) if he will list, by local education authority area, those grant-maintained schools that started operating on 1 April which (a) have received their final budgets for the 1993-94 financial year and (b) have yet to receive their final budgets for the 1993-94 financial year;

Mr. Robin Squire: The information is contained in the tables. Schools which became self-governing on 1 April this year are asterisked. All schools were notified in March this year of a "proposed final" AMG based on an updating of last year's budget figure on which they are basing current year planning prior to final figures becoming available.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the respondents to the consultative document "A Common Funding Formula for Grant-maintained Schools" issued on 18 December 1992; and if he will place a copy of each response in the Library.

Mr. Robin Squire: Following is a list of respondents to the consultative document "A Common Funding Formula for Grant-maintained Schools" issued on 18 December 1992. Respondents commented on this consultation paper, as others, on the understanding that their replies would be treated as private correspondence. They may, of course, give their views wider circulation should they wish.

A further consultation document on a common funding formula was issued on 10 June. Section B of that paper contains a summary of responses to the first paper. Copies are available in the Library.

Student Sabbaticals

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will seek information as to how many full-time students are on paid sabbaticals and at what cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: The Government's consultations on student union matters have covered the uses to which public funds may legitimately be put, including supporting the activities of sabbatical officers. My right hon. Friend is now finalising proposals for action.

School Ballots

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the total sum of money paid to date to the Electoral Reform Society for its conduct of opt-out ballots in schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: The total sum paid to the Electoral Reform Society for its conduct of ballots at schools considering grant-maintained status is almost £980,000 to date, covering 1,070 ballots over the past five years.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Plutonium

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the destination and end-use of shipments of plutonium nitrate from Dounreay; what plans there are to increase these shipments; and for how long he expects these to continue.

Mr. Eggar: Plutonium nitrate recovered from prototype fast reactor (PFR) fuel is shipped from Dounreay to Sellafield where facilities exist for its conversion to plutonium oxide and long-term storage under international safeguards.

The use to which the plutonium oxide is put is a matter for the owners, the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority (UKAEA).

Plutonium nitrate shipments are an operational matter for the UKAEA, which will be determined in the light of arisings from the reprocessing plant at Dounreay.

It was announced in the statement by the then Secretary of State for Energy on 21 July 1988 at columns 1302-11 that the Government had decided to fund the reprocessing plant at Dounreay until 1996-97, to process spent fuel from PFR.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 7 June, Official Report, column 159, what were the names of the Japanese reactors which provided the irradiated fuel from which the plutonium to which he refers was extracted and returned to Japan.

Mr. Eggar: Such matters are for British Nuclear Fuels plc and its customers.

Sellafield

Mr. Hood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the opening date of the Mox demonstration facility at Sellafield.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 15 April 1993, Official Report, column 720.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Simpson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what countries are expected to ship waste to, and receive plutonium from, the thermal oxide reprocessing plant.

Mr. Eggar: The thermal oxide reprocessing plant is a recycling facility which will reprocess spent nuclear fuel to recover the plutonium and uranium in a form which can be used for electricity generation. Nuclear waste will not be shipped to THORP. The plant has contracts from customers in Canada, Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Spain, Sweden and Switzerland. Plutonium would be returned only under international safeguards and upon receipt of appropriate assurances covering peaceful use, physical protection and controls on re-transfer.

Spent Batteries

Mr. Wilson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the organisations and individuals to whom his Department sent a copy of their consultation document of 5 May on options for spent battery collection under EC directive 91/157/EEC.

Mr. McLoughlin: More than 800 copies of the Department's consultation paper have been issued so far, to all local authorities, to relevant trade and industry representative organisations, consumer, retail and environmental groups, and to companies and individuals who have expressed an interest in the subject to the Department. Responses are now being assessed.

Renewable Energy

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what electricity generating capacity from renewable resources his Department is committed to underwrite financially for the United Kingdom as a whole by the year 2000;

(2) when he expects to publish his renewable energy strategy review document.

Mr. Eggar: The Government are committed to working towards new renewables generated capacity of 1500 MW (DNC) by 2000 and will publish a renewable energy strategy review document later this year, in the light of the report of the Renewable Energy Advisory Group and the coal review. I expect to make an announcement on future NFFO arrangements in due course.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the progress of discussions between his Department and the EC Commission concerning the extension of non-fossil fuel obligation funding for renewables beyond 1998.

Mr. Eggar: Discussions with the European Commission are continuing.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade for the last five years, what percentage of (a) total electricity supply, (b) total electricity generating capacity and (c) primary energy supply was supplied by renewable energy sources; what proportion of renewable capacity received non-fossil fuel obligation funding; and what percentage of his Department's energy research budget was allocated to (i) nuclear research projects and (ii) renewables research.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is as follows:

The percentage of total electricity supply generated by renewables over the last five years is as follows:

| | per cent. |
|---|---|
| 1988 | 1·9 |
| 1989 | 1·8 |
| 1990 | 1·9 |
| 1991 | 1·7 |
| 1992 | 2·1 |

The percentage of total electricity generating capacity which has been accounted for by renewables over the last five years is as follows:

| | per cent. |
|---|---|
| 1988 | 2·2 |
| 1989 | 2·1 |
| 1990 | 2·1 |
| 1991 | 2·2 |
| 1992 | 2·6 |

The percentage of primary energy supply generated by renewables over the last five years is as follows:

| | per cent. |
|---|---|
| 1988 | 0·8 |
| 1989 | 0·8 |
| 1990 | 0·9 |
| 1991 | 0·8 |
| 1992 | 0·9 |

Source: United Kingdom digest of energy statistics, 1991 and 1992.

Since the Non-Fossil Fuel Obligation was introduced in 1990, the proportion of renewables capacity receiving NFFO funding has risen to around 12 per cent. (as at 31 March 1993).

The percentage of my Department's energy research budget spent on nuclear and renewables is as follows:

| | Nuclear | Renewables |
|---|---|---|
| 1987-88 | 79·9 | 9·1 |
| 1988-89 | 83·8 | 8·6 |
| 1989-90 | 79·8 | 10·8 |
| 1990-91 | 69·6 | 13·1 |
| 1991-92 | 72·0 | 19·0 |

Source: Annual review of Government funded research and development, 1990 and 1992.

Collieries (Market Testing)

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with the chairman of British Coal about those collieries which are market testing; how long this period of market testing will last; and what discussions there have been about the closure of any of those collieries.

Mr. Eggar: Decisions about the future of individual collieries are a matter for British Coal. No deadline for the period of market testing has been set. Completion of the process will depend on the progress of commercial negotiations between British Coal and electricity generators over additional sales of coal.

Arms Exports

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those countries which receive United Kingdom aid to which arms have been exported in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Needham: For the period requested, statistics of arms exports could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Information on aid is available from "British Aid Statistics", and for arms transfers in 1992 the hon. Lady may wish to consult the United Kingdom's return for the United Nations register of arms transfers. Both documents have been placed in the Library.

Registered Letters

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the current procedures in relation to the delivery of registered letters by the Royal Mail; and what alterations to this procedure were carried out in the delivery of registered letters to addresses used in connection with the Hoover free-flight promotion.

Mr. McLoughlin: Royal Mail's procedures for delivering registered letters are as follows:

As registered items arrive in the receiving sorting office they are recorded in a registered mail book. This book, together with the registered items, is sent to the local delivery office where the items are again checked against the book. As items are delivered to, or collected by, the customer, he or she signs for the number of registered items received. There was no variation of these procedures in respect of the Hoover offer. The agency handling the promotion collected and signed for its registered letters in the usual way.

Recycling

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to encourage investment in capital equipment for the purpose of recycling of waste materials in the United Kingdom.

Mr. McLoughlin: Waste disposal costs are increasing, as a result of the higher standards required under certain provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. This is helping to make recycling a more attractive waste management option, and investment in capital equipment for this purpose will flow naturally as a result. The Government are also encouraging investment by undertaking a number of initiatives aimed at developing markets for recycled materials. These include offering a £20 million grant towards the cost of papermaking plant, with the capacity to recycle an extra 350,000 tonnes of waste paper a year, and providing grants for various research and development projects which seek to identify new uses for recovered materials, and which develop and demonstrate new recycling technologies.

Exporters

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what new plans he has to assist exporters.

Mr. Needham: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave on 16 June, Official Report, column 603.

Rural Sub-post Offices

Mr. McGrady: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps are being taken to ensure that rural sub-post offices in Northern Ireland will be kept open; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Post Office Counters Ltd. is making strenuous efforts to keep rural offices open, for example through its community office programme. In our review of the Post Office we are exploring a number of ways to underpin the rural network to ensure that post office services continue to be readily accessible to all in towns and in the country, throughout Northern Ireland and the rest of the United Kingdom.

Shipbuilding Intervention Fund

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has yet received a reply to the letter from his department on 26 May to the European Commission on the eligibility of British warship yards for the shipbuilding intervention fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have not yet received a reply to my letter of 26 May to Commissioner van Miert.

Structural Steel

Mr. Spellar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 16 June, Official Report, column 601, what representations he has received about the dumping of structural steel by countries within the European Community.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have received no representations about the dumping of structural steel in the United Kingdom by countries within the European Community. I have, however, received a number of representations about imports into the United Kingdom of allegedly subsidised structural steel from other EC member states.

Political Contributions

Mr. Bell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the number of investigations that have been taken place by the companies investigation branch into allegations of irregularities or non-compliance of the Companies Acts in relation to non-disclosure of political contributions in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: None.

Mr. Bell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many complaints have been made to Companies

House in regard to the non-disclosure of political contributions to political parties which have led to investigation by the Serious Fraud Office in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: None.

Company Directors Disqualification Act

Mr. Bell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many directors have been disqualified under the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986 for the years 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The total number of directors notified to Companies House as disqualified under the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986 was 419 in financial year 1990-91 and 459 in 1991-92. The provisional figure for 1992-93 is 649. Information is not compiled on a calendar year basis.

High Definition Television

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if the United Kingdom has the power to veto on funding for high definition television via the EC; and what is the upper limit of the contribution that Her Majesty's Government are prepared to make to this project;

(2) which plants in which countries will benefit from EC funding of research and development of high definition television; and how many jobs will be created or sustained in the United Kingdom;

(3) what level of funding is being proposed by the European Commission for high definition television; how much the United Kingdom is being asked to contribute; and what system is proposed for development by which firms;

(4) what was the most recent Council of Ministers meeting at which high definition television and its development was discussed; and how the United Kingdom voted.

Mr. McLoughlin: At the Telecommunications Council on 16 June, unanimous agreement was reached on the framework of an action plan to help launch widescreen television services. The four-year plan will be for Community funds, together with funds from other sources, to be used to partially offset the additional costs to broadcasters and programme producers of broadcasting TV services (including high definition television services) in the widescreen format. The United Kingdom's contribution to the action plan subsidy will be calculated on a gross contribution of about 15 per cent. less abatement, which would depend on the level of United Kingdom receipts.

The settlement represents a considerable negotiating success for the United Kingdom:

The 850 MECU Community subsidy originally proposed by the European Commission has been reduced to 228 MECU (£160m). Additional funding from other sources, including industry, will introduce market discipline.

The original proposal was to support only the analogue MAC technology. Broadcasters and programme makers using other technologies, including PALPlus or fully-digital technologies will now qualify for assistance.

The UK also secured a valuable commitment that UK-based companies contributing to the action plan will be given due recognition of this in future European collaborative research and development and standardisation activities into digital TV. The European Commission are expected to come forward with proposals for such activities before the end of the year.

Consumer reaction to widescreen TV will determine how much United Kingdom broadcasters, programme makers and television set manufacturers benefit from the action plan. United-Kingdom-based television set manufacturers already enjoy 20 to 25 per cent. of Europe's manufacturing capacity and thus should be well placed to capitalise on the spread of widescreen. They should also benefit from the ability to participate in future EC research and development in new television technologies.

Auditing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what powers he has to ensure that partners from auditing firms criticised by the DTI inspectors are prevented from having a seat on the Financial Reporting review panel.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Appointments to the financial reporting review panel are a matter for the financial reporting council.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many auditing partners have been barred from practising as a result of critical reports published by his Department since June 1979.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: None, so far as I am aware.

Pennine Commercial Holdings

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when will he publish the Department of Trade and Industry inspectors' report relating to (a) Pennine Commercial Holdings plc and (b) British Anzam plc.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Following the conclusion of criminal proceedings, the inspectors are reviewing their interim report on Pennine Commercial Holdings plc with a view to submitting a final report. When the Pennine report is submitted, I will consider publication of the report on that company and of the report on British Anzani plc. Both relate to events concerning the Savings and Investment Bank Ltd of the Isle of Man.

Departmental Inspectors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will provide a list of the names and business connections of the individuals who are currently acting as inspectors for his Department.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The information requested by the hon. Member is as follows:

D. Donaldson, QC
Ian Watt, FCA of The Bank of England
Miss E. Appleby, QC
Mr. P. Foss, FCA
Mr. L. Ziman, Solicitor, of Nabarro Nathanson
Mr. W. Hoffman, FCA of Baker Tilly, Chartered Accountants

Mr. R. Turner, FCA of Nevill Russell, Chartered Accountants

Assisted Areas

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on progress in discussions with the European Commission and the Council of Ministers in respect of member states being able to designate areas within their borders as eligible for objective 2 and 5(b) assistance; and when he expects a decision to be reached.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 21 June 1993]: No agreement has yet been reached on the method of selection of objective 2 and 5(b) areas for the period 1994 onwards. This issue forms one element of the current negotiations on the review of the structural funds regulations. I do not expect the Council to be in a position to adopt the revised regulations before the end of July.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will take steps to make available all information held by British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. regarding its activities abroad, shipments of plutonium and spent nuclear fuel, in aid of the United States Governments's non-proliferation review;

(2) what assistance Her Majesty's Government will give to the United States Government's plutonium proliferation review with particular reference to the thermal oxide reprocessing plant.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 21 June 1993]: The review is a matter for the United States Government. It has not asked the United Kingdom Government for any assistance. The provision of any information held by BNFL regarding its commercial activities would be a matter for the company.

Research

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has for the future representation of the United Kingdom in ENERO, the EC's environmental research organisation.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 15 June 1993]: That is a matter for future consideration but I hope it will be the new national environmental technology centre.

Offshore Oil

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those offshore blocks for which licences with obligation well requirements have been issued in the second stage of the 14th round.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 21 June 1993]: Details of work programmes attached to individual oil and gas production licences are commercially confidential to the licensee. In total, work programmes on the 73 awarded blocks which were offered under the second stage of the 14th round include 72 (40 firm and 32 contingent) well obligations. Work programmes on all 110 blocks awarded in the round include 93 well obligations.

Warren Spring Laboratory

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much was raised by the Government by the sale of the Warren Spring Laboratory site; and what was the cost of the purchase of the new site in Welwyn Garden City and the construction of the new laboratory.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 15 June 1993]: A total of £25 million is being raised by the sale of the Stevenage site to Glaxo. The cost of purchasing the site at Welwyn Garden City, constructing a replacement laboratory and moving the staff and facilities was estimated at nearly £33 million.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of its full economic costs in trading terms the Warren Spring Laboratory recovered through the charges levied on customers in 1992-93; and what proportion of the net rate excess of income over expenditure set out in the DTI's supply estimate was met.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 15 June 1993]: On the basis of unaudited accounts the Laboratory recovered the whole of its full economic costs. The 1992-93 audited accounts are expected to be laid before the House before the summer recess.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the subsidiary targets for the Warren Spring Laboratory for the year 1992-93; and to what extent they were met.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 15 June 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which my hon. Friend the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Technology gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond, Yorkshire (Mr. Hague) on 13 January 1993, Official Report, column 739. On the basis of unaudited results, the laboratory looks to have met its 1992-93 targets.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what limitations there are on the freehold disposal of the site identified for the Warren Spring Laboratory in Welwyn Garden City.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 15 June 1993]: There are no limitations on the resale of the land at Welwyn Garden City, although I understand that any purchaser would have to enter into a deed of covenant with the management company.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what account he took of the possibility of conflict of interest in the report by PA consultants on the Warren Spring Laboratory; and what action was required of PA consultants to guard against conflicts of interest in preparing the report.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 15 June 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Cambridge (Mrs. Campbell) on 21 June, Official Report, column 20.

SCOTLAND

Salmon Advisory Committee

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many of those individuals not re-appointed to the Salmon advisory committee in 1993 were (a) ineligible through age or (b) unwilling to serve a further term.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 15 June 1993]: I refer to the reply by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, on 14 June at column 396.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the population, (b) the total capital budget for 1993-94 and (c) the total revenue budget for 1993-94, for (i) Annandale and Eskdale, (ii) North East Fife, (iii) Bearsden and Milngavie, (iv) Edinburgh City, (v) Banff and Buchan, (vi) Nithsdale district councils and (vii) Grampian region.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 June 1993]: The information requested is as follows:

| Local authority | Population as at 30 June 1991 | 1993-94 (See note 1) Capital allocation £000 | Total revenue budget £000 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Annandale and Eskdale | 37,140 | 2·516 | 5,269 |
| North East Fife | 69,930 | 2·384 | 12,584 |
| Bearsden and Milngavie | 41,040 | 1·275 | 6,484 |
| Edinburgh City | 438,780 | 35·532 | 117,528 |
| Banff and Buchan | 85,640 | 1·792 | 14,033 |
| Nithsdale | 57,140 | 4·244 | 8,915 |
| Grampian | 514,400 | 49·713 | 470,672 |

Note:

1. Information on local authorities' capital budgets is not held centrally. The Secretary of State does, however, give his consent annually to local authorities to incur liabilities to meet capital expenditure. This is given in the form of individual capital consent allocations as well as consent to meet capital expenses from capital receipts and revenue and private sector contributions. In addition local authorities eligible for assistance from the European regional development fund will receive in 1993-94 supplementary consent equal to the amount of grant they receive. The figures provided are therefore the total capital allocations including housing for 1993-94 and not the capital budgets.

Loch Lomand

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps are being taken to ensure co-ordination between inquiries by the Department of Transport marine safety directorate and by the Scottish Office into the fatal speed boat accident on Loch Lomond on the weekend of 5 to 6 June.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 17 June 1993]: The fatal accident which occurred on Loch Lomond is the subject of an investigation by Strathclyde police, who will make a report to the procurator fiscal in due course. The Marine Safety Directorate, which is also inquiring into the accident, is I understand, co-operating with the police.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he intends to take in the wake of the fatal speed boat accident on Loch Lomond last weekend.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 17 June 1993]: The Secretary of State's working party, which has been examining management issues affecting Loch Lomond and the Trossachs, is expected to report next month. I understand that safety is one of the issues with which it will deal. We shall give careful consideration to all the recommendations which the working party will be making, including any relating to safety.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland to what extent implementation of byelaws on Loch Lomond will require amendment of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982, in connection with the requirement of unanimity of riparian owners; and what legislative steps he intends to take in this respect.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 17 June 1993]: For the making of byelaws to regulate the use of inland waters, section 121 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 requires a district or islands council to obtain, subject to certain conditions, the consent of every person having a proprietorial interest in or in relation to the waters. If district or islands councils represent to us that, in general terms, they are placed in real difficulty in meeting the statutory requirements for the byelaws they wish to make, then we shall be prepared to review the existing legislation.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date the working party on Loch Lomond and the Trossachs will report.

Sir Hector Monro: [holding answer 17 June 1993]: I understand that the Loch Lomond and the Trossachs working party has completed its deliberations and intends to present its report to the Secretary of State during July.

Forestry

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on progress made to date regarding his review of incentives for forestry investment.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 18 June 1993]: As part of the review which my right hon. Friend announced on 30 March 1993 in a reply to the hon. Member for Staffordshire, Moorlands (Mr. Knox) at column 150, the Forestry Commission has issued a consultation paper seeking views on the effectiveness of the current incentives for forestry investment.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to suspend the forestry market-testing programme and any internal reorganisation of the Forestry Commission pending the outcome of his review on current incentives for forestry investment.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 18 June 1993]: The Forestry Commission will continue to undertake its normal business, including market testing, while the Forestry Review Group is carrying out its work. The Commission carried out a major internal reorganisation in 1992 and any proposals for further significant changes will not be considered until the outcome of the review is known.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what projects have been undertaken by Central Scotland Woodland: A Countryside Trust Ltd since its inception; if he will give details of the funding of each project; what outside bodies have been involved in each project; what contribution they have made; and how many people were employed in each project per agency involved.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 21 June 1993]: Central Scotland Woodlands: A Countryside Trust Ltd. as a private sector company limited by guarantee, with charitable status, is responsible to its board of directors. The principal shareholders are Scottish Natural Heritage, Scottish Enterprise, Central, Lothian and Strathclyde regional councils and Cumbernauld and Kilsyth, Falkirk, Monklands, Motherwell, Strathkelvin and West Lothian district councils. I have asked Sir David Montgomery, its chairman, to write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the acreage of Forestry Commission-owned forestry and the total number of Forestry Commission employees in each Scottish constituency; if he will list the projects which the Forestry Commission is carrying out with other agencies; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 21 June 1993]: The Forestry Commission does not keep records of the area of its landholdings or number of employees by constituency and this information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The Forestry Commission carries out a large number of projects with other agencies and organisations throughout Great Britain, particularly in the areas of recreation, conservation and research. This information is not held centrally and could be prepared only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish details of any offers to purchase the assets of the Forestry Commission which have been received by the review body; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The Forestry Review Group, established on 30 March 1993 by my right hon. Friend and his forestry Minister colleagues, has not received any offers to purchase assets owned by the Forestry Commission.

Appointments

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the procedure undertaken by his Department for the nomination and appointment of members of health boards and NHS trusts; and if he will list the individuals who are responsible for the appointments.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 21 June 1993]: My right hon. Friend is solely responsible for the appointment of non-executive members of health boards and NHS trusts. Nominations may be made by anyone but, in the case of health boards, are invited, in accordance with statute, from local authorities, bodies representative of the medical professions and certain other bodies. For the last round of appointments nominations were also invited through public advertisements.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of individuals appointed to health boards and national health service trusts; and if he will list by health board their current occupation and whether they reside within the health board area.

Sheep Quotas

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has within the EC to seek a reform in the current system of quota allocations for sheep farmers, with particular reference to allowing the transfer of a quota allocation when the farm ownership changes.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 21 June 1993]: The introduction of quotas to the sheep annual premium scheme was part of the overall agreement on CAP reform reached in 1992. It is too early to consider major changes to that agreement.

The EC regulations already contain provisions for producers who took over a farm after the reference year to apply to the national reserve for an allocation.

Babies (Eye Defects)

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each year from 1976 to the latest available date, the number of babies born in Scotland with (a) no eyes, (b) small eyes, (c) damaged optic nerves and (d) all recorded eye defects; and if he will estimate the comprehensiveness of the recorded information.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 15 June 1993]: The table shows the number of babies born annually in Scotland with recorded eye defects from 1980 to 1992 with an indication of the comprehensiveness of the data recorded. Information is not available for the period before 1980 and no separate record is kept of figures for damaged optic nerves.

| Year | [1] Anophthalmia | [2] Microphthalmia | [3] Other eye defect | All recorded eye defects | [5] Neonatal hospital discharge record percentage of coverage of live births |
| 1980 | 0 | 3 | 13 | 16 | 75·5 |

[5]Increased coverage reflects improved record keeping.

Research and Development

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to improve the take up of grants and other incentives for research and development by small and medium enterprises.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 16 June 1993]: All industrial research and development support schemes administered by my Department are dealt with by one unit, making it easy for companies of all sizes to deal with appropriate officials who are aware of the full range of support and will signpost companies to the most appropriate form of assistance.

My Department carries out a wide range of promotional activities, often working closely with local enterprise companies and other business intermediaries such as management consultants, accountants, and small business advisers in banks to encourage small and medium sized companies in Scotland to take up the support available for research and development both from the United Kingdom Government and the European Commission.

Through the media of seminars, workshops and advice days, information and services are provided which identify opportunities to participate in United Kingdom and EC research and development programmes. Details on calls for proposals and deadlines are disseminated throughout Scotland by the publication of Industry Department's Technology Bulletin. Advice, guidance and assistance is also given to companies regarding the completion and submission of applications.

In addition my officials work closely with the Scotland and Northern England relay centre which specialises in promoting EC research and development initiatives. The relay centre plays a central role in ensuring that the results emanating from the EC's framework research and development programme are used effectively, particularly by small and medium enterprises.

Innovation Support

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to improve the ease of access to innovation support programmes by small and medium sized enterprises.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 16 June 1993]: The publicity activities of my Department supplement the efforts of the Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise networks to encourage small and medium sized enterprises to apply new technology and to take advantage of support for innovation.

To improve further the supply of information for industry, Scottish Enterprise, in partnership with other bodies, is currently establishing a network of local business shops throughout Scotland.

In addition, the Government are reviewing the scope for transferring from the Department of Trade and Industry to the Scottish Office responsibility for a range of schemes in Scotland for encouraging industrial innovation and technology transfer. The object of the review will be to bring about transfer of responsibility wherever practicable, again with the aim of improving responsiveness to local needs.

Housing (Elderly People)

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to increase housing facilities for the elderly to enable the implementation of community care programmes; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 June 1993]: Housing for the elderly is provided by public sector landlords, housing associations and the private sector. Guidelines on housing for the elderly were published in 1991 and Scottish Homes published its discussion paper on housing for the elderly in May.

Very substantial resources totalling some £900 million have been made available to local authorities, Scottish Homes and new town development corporations for capital investment in housing in 1993-94, including projects relating to the elderly.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the cost of preparing and publishing the applications for trust status in Lothian health board hospitals.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 21 June 1993]: As in previous years separate funds had been set aside to assist hospitals who wish to consider and prepare applications for NHS trust status. The costs of preparing and publishing applications by Lothian hospitals are not yet available but as part of the public consultation process the Government attach great importance to copies of all applications being widely available to assist members of the public in their consideration of the proposals.

Education Authorities

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the education authorities in Scotland with the total number of pupils for which each education authority is responsible.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The total number of pupils at September 1992 in education authority nursery, primary, secondary and special schools, or for whom special arrangements are made under section 14 of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980, is shown for each education authority in Scotland.

| Education Authority | Number of pupils |
|---|---|
| Scotland | 797,978 |
| Borders | 15,204 |
| Central | 43,682 |
| Dumfries and Galloway | 23,425 |

| Renfrew | 58,090 |

Ferries

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what restrictions exist on the transfer of ferries constructed with the aid of European funds to private ownership.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the contributions made from EC funds to the construction of Caledonian MacBrayne ferries, in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Stewart: The information is not readily available in the format requested. The total contribution made from EC funds to the construction of Caledonian MacBrayne ferries during the past 10 years is given in the following table:

| Vessels | Year of award | £ EC allocation | £ Total EC grant paid |
|---|---|---|---|
| Hebridean Isles | 1984 | 2,750,000 | 2,200,000 |
| Loch Striven | 1985 | 425,000 | 424,610 |
| Loch Linnhe | 1985 | 425,000 | 424,703 |
| Loch Riddon | 1987 | 425,000 | 425,000 |
| Loch Ranza | 1986 | 425,000 | 425,000 |
| Isle of Mull | 1987 | 3,216,000 | 3,216,000 |
| Lord of the Isles | 1989 | 2,545,600 | 2,545,600 |

EC Council of Ministers

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, together with the respective dates, those meetings of the EC Council of Ministers which were attended by Ministers in his Department in the latest 12 months.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Scotland attended a special joint meeting of Environment and Transport Ministers on 25 January 1993.

My hon. Friend, the Minister for Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland, led for the United Kingdom at the Fisheries Councils on 19 October 1992 and 23 November 1992 and shared the lead for the United Kingdom at the Fisheries Council on 19 December 1992. He also attended the Agriculture Council on 26 October 1992 and the Fisheries Council on 18 March 1993.

My hon. Friend the Minister for Education for Scotland attended the Education Council on 27 November 1992.

On the occasions where Scottish Office Ministers do not personally attend they are represented at all EC Council meetings by senior officials or by their colleagues in the United Kingdom Government.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the locations of Forestry Commission land (a) currently being developed for leisure activities and (b) those areas developed for leisure activities in each of the last five years.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 8 June 1993]: The Forestry Commission is preparing a list of its recreation facilities and I shall arrange for the hon. Member to receive a copy as soon as possible and for further copies to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of Forestry Commission interpretation centres and their location.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 8 June 1993]: The Forestry Commission has 29 interpretation centres, which are at the listed locations.

England
Alice Holt Forest, Hampshire
Bedgebury Pinetum, Sussex
Border Forest Park, Northumberland
Cannock Forest, Staffordshire
Delamere Forest, Cheshire
Grizedale Forest Park, Cumbria
Hamsterley Forest, Durham
Neroche Forest (Offwell Centre), Devon
North Riding Forest Park, North Yorkshire
Thetford Forest Park, Suffolk
Westonbirt Arboretum, Gloucestershire
Whinlatter Forest Park, Cumbria
Wyre Forest, Hereford and Worcester

Scotland
Bennachie Forest, Grampian
Farigaig Forest, Highland
Galloway Forest Park (Clatteringshaws), Dumfries and Galloway
Galloway Forest Park (Kirroughtree), Dumfries and Galloway
Galloway Forest Park (Murray Centre), Dumfries and Galloway
Galloway Forest Park (Stroan Bridge), Dumfries and Galloway
Glenmore Forest Park, Highland
Inverliever Forest, Strathclyde
Portree Wood, Highland
Queen Elizabeth Forest Park (David Marshall Lodge), Central Tay Forest Park, Tayside

Wales
Betws y Coed, Gwynedd
Clocaenog Forest, Ruthin, Clwyd
Coed Taf, Merthyr Tydfil, Mid Glamorgan
Coed y Brenin Forest Park, Dolgellau, Gwynedd
Nant Yr Arian, Aberystwyth, Ceredigion

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements have been made for the involvement of the Ministry of Defence in discussions on the future of the Forestry Commission.

Sir Hector Monro: Ministerial colleagues in the Ministry of Defence are being kept informed of issues affecting their interests which arise from the work of the Forestry review group, announced by my right hon. Friend on 30 March 1993.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Benefits

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of (a) the extra expenditure and (b) savings for each year up to 2000 as a result of each of the main measures on disability benefits which he announced on 10 January 1990; and if he will make further projections for (i) extra costs and (ii) savings for each of these measures between the years 2000 and 2025 where these can be estimated in broad orders of magnitude.

Mr. Scott: Information on the projected costs/savings of each of the main measures was announced by the former Secretary of State on 10 January 1990 at column 482. The table estimates in broad orders of magnitude these costs/savings for 1993-94 to 1995-96 and the likely effect for 2000-01 at the latest price base. It is not possible to provide estimates in the longer term since the costs and savings depend on a large number of factors which cannot be accurately forecast.

| Measure | 1993-94 Cost/saving £ million | 1994-95 Cost/saving £ million | 1995-96 Cost/saving £ million | 2000-01 Cost/saving £ million |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Introduction of disability living allowance | +230 | +290 | +340 | +490 |
| Introduction of disability working allowance | +20 | +50 | +50 | +100 |
| Abolition of the accrual of new rights to the earnings-related additions to invalidity pension | −30 | −70 | −120 | −550 |
| Age related addition on severe disablement allowance | +50 | +60 | +60 | +70 |
| Abolition of reduced earnings allowance in the industrial injuries scheme | −80 | n/a | n/a | −160 |

+ = cost; − = saving.

Sources:

1. Government Actuary and Department of Social Security (for disability working allowance).
2. Estimates for abolition of reduced earnings allowance in the industrial injuries scheme taken from Official Report of 19 January 1990 and converted to 1992-93 prices.

Notes:

1. Figures are at 1992-93 prices.
2. Estimates take account of changes to income related benefit entitlement, except for disability working allowance which are gross costs.
3. Figures are rounded to the nearest £10 million, but are not accurate to that degree. Estimates for 2000-01 are subject to a considerable degree of uncertainty.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to ensure that local authorities are meeting the requirement to process housing benefit claims within 14 days.

Mr. Burt: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 19 January, at column 211. Full statutory responsibility for the administration of the housing benefit scheme rests with local authorities. They are required to ensure that the system is working effectively and in accordance with the rules of the benefit scheme. Regulations prescribe that claims should be processed within 14 days of receipt of all the necessary information, or as soon as possible thereafter. Where through no fault of the applicant, a claim to rent allowance cannot be settled within 14 days, interim payments should be made.

We recognise the continuing concerns about some authorities' performance in this area, and the Department plans shortly to issue strengthened guidance reminding all authorities of their legal duties to make interim payments.

My reply to my hon. Friend on 2 March 1993 at column 112 referred to the housing benefit performance measures, prepared by the Audit Commission, under the citizens charter initiative within local government. Publication of the results, both locally and nationally, will ensure that authorities monitor more closely how they meet the 14-day requirements.

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what evidence he has on the extent to which local authorities are meeting the 14-day target for housing benefit claims; if he will list those authorities which did not meet the target for the two most recent years where figures are available; and how many days it took those authorities to process such claims.

Mr. Burt [holding answer 10 June 1993]: The available information has been placed in the Library. Information on the actual number of days that authorities take to process benefit claims is not available.

Figures reported by many authorities indicate how well they administer housing benefit. Regulations provide that authorities should process claims within 14 days of all the necessary information becoming available. In 1991-92, overall figures, based on the 345 authorities supplying data, indicated that around 70 per cent. of authorities achieve, or exceed, the national average of 75 per cent. for the processing of housing benefit claims within 14 days of all relevant information becoming available. Some 40 per cent. of responding authorities process 90 per cent. or more of claims within 14 days.

Disability Allowances

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) men and (b) women have applied for disabled living allowance or the equivalent benefit, in each of the last three years; and what percentage of men and women have been granted it (i) for life and (ii) for specified periods of time.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard the chief executive of the Benefits Agency that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the relevant extracts from leaflets available to the general public in which advance notice has been given of the Government's intention to make invalidity benefit subject to income tax.

Mr. Scott: Reference to the intention to extend taxation to invalidity benefit has been included in the Department's leaflet about the benefit (NI 16A) since April 1983. The current wording is as follows:

"Invalidity Benefit is not taxable, even when you continue to get it after 65 (men) or 60 (women). It is planned to tax it some time in the future, but a date hasn't yet been set".

Social Fund

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action has been undertaken by his Department as a result of the recommendations on the reform of the social fund by the Social Security Advisory Committee.

Mr. Scott: We have taken account of these recommendations in making recent operational improvements to the social fund. In particular; this year's increase in the budget to £346 million (52 per cent. higher than in April 1991); the introduction of the social fund computer system which will improve the consistency, speed and quality of decision making; revised training; and improved forms and letters.

We will continue to take account of the findings of this and other reports, as well as our own close monitoring, as we consider any further improvements to the operation of the fund.

Quarry House

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the budget for decoration and art work for Quarry house in 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Hague: It is not possible to put a precise figure on the budget for decoration and artwork for Quarry house in 1991-92 and 1992-93 because the majority of work was covered by the main building contract.

Terminal Illness

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what benefits are currently available to terminally ill people in hospices or nursing homes;

(2) what was the value of each benefit available to terminally ill people in hospices or nursing homes in each of the last 10 years; and how many people claimed each of those benefits in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Burt: A wide range of benefits is available to terminally ill people in hospices or nursing homes, provided they meet the conditions of entitlement. Special higher levels of income support are available to people who were in residential care and nursing homes, including hospices which make a charge, at 31 March 1993. The maximum level which applies for such people who are terminally ill in nursing homes is currently £280 a week (£315 in London) plus personal expenses of £12·65. For details of this I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 18 January at columns 106-107. The income support entitlement of people entering homes since 1 April 1993 includes a residential allowance of £45 (£50 in London).

Information about the value and the numbers of recipients of each benefit is not available in the form requested.

Full information about eligibility to benefits is made widely available by the Benefits Agency in a variety of forms including leaflets and various confidential free telephone advice lines.

Maternity Pay

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when his Department will announce the proposed changes to statutory maternity pay required by the EC directive on the protection of pregnant women at work.

Mr. Scott: We are considering the directive's implications for statutory maternity pay and maternity allowance and will make an announcement when this work has been completed.

Resettlement Unit Advisory Steering Group

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the resettlement unit advisory steering group last met; and when the group is next expected to meet.

Mr. Hague: The management of the Resettlement Agency is a matter for Mr. Tony Ward, the chief executive. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. T. Ward to Mr. Nick Raynsford, dated 21 June 1993:

As the Resettlement Agency is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to him, about the Resettlement Unit Advisory Steering Group, when it last met, and when the group is next expected to meet. This is something which falls within the responsibilities he has delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The Resettlement Unit Advisory Steering Group last met on 4 April 1990. Since then, much headway has been made by the Agency, in taking forward Government policy to disengage from the direct revision of facilities for single homeless people with an unsettled way of life. Ten units which provided 667 beds have been either replaced or sold by way of grant aid to voluntary organisations, and 852 new beds have been created to replace them. In this way, the Agency has made rapid advances and has not had cause to seek the advice of the Advisory Steering Group since 1990. In view of the progress that has been made, it is, in my opinion, most unlikely that I will need to seek its help in future.

I enclose a copy of my latest annual report from which you will see details of the Agency's performance.

HOME DEPARTMENT

New Age Travellers

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the preparations he has taken to ensure full and effective co-ordination by police forces in the west of England to deal with possible breaches of the law, trespass and blocking of the highway by new age travellers in the summer months.

Mr. Charles Wardle: These are operational matters for the police. The Association of Chief Police Officers has set up a national intelligence-gathering network on the activities of travellers with co-ordinating centres in the Wiltshire constabulary and Cumbria constabulary. Forces have also reviewed their contingency plans for dealing with the problems caused by new age travellers. These have proved effective so far this year.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he is taking to ensure, in conjunction with the police, that convoys of new age travellers do not block the public highway.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Enforcement of road traffic and highways legislation is an operational matter for the police.

Racist Crimes

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the incidence of crimes in each of the last five years in which there has been a racist element.

Mr. Maclean: The only information currently available relates to the number of reported racial incidences and I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Gerrard) on 26 April, at column 266.

Metropolitan Police Cab Enforcement Scheme

Dame Angela Rumbold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department to what extent the resources of the Metropolitan police cab enforcement section have been increased; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The section has been maintained at the same staffing level for the past five years. The Commissioner has no plans to make any increases.

Police (Stress-related Illness)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) custody officers, (b) custody sergeants and (c) rota sergeants have taken five or more days off work through stress-related illnesses in each police force area in England and Wales in each year since 1990.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not held centrally and could be collected from individual forces only at disproportionate cost.

Prisoners (Police Cells)

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) remand and (b) convicted prisoners were held in police cells in each prison service region for each month in 1993.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated June 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of prisoners held in police cells in each Prison Service region for each month in 1993.

The following table shows the total number of prisoners held in police cells on each Friday this year up to 12 February, which is the last day prisoners were held in police cells. It is not possible to separate remand and convicted prisoners although most would have been on remand. All the prisoners concerned should have been in establishments in the Prison Service's Directorate of Inmate Programmes which covers establishments in the north of England.

| Date | Number of prisoners in police cells |
|---|---|
| 8 January | 279 |
| 15 January | 252 |
| 22 January | 236 |
| 29 January | 166 |
| 5 February | 119 |
| 12 February | 20 |

Voting, Christchurch

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the numbers of people at the last election who used (a) proxy, (b) absent and (c) postal votes in the parliamentary constituency of Christchurch.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There were 1,356 electors on the postal voters list in the Christchurch constituency at the last general election, and 1,220 postal ballot paper covering envelopes were returned. Information about the number of electors voting by proxy is not collected centrally.

Side-handled Baton

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will agree to a pilot project on the use of the expandable side-handled baton taking place in specific areas within three police forces in England and Wales.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 21 June, at column 2.

TRANSPORT

Auto Care Europe

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much British Rail is investing in the new joint venture company Auto Care Europe.

Mr. Freeman: I have authorised BR to invest up to a maximum of £1·33 million.

Minibuses

Ms Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what plans he has to introduce legislation which would require all passengers in minibuses to wear safety belts; (2) what measures are being taken to improve the design of minibuses in the interest of greater passenger safety.

Mr. Key: We are making a continuing effort to improve the safety of all road vehicles including minibuses. Seat belts are already required to be fitted to the front seats of all new minibuses. We have sought agreement within the European Community for the mandatory extension of this requirement to all seats in minibuses.

Where seat belts are fitted, they must be worn by passengers travelling in the front seat of any minibus and by a passenger travelling in a rear seat of a smaller minibus with an unladen weight not exceeding 2,540 kg.

Motor Insurance

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department has consulted the motor insurance industry on the feasibility of requiring evidence of insurance to be displayed on a vehicle's windscreen.

Mr. Key: Following wide-ranging discussions with representatives of the insurance industry, the police and the Home Office, we have decided not to require evidence of insurance to be displayed on a vehicle windscreen. Under our present driver-related insurance system, the enforcement benefit would be little more than is already provided by the check on insurance which is made when renewing vehicle excise duty. The display of an insurance disc would provide no assurance that the driver was covered by an insurance policy or complying with policy conditions, nor would it protect against the insurance being cancelled once the disc has been issued.

The enforcement potential of a windscreen display would be greater under a vehicle-related insurance regime, where cover is taken out for a particular vehicle regardless of who drives it. However, this would require all vehicles to be insured for any driver and so remove an insurer's ability to take account of the risks associated with different drivers. Because every insured vehicle could be driven by a high-risk driver, the contribution that the present insurance system makes to road safety would be undermined. It could lead to a substantial increase in motor premiums, especially for safer drivers who would, for example, find themselves contributing to the cost of insuring all cars to be driven by novice drivers or by drivers with a poor accident record. Premium increases could in turn encourage further evasion and render the measure self-defeating.

I deplore the irresponsible behaviour of the minority of drivers who fail to take out insurance. But I am sceptical about imposing further regulations on all drivers, particularly when we cannot be confident that insurance evasion would be significantly reduced. The police already have wide powers to inspect insurance certificates, and there are over 200,000 convictions for uninsured driving every year. The maximum for this offence was increased to £5,000 in October 1992. We have decided as a result of our discusions that the format of insurance certificates should be reviewed and simplified where possible to assist the police in checking them. This will speed up this important aspect of enforcement. A further check on insurance certificates is made with applications for vehicle excise duty.

The decision not require the display of windscreen insurance discs has no effect on the compensation received by those involved in road accidents. Victims of uninsured drivers will continue to be compensated by the Motor Insurers Bureau under a long-standing agreement between the bureau and the Secretary of State for Transport.

Transport and Works Act Orders

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further consideration he has given to the means of notifying to hon. Members his receipt of application for orders under part I of the Transport and Works Act 1992.

Mr. Freeman: Yes. My Department has arranged with the House of Commons Library that applicants will supply a full set of their application documents for the information of hon. Members. The House of Commons Public Information Office will note in the "Weekly Information Bulletin" the receipt of such documents, together with a contact point from which further information may be obtained.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the actual or estimated cost of the Ironbridge to Canning Town improvement schemes on or adjacent to the A13 trunk road in the boroughs of Tower Hamlets and Newham in respect of (a) East India Dock road, interim junction scheme as now completed, (b) the East India Dock tunnel link, (c) the completed Abbott road, Leamouth road and A13 Ironbridge widening scheme, (d) the widening of the Canning Town flyover from four to six lanes and associated road works and (e) works associated with the re-aligned east-bound slip road to the A13; and what plans he has for improvements for pedestrian crossing of the A13, Newham way, between these works and the proposed Freemasons road underpass.

Mr. Norris: The actual or estimated construction costs for the roads schemes listed by the hon. Member are as follows:

| Schemes | £ million (including VAT) |
|---|---|
| (a) and (c) East India Dock Road/Leamouth Road | 2·60 |
| (b) East India Dock Road Link | 36·00 |
| (d) and (e) A13 Ironbridge/A13 Canning Town Flyover (including NE Slip Road, Canning Town) | 50·06 |

Schemes (a) and (c) relate to the completed works for improvement to the East India Dock road junction and widening of the A13 at Leamouth, including the Abbott road junction. The proposed widening of the Ironbridge is now an integral part of scheme (d), as is scheme (e).

Scheme (b) is the responsibility of the London Docklands development corporation.

Subways at Beckton road and Douglas road have been refurbished in recent years. The Department is discussing with LB Newham the possibility of improving the condition of the Rathbone subway.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the expected outturn cost, or estimated cost of (a) of the Lower Lea crossing, (b) repairs and renewal to the Silvertown flyover, (c) the north Woolwich road widening and improvements, (d) the new Connaught crossing, (e) the Albert Dock spine road and associated intersections and (f) the Eastern G gateway link road in the London borough of Newham at 1993 or other specified year prices; and what is the estimated cost of the east London river crossing and its approaches on both sides of the Thames.

Mr. Norris: The costs for the road schemes listed by the hon. Member are as follows:

| | £ million (including VAT) |
|---|---|
| (a) Lower Lea Crossing | 37·5 |
| (b) Silvertown Flyover repairs | [1]0·5 |
| (c) North Woolwich Road Improvements | [1]3·0 |
| (d) Connaught Crossing | 26·0 |
| (e) Albert Dock Spine Road | 38·5 |
| (f) Eastern Gateway Access Road | 10·8 |
| (g) East London River Crossing | [2]300·0 |

[1] Estimates at current prices.
[2] At 1989 prices; also includes land costs.

Only scheme (g) is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. Schemes (a), (d), (e) and (f) are the responsibility of the London Docklands development corporation. Schemes (b) and (c) are the responsibility of the London borough of Newham.

Road Schemes (Protestors)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all the occasions when his Department has sought orders for the seizure of property from those protesting against proposed new road schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: My Department has been unable to identify any such cases.

Railway Track Maintenance

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the cost per mile of maintaining mainline railway track and branch line railway track (a) throughout the British Rail network and (b) in the south Wales and western regions.

Mr. Freeman: My Department does not hold this information. Maintenance programmes and costs are a matter for the British Railways Board.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Home Helps

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are currently in receipt of home help service in the Down and Lisburn unit of management; and what was the comparable figure for the same period last year.

Mr. Ancram: In May 1992, the latest date for which information is available, 2,436 people were in receipt of the home help service in the Down and Lisburn unit of management. In May 1991, the number of recipients was 2,444.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people who are currently in receipt of home help service in the Down and Lisburn unit of management have been subject to a reduction in hours.

Mr. Ancram: A total of 453 people who are currently in receipt of home help service in the Down and Lisburn unit of management have had a reduction in home help hours.

Renewables Order

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress of his Department in establishing a Renewables Order for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: The Department of Economic Development intends to ask NIE plc to organise a competitive tender to secure generation capacity from plant using renewable sources of energy, with a view to making a non-fossil fuel order. The necessary arrangements for the tender competition are being finalised at present and I hope to make a further statement in the near future.

Clubs

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he intends to meet representatives of the Northern Ireland Federation of Clubs and the Club and Institute Union to discuss the registration of clubs under the Industrial and Provident Societies Act (Northern Ireland) 1969; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Clubs may be registered under the Industrial and Provident Societies Act (Northern Ireland) 1969 if they satisfy certain conditions. These will be notified shortly to representatives of the Northern Ireland Federation of Clubs and the Club and Institute Union Ltd. Applications to register from clubs may then follow.

Ballyconnell Canal

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 24 May, Official Report, columns 461-62, what estimate he has made of the overall administrative costs of the Ballyconnell canal project met in (a) Northern Ireland and (b) in the Republic of Ireland; and how many persons in his Department have been engaged in such work.

Mr. Ancram: The construction work on the Ballyconnell canal is being managed by the Electricity Supply Board in the Republic of Ireland, which reports to a joint steering group comprising six representatives from Northern Ireland Government Departments and six representatives from Republic of Ireland Government Departments. The joint steering group oversees the project, deals with policy issues, approves expenditure and monitors progress. It meets two or three times a year. In addition to these formal meetings, there is also ad hoc liaison between the two Governments and with the project managers, including contacts at local level to facilitate works progress. It is not possible to estimate the overall administrative costs of the project.

Director General for Electricity Regulation

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the address of the office of the new Director General for Electricity Regulation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: The address is:

Office of Electricity Regulation Northern Ireland (OFFER NI)
Brookmount Buildings
42 Fountain Street
BELFAST
BT1 5EE

Forensic Science Laboratory, Newtownbreda

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many claims for compensation, arising from the IRA bomb at the forensic science laboratory at Newtownbreda in September 1992 are still to be concluded.

Mr. Mates: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Compensation Agency under its chief executive, Mr. J. Robinson. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from John Robinson to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 22 June 1993:

I refer to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning the number of compensation claims arising from the IRA bomb at Newtownbreda in September 1992 which have still to be concluded.

The following is a summary of progress to date:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| Number of applications received | 902 |
| Number disallowed | 37 |
| Number of cases in which final compensation has been paid | 512 |
| Number in which formal offers of settlement have been made | 157 |
| Number still to be resolved and which are at various stages of completion | 196 |
| Number of interim payments made in cases still to be resolved | 173 |

I hope this is helpful.

Ballynahone Bog

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he now intends to take any action to prevent damage to Ballynahone bog.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 21 June 1993]: The Bulrush Peat Company Ltd. has permission for the extraction of peat from part of Ballynahone bog. This followed a detailed public inquiry. While the Department of the Environment, Northern Ireland has no plans to revoke the permission, I shall shortly be announcing a policy statement on how the Government intend to address the issues of peat bogs in Northern Ireland.

HEALTH

Neonatal Care

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of nurses per neo-natal cot nationally and per region at the latest available date.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available in the form requested. Latest data on the number of beds on neo-natal wards and nursing staff employed in special care baby units are shown in the tables.

Table 1: Average number of daily available beds 1990-91 England, regional health authority (RHA) and special health authorities

| Neonates | Number |
|---|---|

GPs (Advocates)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she plans to extend the role of general practitioners as independent advocates for patients to hospital doctors.

Dr. Mawhinney: General practitioners already act as advocates of their patients in providing general medical services and referring patients to specialist services if required. GP fund holding builds on this principle by enabling volunteer practices to purchase directly a range of hospital and community services on behalf of their patients. This is proving a great success and our aim is to extend the benefits to as many patients as possible.

Social Work

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps have been taken by her Department to encourage the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work to change its equal opportunities policies; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The Department shares the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work's—CCETSW—commitment to ensure that individuals are not unfairly disadvantaged on the grounds of age, gender, disability, language, including sign language, race or religion.

Various aspects of the implementation of CCETSW's equal opportunities policy were discussed at the last annual ministerial review in December 1992. It was emphasised that CCETSW should not give a misleading impression in its documentation about the emphasis it places on anti-racist and other anti-discriminatory issues in training, and this must not be at the expense of receiving a solid, practical grounding in other important professional and management skills.

Laser Photorefractive Keratectomy

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have been treated in the NHS for (a) myopia and (b) other eyesight disorders by laser photorefractive keratectomy; and what information she has on the extent of the use of this treatment in the private sector.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on her assessment of laser photorefractive keratectomy as a treatment to correct myopia; and what plans she has to make it available free of charge to patients at NHS hospitals.

Dr. Mawhinney: Different types of laser are now being used in the national health service for the treatment of various eye conditions, including glaucoma. The use of photorefractive keratectomy, or excimer, lasers for treating myopia—short-sightedness—is still subject to research. An evaluation study is currently under way and is not expected to report before 1994. The evaluation is important, particularly as most people who are short-sighted and seek laser treatment do not have an eye disease and wish only to avoid wearing spectacles or contact lenses.

The form of treatment of myopia is, therefore, currently only available to NHS patients as part of ongoing research.

Optical Appliances

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what has been the total number of optical appliances vouchers redeemed in each year since 1986;

(2) what was the total cost of the optical appliances voucher scheme in each year since 1986.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information for England is shown in the table.

| | Numbers of vouchers paid for (millions) | Cost of vouchers (£ million) |
|---|---|---|
| 1986-87[1] | 1·46 | 27·0 |
| 1987-88 | 2·52 | 47·9 |
| 1988-89 | 2·26 | 52·1 |
| 1989-90 | 2·27 | 53·6 |
| 1990-91 | 2·43 | 63·9 |
| 1991-92 | 2·84 | 79·8 |
| 1992-93 | 3·18 | [2]99·9 |

[1] Figures are for nine months only following introduction of the scheme on 1 July 1986.
[2] Provisional figures.

Dietary Health

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish in tabula form details of all grants currently approved by her Department to support projects connected with diet health and cookery including the amount of the grant, the period for which it has been approved, the name and location of the person or organisation to which it is made and the name of the person responsible for accounting to her for the expenditure of public funds in each case.

Mr. Sackville: The Department is currently funding one such project—"Get Cooking" managed by the National Food Alliance which aims to improve the basic cooking skills of young people as a contribution to healthy eating. Funding amounts to £60,000 over two years—£31,000 in 1992-93 and £29,000 in 1993-94—and is subject to the normal vigorous financial management of all projects awarded funding under section 64 of the Health Service and Public Health Act 1968.

Opticians

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans she has to establish an official complaints body to cover all dispensing opticians;

(2) what representations she has received concerning the need for an official complaints body for customers of dispensing opticians.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have no plans to set up a body to investigate complaints against dispensing opticians, who are independent practitioners, nor have we received any representations to do so. The bodies representing optometrists and dispensing opticians set up an independent consumer complaints' system—the optical consumer complaints service—in January this year, and all dispensing opticians' practices have been encouraged to become members.

NHS Drugs

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the total NHS budget in each of the last 10 years was spent on drugs; how many items were prescribed per head of population; and what corresponding information she has from other EC countries.

Dr. Mawhinney: The available information is shown in the tables. The total national health service drugs bill comprises expenditure by family health services—FHS—and the hospital and community health services—HCHS. Items prescribed per head of population relate to prescriptions written by general practitioners and dispensed within the FHS. Comparable data for the other countries in the European Community are not available.

| Year | Total NHS drugs bill as a percentage of total NHS expenditure |
|---|---|
| 1982-83 | 10·2 |
| 1983-84 | 10·7 |
| 1984-85 | 10·4 |
| 1985-86 | 10·5 |
| 1986-87 | 10·6 |
| 1987-88 | 10·7 |
| 1988-89 | 10·8 |
| 1989-90 | 11·2 |
| 1990-91 | 10·7 |
| 1991-92 | 10·9 |

Note: 1992-93 expenditure figures are not yet available.

| Year | Items prescribed per head of population |
|---|---|
| 1983 | 7·2 |
| 1984 | 7·3 |
| 1985 | 7·3 |
| 1986 | 7·3 |
| 1987 | 7·6 |
| 1988 | 7·9 |
| 1989 | 8·0 |
| 1990 | 8·3 |
| 1991 | 8·5 |
| 1992 | 8·8 |

Note: Prior to 1991, prescription items were based on dispensing fees paid to contractors. From 1991, the actual numbers of items are shown.

Hospital Patients

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients in the Mid-Staffordshire health authority who have been referred by their general practitioner to a hospital consultant are currently not being put on an active waiting list and not being given any indication of when an appointment will be available.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally. Patients who are referred to a hospital consultant by a general medical practitioner should either be seen immediately or put on an out-patient waiting list depending on their clinical priority. No one should have to wait to be put on an out-patient waiting list after he or she has been referred by his or her GP.

Lung Cancer, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 16 June, Official Report, column 619, whether she will now fund a study of the causes of lung cancer in Liverpool; what is the future of the Sefton general hospital chest clinic in Liverpool; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Research studies which are locally based are the responsibility of the regional health authority and would not normally be funded from the Department's central research budget. It would be for Mersey RHA to consider whether or not to mount a study of the causes of lung cancer in Liverpool in the light of its knowledge of local needs, resources and priorities.

The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. D. H. Tod, the chairman of Liverpool health authority, concerning the future of the Sefton general hospital chest clinic.

Diabetics

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to introduce prescription charges for insulin-dependent diabetics.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Prostate Cancer

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 11 June, Official Report, column 373, if she will list the research projects currently being undertaken into the risks from prostate cancer.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not routinely collected, but we are aware of several projects including studies in Newport and Bristol.

Christchurch

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the latest available figures for (a) registered disabled, (b) registered blind people and (c) people in residential nursing homes in the parliamentary constituency of Christchurch.

Mr. Bowis: Information is not available in the form requested. The latest available figures for registered disabled and registered blind people are published by local authority in "Register of Physically Disabled Persons (General Classes) at 31 March 1990, England" and "Registered Blind and Partially Sighted People at 31 March 1991, England". The centrally available information on nursing homes is the number of available beds and is published in "Private Hospitals, Homes and Clinics registered under section 23 of the Registered Homes Act 1984, at 31 March 1991, England". Copies of the publications are available in the Library.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest estimate by the Registrar General of Populations of those aged 17 years and over, plus 63 per cent. of those aged 16 years, for the district council area that includes the parliamentary constituency of Christchurch, together with the equivalent year's electoral registration figures, expressed as a percentage of these population estimates.

Mr. Sackville: There are 72,211 parliamentary electors on the 1993 register for the Christchurch constituency. Population estimates are not available for parliamentary constituencies. The Christchurch parliamentary constituency comprises almost all—99·5 per cent.—of the parliamentary electors of Christchurch district part—56·7 per cent.—of the electors of West Dorset district and a very small part of—0·02 per cent.—of the electors of New Forest district. The latest population estimates available relate to mid-1991. The estimates for residents aged 17 and over, plus 63 per cent. of those aged 16, at that date are 35,000 in the whole of Christchurch district, 70,800 in the whole of West Dorset district and 130,900 in the whole of New Forest district.

Pharmaceutical Retail Outlets

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will name the studies on which she has based her predictions as to the future patterns of pharmaceutical retail outlets subsequent to implementation of her proposals for a new pattern of payment to their proprietors.

Dr. Mawhinney: Community pharmacists are independent commercial businesses: it is for them to determine their development strategies. Through our proposals, the Government will ensure that patients continue to enjoy reasonable access to a local pharmacy.

NHS Employees

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average annual cost of employing (a) a senior manager, (b) a consultant, (c) a senior house officer, (d) a qualified nurse, (e) an ambulance driver, (f) a porter, (g) a medical laboratory, scientific officer and (h) a cleaner in the NHS in each year since 1986-87 at (i) cash prices and (ii) 1986-87 prices.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is not readily available. The figures shown in the tables are estimated by combining information from national health service annual accounts and from medical and non-medical censuses.

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish details of the numbers of health service directly employed staff by main staff group each year from 1987 to 1992; and if she will give the changes between each year and over the whole period in numbers and percentages.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information available is shown in the table. More comprehensive information about national health service manpower is published in the "Statistical Bulletin on NHS hospital and community health services non-medical staff in England: 1981-1991" and associated press release—H93/626 NHS Non-Medical Workforce Statistics—dated 12 March 1993, copies of which are available in the Library.

Source: NHS Workforce in England/KM49 Census.

Notes:

All figures are rounded to the nearest 10.
Information for 30 September 1992 is not yet available.
The table reflects some redesignation between staff groups.
Project 2000 trainees are not included in the above nursing and midwifery figures.
Medical and dental staff figures exclude locums.
Nursing and midwifery figures exclude agency staff.

The increase in managers can largely be explained by a phased introduction of a general and senior manager class which includes many people previously classed under clinical, professional and administrative headings. For example, many senior nurses are now counted as senior managers. Management in the NHS still only represents 1·7 per cent. of the total NHS work force and 3 per cent. of all pay expenditure.

Project 2000 nurse training was introduced in 1989 and will eventually become the only form of general qualified nurse training. At September 1990 there were about 3,000 Project 2000 students; at September 1991 there were 10,500. There were corresponding falls in the number of traditional student nurses. Project 2000 students are considered to be supernumerary and are not included in work force statistics.

The general and senior managers category was introduced in phases from 1984 following the Griffiths report of 1983, which identified a severe shortage of managers in the NHS. The first phase was the appointment of a general manager in each health authority and hospital and community health service—HCHS—unit. In 1987, the first senior managers were appointed—up to seven posts at board level in each health authority. In 1989, the senior manager class was extended to staff below board level, and to those in family health services authorities and HCHS units. Virtually all general and senior management posts created up to 1989 replaced posts formerly counted within the administrative and clerical and other staff groups. In 1990 and 1991, transfers of staff into the senior manager category from other staff groups continued. New funds were provided as a planned strengthening of the personnel, information and finance functions in preparation for the NHS reforms.

Schizophrenia

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all Government-funded research into the causes of schizophrenia, giving the amount of funding in each case; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: In 1993-94, the Department is committed to fund projects on schizophrenia costing around £290,000. These projects concern detecting early signs of relapse, the long-term outcome of psychosis in Afro-Caribbean patients and a prospective study of psychoses in British Afro-Caribbean people.

The Medical Research Council, which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, has funded research directly related to schizophrenia to a value of £1·6 million in 1991-92, the latest figures available, and an additional £678,000 was for general mental illness research relevant to schizophrenia.

Nurses and Midwives

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish details of the whole-time equivalent numbers of (a) agency and (b) bank nursing and midwifery staff employed in the NHS for each year from 1987 to 1992.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

| | Bank | Agency |
|---|---|---|
| 1987 | 4,920 | 6,130 |
| 1988 | 5,830 | 6,240 |
| 1989 | 5,910 | 7,230 |
| 1990 | 6,230 | 6,710 |
| 1991 | 8,540 | 3,930 |

Note: Figures are rounded to the nearest 10 whole-time equivalent.

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish details of the numbers of qualified NHS nurses and midwives, unqualified NHS nursing staff and nursing learners representing these as a percentage of the total NHS nursing and midwifery staff, including Project 2000 students for the years (a) 1989, (b) 1990, (c) 1991 and (d) 1992.

Mr. Sackville: Figures for 1992 are not yet available. The latest available figures are shown in the table.

National Health Service Nursing and Midwifery Staff (excluding agency) at 30 September, England (whole-time equivalents)

Occupational Therapists

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many occupational therapists were employed within each district health authority in each of the last 10 years.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 10 June 1993]: This information will be placed in the Library. The figures show a steady increase over the 10-year period, and in some regions the number has more than doubled.

$PM_{10}$

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 7 June, Official Report, columns 43-44, whether levels of $PM_{10}$ particulate found in the United Kingdom are within the range of those found in United States studies demonstrating an association between $PM_{10}$ levels and mortality; and what assessment she has made of whether the speciation of $PM_{10}$ is comparable between the two countries.

Mr. Yeo: I have been asked to reply.

Of the studies referred to in the reply to the answer of 7 June, the study in the Utah valley was the only one concerned with $PM_{10}$ particulate pollution. The concentrations of $PM_{10}$ measured in that study were, overall, higher than those measured to date in the United Kingdom. The mean $PM_{10}$ value in the Utah valley study was 47 $\mu g/m^3$ while the means in the six United Kingdom cities in 1992 for which data are available ranged from 22-31 $\mu g/m^3$. The highest daily value measured in the Utah valley study was 355 $\mu g/m^3$, while the corresponding United Kingdom values ranged from 72-228 $\mu g/m^3$.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Environmental Health Inspections

Ms Walley: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee on what dates environmental health officers inspected food preparation and eating areas relating to (a) Westminster Hall Cafeteria, (b) the Strangers' Cafeteria, (c) the Members' Cafeteria, (d) the Members' Tea Room, (e) the Strangers' Dining Room, (f) the Members' Dining Room and (g) the Pugin Room in each of the last four years; what recommendations were made; what action was taken; and what is his estimate of the risk to health from mice.

Mr. Colin Shepherd: The health, safety and hygiene needs of the Refreshment Department's kitchens and catering outlets are major elements in the Catering Committee's current inquiry into refreshment services for the House of Commons. I shall ask the Director of Catering Services to write to the hon. Member in reply to the points of administrative detail raised in her question.

No. 1 Parliament Street

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee (1) what contracts are still outstanding for ongoing maintenance at No. 1 Parliament street with building contractors who were involved in the modernisation of this building; and to what extent they are still liable for the responsibility of repairing defects which now exist within this building;

(2) if he will list the defects which have been reported and repaired at No. 1 Parliament street since January;

(3) if he will make a statement on the reasons for the defects in the cooling and ventilation systems at No. 1 Parliament street; when this system will be working correctly; what action is being taken to disperse cooking smells in the building; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ray Powell: The main contractor's liability period for engineering defects expired in March 1992, but the company is still carrying out residual work on the circle lock doors and the cooling system which have failed to meet the required standards. No other major defects have been reported or identified although, of course, day-to-day maintenance is undertaken within the building to cover minor items which naturally arise.

There have been few complaints about cooking smells in the building. The capacity and performance of the cooling system will be improved following work to balance the distribution of the output and improve water filters and valves. This work is expected to be completed in July. In addition, the Director of Works is investigating whether the ventilation system is working to full efficiency.

Parliamentary Estate

Ms Abbott: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what is the size of the parliamentary estate; and how many (a) rooms and (b) bars and restaurants there are in that part for which this House is responsible.

Mr. Ray Powell: The Parliamentary Estate of both Houses comprises some 116,000 $m^2$ of which 87,000 $m^2$ is occupied by this House. Within that part of the Palace and its precincts under the control of the House, there are 1,206 offices and 36 Committee or meeting rooms. It is not possible to provide any meaningful estimate of the total number of rooms; they do, however, contain 14 restaurants or cafeteria and nine bars.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to the numbers and locations of Somalis in refugee camps; and what progress has been made in assisting them to return to their homes.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Kenya has hosted some 330,000 Somali refugees, mainly in the east of the country. There are 90,000 including some Ethiopians in Djibouti, with a further 62,000 Somalis in Yemen and 150,000 in Saudi Arabia.

Latest information suggests that up to 150,000 out of a total of 430,000 refugees have now spontaneously returned from Ethiopia to northern Somalia. Some 30,000 Somalis have also been voluntarily repatriated from Kenya, and another 90,000 from Kenya have so far registered with UNHCR for voluntary repatriation as soon as possible.

UNHCR is preparing a regional repatriation plan for several hundred thousand Somali refugees to return from Kenya, Ethiopia, Yemen and Djibouti.

European Bank for Reconstruction and Development

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to ensure that the report by the Audit Committee of the European bank for reconstruction and development on financial management is published.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The audit committee of directors of the European bank for reconstruction and development plans to report to the board of directors on July 15. We expect the committee's findings to be made public but this will be a decision for the board as a whole.

ENVIRONMENT

Criminal Offences

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criminal offences have been created by his Department by way of delegated legislation in the last five years.

Mr. Gummer: This information can be given only at disproportionate cost.

MINIS 14 Documents

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) of 11 June, Official Report, column 358, how many copies of his Department's MINIS 14 documents have been printed; at what cost; and to whom he is circulating them.

Mr. Gummer: MINIS 14 is printed in eight parts. The number of copies printed for each part is:

|---|---|
| Part 1: Local Government Group | 90 |
| Part 2: Housing and Urban Group | 90 |
| Part 3: Planning, Rural Affairs and Water Group | 90 |
| Part 4: Environmental Protection Group | 90 |
| Part 5: Principal Establishments and Finance Officer's Command | 90 |
| Part 6: Construction Directorate | 85 |
| Part 7: Regional Offices | 85 |
| Part 8: Legal Command; Information Directorate and Private Secretaries' Office | 90 |

The cost of printing MINIS 14 was £4,496; full sets of MINIS 14 were circulated to the House of Commons Library, the House of Lords Library, the Annex Library, the Environment Select Committee, the National Audit Office, HM Treasury, the DOE trade union side, the Treasury and Civil Service Committee, the DOE libraries, DOE Ministers, the DOE permanent secretary and DOE deputy secretaries. DOE directors are given copies of their own return. Copies of MINIS 14 are available for sale.

Waste Recycling

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans the Government have to increase the waste recycling target to above 25 per cent. by the year 2000.

Mr. Yeo: We have no such plans at present.

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will include energy recovered from waste incineration in his Department's waste recycling targets.

Mr. Yeo: The Government consider that recovering energy from waste is a legitimate means of recycling. Our current target, to recycle half of all household waste which can be recycled, relates to materials recycling and composting. However, we have said that we will re-examine the idea of setting targets for energy recovery from waste among other ways of encouraging the greater use of this option. I am currently exploring this issue with colleagues at the Department of Trade and Industry.

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent assessment he has made as to the feasibility of achieving the target of recycling 25 per cent. of all domestic waste by the year 2000; what steps his Department is making to encourage the reaching of this target; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The Government have funded research on a number of the factors which affect the feasibility of recycling 25 per cent. of household waste by the year 2000, including: the costs and benefits of different collection methods; technical and market barriers; and the economic framework for recycling.

Having considered those research results which are already available, we remain committed to our target. The main measures which we are taking to encourage recycling are set out in "This Common Inheritance, The Second Year Report" (Cm 2068). In particular:

—we have allocated £15 million in supplementary credit approvals to local authorities to encourage provision of facilities for recycling in 1993-94;

—we have announced our intention to increase recycling credits from 1 April 1994, so that they reflect the full economic costs of disposal;

—we are holding discussions with a range of industries, with a view to establishing how they might contribute to the achievement of the 25 per cent. target.

Municipal Waste Disposal

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what encouragement he is giving to alternative methods of municipal waste disposal, other than landfill.

Mr. Yeo: The Government's policy is to set in place the necessary regulatory and economic framework to ensure that waste disposal operations do not lead to pollution of the environment or harm to human health. Within this framework, the Government believe that the market should generally decide the disposal option for particular waste types.

The Royal Commission on environmental pollution recently recommended the introduction of a levy on waste going to landfill to reflect the full environmental cost of this form of waste disposal. We are currently considering this recommendation, along with other proposals for changing the economic framework for waste disposal.

The Government are keen to promote the development of schemes which derive energy from waste. The non-fossil fuel obligation provides the initial stimulus for such schemes. We also have programmes of work under way to improve composting techniques and to investigate markets for composts.

Toxic Wastes

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received in recent months concerning the import and incineration of toxic wastes.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer the then Secretary of State for the Environment gave on 28 April, Official Report, columns 949-50, to the hon. Member for Newport, East (Mr. Hughes).

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will launch a comprehensive assessment on the state of toxic tips in the United Kingdom and their effect on groundwater supplies.

Mr. Yeo: A research study has been initiated to review the extent and type of groundwater contamination associated with the landfilling of controlled wastes. The work aims to provide information about the significance of any identified groundwater contamination, when compared with background levels and with other sources of contamination, and in relation to drinking water standards. The project is expected to be completed in 1995-96.

Redundant Farm Buildings

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the environment what grant aid is available for the purpose of restoring redundant farm houses and associated buildings in order that they may again form the basis of an active farming unit.

Sir George Young: There are no grants specifically for this purpose. However, under the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, renovation grants may be available in appropriate cases for repairs and improvements to farm houses and other buildings that have planning consent for conversion to residential use.

Unleaded Petrol

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress his Department has made in meeting its target to provide a monthly analysis of uptake of unleaded petrol.

Mr. Yeo: A monthly analysis of the uptake of unleaded petrol is published by the Department of Trade and Industry in its "Advance Energy Statistics" press notice, issued on the first Wednesday of each month.

United Nations Environment Programme

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in Her Majesty's Government's policy to work to improve the financial, managerial and administrative activities of the United Nations Environment Programme.

Mr. Yeo: Our policy remains unchanged. We are major contributors to the United Nations Environment Programme, and we support the efforts the new executive director is making to improve the programme's efficiency and effectiveness.

Water Services

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has received the report of the Director General of Water Services for 1992.

Mr. Yeo: I am pleased to announce that the director general has prepared his report of 1992 and copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Condensation

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environmment what work the Building Research Establishment has carried out on the effect on people's health of condensation in the home.

Sir George Young [holding answer 10 June 1993]: It is not normally suggested that condensation has a direct effect on physical health. The potential health consequences of condensation relate to its role in permitting the growth of fungi and mites. Airborne fragments of fungi and mites can give rise to respiratory or skin reactions, particularly in sensitive individuals.

The Building Research Establishment executive agency (BRE) is and has long been involved in a range of research which will elucidate the prevalence of condensation, fungi and mites in the home, and the likely health effects of these levels. A list of the major publications resulting from the work attached. BRE publications are available from the BRE bookshop (Tel. 0923 664444).

Severn Estuary Special Protection Area

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to designate the middle Severn estuary proposed special protection area for nature conservation and register it with the European Commission.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 22 June 1993]: The Severn estuary is one of a programme of sites on which the Department is currently working to complete the network of special protection areas (SPAs) in the United Kingdom. SPA designation has significant long-term implications for both nature conservation and land use planning. Detailed consultations are essential to ensure that any conflicts of interest are closely examined, together with the scientific evidence, before a site is designated. I am unable to say when a decision about the Severn will be taken. The Government have designated 72 special protection areas, 23 in the past 12 months.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish details of EC grants available to those required to replace CFC-dependent machinery; if the Government will facilitate the release of EC grants by matching them with United Kingdom funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

There are no EC grants available for those required to replace CFC-dependent machinery. Under the current EC framework governing state aid, member states are, however, permitted to provide grants, within specified limits, to support investments designed to protect the environment.

Over the past three years, the United Kingdom has committed some £12 million of investment support to the development and demonstration of innovative environmental technologies through two schemes, the joint DTI/DOE environmental technology innovation scheme and the DTI's environmental management options scheme. International environmental research and development is also supported through the EUREKA Euroenviron programme.

The Government are now considering how best to take forward then support for environmental technologies, but grants solely to subsidise compliance with minimum legal environmental standards would be contrary to the polluter-pays principle.

DEFENCE

Z-berths, Swansea

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the nuclear safety scheme drawn up in association with the designation of Swansea as a Z-berth for nuclear submarines.

Mr. Hanley: The document has not yet been completed as work is continuing on the development of a suitable public safety scheme for the Swansea Z-berth.

Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer on 10 June, Official Report, column 340, if he will make it his policy to seek further information from the United States Administration about the CIA report on Iraq's military capabilities.

Mr. Hanley: Yes.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Peter Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many nuclear tests were conducted by the United Kingdom, France, China, the United States of America and the Soviet Union/Russia in each year since 1985.

Mr. Aitken: The United Kingdom has carried out the following numbers of nuclear tests since 1985:

| Year | Number |
|---|---|
| 1985 | 1 |
| 1986 | 1 |
| 1987 | 1 |
| 1988 | 0 |
| 1989 | 1 |
| 1990 | 1 |
| 1991 | 1 |
| 1992 | 0 |

Nuclear tests carried out by other countries in these

Admiralty Compass Observatory

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about the radioactive contamination at Admiralty Compass Observatory in Slough; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Following a preliminary radiological monitoring survey carried out by Ministry of Defence staff at the Defence Research Agency site at Ditton Park, Slough, formerly known as the Admiralty Compass Observatory, very low levels of radium-226 contamination have been found within and adjacent to a former luminising workshop used in the manufacture of compasses from about 1940 to the mid 1950s. There is no access by members of the public to the building. The contamination external to the building is held within the soil structure and poses no hazard to members of the public. Further monitoring will be undertaken in the near future to establish more fully the extent of the contamination and to determine what remedial action is required.

Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, Slough borough council, and the royal borough of Windsor and Maidenhead council have been kept informed of the situation.

Courts Martial

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel were court-martialled in each of the last three years in (a) the Royal Navy, (b) the Royal Air Force and (c) the Army and the number of service personnel from each of these services discharged from the services as a result of their court martial.

Mr. Hanley: The number of service personnel convicted by court martial, and the number consequently dismissed in the most recent years for which figures are available, are as follows:

| | Royal Navy | Army | Royal Air Force |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1991 | | | |
| Number of offenders | 38 | 704 | 129 |
| Offenders dismissed | 21 | 281 | 32 |
| 1990 | | | |
| Number of offenders | 31 | 816 | 140 |
| Offenders dismissed | 7 | 322 | 29 |
| 1989 | | | |
| Number of offenders | 52 | 726 | 120 |
| Offenders dismissed | 16 | 270 | 40 |

Joint Forces Headquarters

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what review was carried out into the operation of the Joint Forces Headquarters in the light of Operation Granby; and what were its main conclusions.

Mr. Hanley: The operation of the joint forces headquarters—JFHQ—during Operation Granby was reviewed during the assessment of lessons from the operation. The concept of establishing for major operations a tri-service, in-theatre operational headquarters, and its relationship with the joint headquarters and Ministry of Defence in the United Kingdom, were endorsed. Other lessons included the importance during peacetime of the effective training and exercising of the joint forces operational staff who form the core of the JFHQ, and the need for early deployment of the JFHQ should it become apparent that an operation would require the substantial involvement of more than one of the three services.

RAF Leuchars

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the intended future use of the facilities recently vacated by 22 squadron search and rescue at RAF Leuchars.

Mr. Hanley: Further to the answer my right hon. Friend the Member for Epsom and Ewell (Mr. Hamilton) gave to the hon. Member for Carlisle (Mr. Martlew) on 28 April, Official Report, column 406, I can now confirm that the Aberdeen, Dundee and St. Andrews university air squadron has now relocated within the vacated SAR facility.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many reservists, of what rank, and in what roles are serving in (a) the Croatia theatre and (b) the Bosnia theatre in support of the British contribution to UNPROFOR.

Mr. Hanley: There is one member of the reserve forces serving in Croatia, a lieutenant commander of the Royal Naval Reserve public affairs branch; there are none serving in Bosnia.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many men and of what rank from (a) the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, (b) the Gordon Highlanders and (c) the Queen's Lancashire Regiment are currently serving with the Prince of Wales Own (Yorkshire) Regiment in Bosnia.

Mr. Hanley: The information is as follows:

| Rank | Number |
|---|---|
| (a) The Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders | |
| Lieutenant | 1 |
| Sergeant | 1 |
| Corporal | 4 |
| Lance Corporal | 11 |
| Private | 18 |
| (b) The Gordon Highlanders | |
| Captain | 1 |
| Lieutenant | 1 |
| Sergeant | 1 |
| Corporal | 2 |
| Lance Corporal | 7 |
| Private | 25 |
| (c) The Queen's Lancashire Regiment | |
| Lieutenant | 1 |
| Sergeant | 1 |
| Corporal | 0 |
| Lance Corporal | 10 |

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reports he has received from British forces of fighting between Croat and Muslim forces near the British Army base in Vitez on 16 June; and what representations he intends to make to Croat and Muslim authorities.

Mr. Hanley: The security situation around the British forces base at Vitez is closely monitored by troops on the ground there. On 16 June there was fighting between the Croats and Muslims in the Lasva valley near Vitez. No representations were made to the Croat or Muslim authorities.

Uranium Shells

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has received from the United States Government as to the danger to service men posed by the inhalation or ingestion of uranium dust from uranium tipped shells used during the Gulf conflict.

Mr. Hanley: My Department has received no specific formal information from the United States Government regarding the dangers to service men serving in the Gulf resulting from the use of shells tipped with depleted uranium—DU. A comprehensive health evaluation was undertaken prior to the introduction into service of DU tipped shells and the possible risks arising from the inhalation or ingestion of DU dust after impact are well understood. British forces, including those deployed to the Gulf, are issued with prior advice on how to avoid any risk association with the use of DU shells.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Market Testing

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all the market tests that have taken place in his Departments since November 1992 and indicate, in each case, whether the result was the maintenance of in-house provision, or whether the service was contracted-out.

Mr. Nelson: The information requested is as follows. It covers new market testing only and does not include the retesting of services which are already contracted-out. It also excludes market tests currently in progress but not yet completed.

| | Result |
|---|---|
| Inland Revenue | |
| Bulk Mailing (Employers' Annual Pack) | Contracted-out |
| Catering (Telford) | Contracted-out |
| Customs and Excise | |
| London HQ typing services | Retained in-house |
| Southend HQ typing services | Retained in-house |
| Regional Executive Units typing services | Retained in-house |
| London HQ messenger services | Retained in-house |
| Internal Audit | Retained in-house |
| Vehicle fleet management | Part retained in-house, part contracted-out |
| Department for National Savings | |
| Catering Services | The market test covered four units with a combination of in-house and contracted-out services. The service was retained in-house at one location, the existing external supplier selected at two others, and a fresh external supplier selected at the fourth |

Interest Rates

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received about interest rates and their effect on the economy.

Mr. Nelson: A number of such representations have been received.

Mortgage Arrears

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the number of home owners with mortgage arrears.

Mr. Nelson: The Government do not make estimates of the number of home owners with mortgage arrears. The latest figures from the Council of Mortgage Lenders—CML—which relate to the position at the end of 1992, are as follows:

| | Total | Percentage of total mortgages |
|---|---|---|
| Arrears 6-12 months | 205,010 | 2·07 |
| Arrears over 12 months | 147,040 | 1·48 |

The next CML arrears figures will be published at the end of July.

European Bank for Reconstruction and Development

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will ensure that the views of the central and eastern European shareholders in the European bank for reconstruction and development are taken fully into account alongside those of the G7 shareholders in determining how the bank should be run and in determining any future changes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The EBRD's board of directors represents all the bank's shareholders. The central and east European shareholders can express their views about the organisation of the bank through their representatives on the board of directors.

Waste Packaging

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce economic incentives to encourage the increased reclamation and recycling of waste packaging by industry.

Sir John Cope: The Government recognise the importance of increased reclamation and recycling of waste packaging. They are currently considering two consultants' reports which they commissioned, "Economic Instruments and Recovery of Resources from Waste" by Environmental Resources Ltd. and "Landfill Costs and Prices: Correcting Possible Market Distortions" by Coopers and Lybrand, and responses by local government, industry and interested individuals. The reports and the responses will help to inform the Government's consideration of whether economic instruments might be used to stimulate higher recovery and recycling rates for waste, including packaging waste.

Balance of Payments

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the latest position of Britain's balance of payments.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. Burden) on 17 June, at columns 977-78.

Confidential Information (Disposal)

Dr. Liam Fox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what monitoring has been carried out of the disposal of confidential information collected under the Financial Services Act 1986.

Mr. Nelson: Confidential information collected under the Financial Services Act is likely to be information the disclosure of which is restricted under the provisions of sections 179 and 180 of the Act. Each Government Department or regulator which obtains such information is responsible for meeting its confidentiality obligations in relation to the information.

Public Ownership

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the net return to the Exchequer at 1993 prices in their last full year in public ownership of British Gas, British Telecom, the British National Oil Corporation, Enterprise Oil, and each of the nationalised electricity generating and distribution undertakings.

Mr. Dorrell: The net return to the Exchequer, defined as the negative external financing requirement in each case, at 1993-94 prices was as follows:

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| British Gas (1986-87) | 1,020 |
| British Telecom (1984-85) | 553 |
| Enterprise Oil (1984-85) | 32 |

British National Oil Corporation had a positive external financing requirement of £48 million in its last year in public ownership—1985-86—in 1993-94 prices.

Comparable figures for the individual electricity companies are not available.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what part the regional arts boards and regional sports councils will play in the allocation of funds from the national lottery; and what steps are being taken to ensure an equitable distribution across the country.

Mr. Brooke: The role of the regional arts boards and of the regional offices of the Sports Council will be for the distributing bodies themselves to decide. In reporting on the use to which they have put lottery funds, distributors will be expected to show a reasonable and appropriate response to applications throughout the areas they cover.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will publish the written guidance issued to the chief officers of the National Heritage Memorial Fund, the Arts Council or the Sport Council concerning the distribution of proceeds from the national lottery.

Mr. Sproat: No such guidance has been issued.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if projects eligible for Government funding will also be eligible for funding under the proposed national lottery.

Mr. Sproat: My right hon. Friend will have powers under clause 24 of the National Lottery etc. Bill to direct the matters to be taken into account by the distributive bodies in exercising their functions under the Bill. My right hon. Friend is not minded to use those powers to direct that projects eligible for Government funding should not be eligible for national lottery funding. It will be for the distributive bodies to determine their own policy in this matter.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Yugoslavia

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what plans he has to raise the threat of military action by Croatian armed forces against the Serbs of Krajina with European Foreign Ministers with a view to planning a swift and common response in the event of such aggression;

(2) further to his answer of 19 May to the hon. Member for Westbury (Mr. Faber), Official Report, column 165, what diplomatic and economic measures against the republic of Croatia are under consideration in the event of continuing Croat aggression in Bosnia-Herzegovina or Krajina; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what representations have been made to General Tudjman regarding the threat of military action by his forces against Serbs in Croatia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The conflict in Croatia has been discussed on several occasions by EC Foreign Ministers. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs sent a message to President Tudjman on 15 June expressing our concern that the Croatian Government should not resort to force in order to resolve the situation in the Krajinas, which the international community recognises as Croatian sovereign territory. We welcome a similar message sent on the same day by Chancellor Kohl of Germany.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what assessment he has made of whether the explosion in the Bosnian town of Sifluk on 17 June was a deliberate or targeted assault against British personnel; and if he will make a statement;

(2) If he will make a statement on the injury of United Kingdom citizens by a remote-controlled mine in the village of Sifluk, Bosnia-Herzegovina on 17 June; and if he will make representations to the Croatian authorities.

Mr. Goodlad: British Forces serving under UNPROFOR auspices in central Bosnia have reported this incident to the Ministry of Defence in London. Three people in a routine patrol were injured by a mine which exploded in a tree at a Bosnian Croat checkpoint near Vitez; one of those injured was a British journalist. There is no evidence to suggest that this was a premeditated attack by Bosnian Croat HVO forces. We condemn the deliberate targeting of any UN personnel. The safety of our troops is a prime concern and we shall continue to monitor the situation closely. It was announced on 10 June that we have made reinforcements available if necessary to protect British troops already in central Bosnia. We have made it clear to the Croatian Government that we expect them to use their influence with the Bosnian Croat forces to prevent such attacks.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the United States Secretary of State on the latter's assessment of the effect of the recognition by Germany of Croatia on the situation in the former Yugoslavia; and if he will convey Her Majesty's Government's opinion on this to the Government of Germany.

Mr. Goodlad: There have been no specific discussions between my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and the United States Secretary of State on this matter. The decision to recognise Croatia was taken by the EC and its member states in the light of a report submitted by the International Conference Arbitration Commission.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to oppose, in the United Nations Security Council, moves to call a meeting of the United Nations General Assembly with the purpose of rejecting the latest proposals made by Bosnian-Serbs and Bosnian-Croats for the future

Government of their country; and if a policy of self-determination by majority consensus will be applied to all former Yugoslav republics.

Mr. Goodlad: We are unaware of any moves in the United Nations to call such a meeting of the General Assembly. The Copenhagen European Council in its declaration of 22 June reaffirmed its conviction that a negotiated settlement in Bosnia has to be based on the principles of the London conference.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what report he has received from the co-chairman of the conference on the former Yugoslavia of progress made during talks in Geneva on 16 and 17 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The right hon. and noble Lord Owen briefed European Community Foreign Ministers on 20 June on the eve of the Copenhagen European Council on 21 and 22 June. He outlined proposals on Bosnia put forward by Presidents Milosevic and Tudjman on 16 June at talks between the parties in Geneva and President Izetbegovic's reaction, and reported that a further round of talks would take place in Geneva on 23 June.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to discuss with the United States Administration issues raised during the meeting of the conference on the former Yugoslavia in Geneva on 16 and 17 June.

Mr. Goodlad: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs spoke to United States Secretary of State, Warren Christopher, on 18 and 20 June to brief him on European Community thinking on the conflict in Bosnia following the latest round of negotiations in Geneva on 16 June. We shall continue to maintain close contact on this question with the United States Administration.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Bosnian-Muslim leader, Alija Izetbegovic in respect of fighting in Kakanj between 13 and 16 June; and what is his estimate of the numbers of civilians who have been displaced by Bosnian-Muslim forces.

Mr. Goodlad: During his meeting with President Izetbegovic on 14 June, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs expressed concern about reports of Muslim atrocities against Bosnian Croats in central Bosnia. Large numbers of civilians have been displaced by military action taken by all three parties in Bosnia; we have no reliable estimates of the numbers displaced by recent fighting in the Kakanj area.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to President Izetbegovic regarding targeting of civilians by Muslim forces active in Bosnia-Herzegovina;

(2) if he will make a statement following his talks with President Izetbegovic on 14 June.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) on 16 June, at column 642.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Secretary-General of the United Nations about the deployment of United Nations monitors along the border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Mr. Goodlad: On 11 June, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 838 which calls on the Secretary-General to submit a report on options for the deployment of international observers on the borders of Bosnia-Herzegovina. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has made no separate representations to the Secretary-General on this subject.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to oppose the division of Bosnia-Herzegovina into three ethnic entities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: In its declaration of 22 June, the Copenhagen European Council stated that it would encourage the co-chairmen of the international conference for the former Yugoslavia to promote a fair and viable settlement acceptable to all three constituent people of Bosnia-Herzegovina, and that it would not accept a territorial solution dictated by the Serbs and Croats at the expense of the Bosnian Muslims.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what positive steps the Government of Serbia have taken since the beginning of June to assist the international community to find a solution to the Bosnian civil war; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: During discussions in Geneva on 16 June, President Milosevic of Serbia, together with President Tudjman of Croatia, proposed new territorial arrangements within the existing borders of Bosnia-Herzegovina. A political settlement between the parties will require Bosnian Serb withdrawal from territories seized by force and we call on the Government of Serbia to press for this. The Copenhagen European Council stated in its declaration of 22 June that we would not accept a territorial solution dictated by the Serbs and Croats at the expense of the Bosnian Muslims.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last discussed the possible use of air strikes against Bosnian Serb positions with the United States Administration.

Mr. Goodlad: We remain in close contact with the United States on the situation in Bosnia. Recent discussions on the use of air power, notably at the North Atlantic Council in Athens on 10 June, have focused on support for UNPROFOR in the performance of its overall mandate in Bosnia. Both we and the United States have offered aircraft for this purpose.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of the note Verbale S-24900-Add.27 of 16 March from the United Nations Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council.

Mr. Goodlad: Yes. A copy of the document will be sent to the library shortly.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have received from (a) the Secretary-General of the United Nations and (b) the President of the Security Council about another meeting of the London conference; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The United Nations Secretary-General has on a number of occasions, including in contacts with Her Majesty's Government, suggested that the international community should consider whether to convene the international conference for the former Yugoslavia. No proposals of this kind have been received from the President of the Security Council.

Israel (Boycott)

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his oral answer of 16 June to the hon. and learned Member for Burton (Sir I. Lawrence), Official Report, column 850, what information he has to confirm the reports that the Kuwaiti Government have abandoned the application of the boycott of Israel to third countries.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Kuwaiti authorities have told us that they are no longer applying the secondary and tertiary aspects of the boycott.

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the authority structure of the United Nations effort in Somalia; what is the relationship between the political and military wings of the United Nations effort; and if he will publish the organisational plan for civil objectives.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Admiral Howe is the United Nations Secretary-General's special representative in Somalia. He is the head of mission and has responsibility for all aspects of the United Nations operation there, reporting directly to the Secretary-General. The head of the military component of UNOSOM II is General Bir. There is close co-operation between the military and political wings.

Copies of all the United Nations Secretary-General's reports relating to the structure and objectives of the operation have been placed in the House Library.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place a report in the Library on the diplomatic activities and performance of the UN since the unified task force (UNITAF) was deployed in Somalia.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Copies of all the UN Secretary-General's reports on Somalia since the deployment of UNITAF have been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Deportees (Sexual Offences)

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the number of United Kingdom nationals deported from other countries back to the United Kingdom as a result of convictions for sexual offences against children committed overseas.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In the period 1 January 1991 to June 1993, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office was notified of 439 deportations, one of which, in 1991, followed a conviction for sexual offences against minors.

Kuwait (Prisoners)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Iraqi Government for the safe return to Kuwait of the persons taken prisoner during the occupation of Kuwait by Iraq.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We raised this question on 24 May at the regular review by the UN Security Council on sanctions against Iraq. We will continue to raise the question at each review of sanctions until Iraq fulfils all its obligations under UN Security Council resolutions 686 and 687 to co-operate with the International Committee of the Red Cross in its attempts to gather information on Kuwaiti and other nationals missing in Iraq.

Serbia and Montenegro (Sanctions)

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans Her Majesty's Government have to review sanctions against Serbia and Montenegro.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We continue to review the effectiveness of the UN sanctions against Serbia and Montenegro. Any change to these sanctions would be dependent on the prevailing political situation.

SCOTLAND

Nursery Places

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what steps he has taken to provide specific resources to enable local education authorities to provide most nursery places in Scotland; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will now consider making the provision of nursery places a statutory duty of local authorities in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government have no plans to impose a statutory duty on education authorities to provide nursery education. In our view, local authorities are best able to decide the most appropriate level of nursery school provision in their areas taking into account local needs and circumstances. The Government provide local authorities with resources to fund education through the aggregate external finance settlement. Under these arrangements, local authorities have the opportunity to increase nursery education spending where they view this as a priority.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his current policy in respect of the sale of Forestry Commission assets.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 22 June 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind), the then Secretary of State for Scotland, on 16 June 1989, Official Report, columns 544-45. This policy has not changed.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list camp sites, nature trails, cabin sites, picnic areas and other recreational facilities provided by the Forestry Commission, on a country or regional basis.

Sir Hector Monro: The Forestry Commission is prepairing a list of its recreation facilities and I shall arrange for the hon. Member to receive a copy as soon as possible and for further copies to be placed in the Library.

Trees

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the acreage of tree cover per 1,000 head of population in the United Kingdom; and what comparative information he has for other European Community countries.

Sir Hector Monro: The areas of woodland, in hectares, per 1,000 head of population are as follows:

| | Hectares |
|---|---|
| United Kingdom | 40 |
| Belgium/Luxembourg | 90 |
| Denmark | 100 |
| France | 260 |
| Germany | 130 |
| Greece | 260 |
| Ireland | 100 |
| Italy | 120 |
| Netherlands | 20 |
| Portugal | 290 |
| Spain | 400 |
| EC Average | 170 |

Nursery Places

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the ratio of nursery places to population in each of the regional council and local authorities for the most recent years for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is as follows:

Education authority nursery pupils as a percentage of the total population in each education authority area: September 1992.

| Education Authority | Number of pupils as a percentage of total population[1] |
|---|---|
| Scotland | 0·9 |
| Borders | 0·5 |
| Central | 1·0 |
| Dumfries and Galloway | 0·8 |
| Fife | 1·3 |
| Grampian | 0·9 |
| Highland | 0·4 |
| Lothian | 1·2 |
| Strathclyde | 0·8 |
| Tayside | 0·9 |
| Orkney | 1·0 |
| Shetland | 1·2 |
| Western Isles | — |
| Strathclyde Divisions: | |
| Argyll and Bute | — |

Local Government (Mileage Rates)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the value of the mileage rates for each engine capacity payable to local government representatives; and when the rates were originally set, together with the value these represent at current prices.

Mr. Stewart: The information is shown in pence per mile in the following table:

| | Up to 999cc | 1000cc-1199cc | Over 1199cc |
|---|---|---|---|
| Rate at 6 February 1970 (last change to travel and subsistence regulations) | 4·7 | 5·3 | 5·9 |
| Rate at 6 February 1970 uprated by GDP deflator to 1 January 1993 | 32·6 | 40·2 | 44·7 |
| Current rates from 1 January 1993 | 22·0 | 23·9 | 26·6 |

Hospitals (Promotion and Publicity)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to give guidance to health boards and trusts concerning the promotion and publicity of medical treatment within their hospitals.

Mr. Stewart: The patients charter, published in September 1991, makes it clear that patients are entitled to accurate, relevant and understandable explanations about their condition and treatment. Hospitals discharge this in a variety of ways—for example, by patient information leaflets provided to patients prior to or at the start of their treatment.

The first survey of users of the NHS in Scotland, published on 5 April 1993, indicates that overwhelmingly people are satisfied with the amount of information and explanation they receive.

We have therefore no plans to issue further guidance on this at present.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to give guidance to health boards and trusts concerning the duty of confidentiality when dealing with publicity and promotion related to individual patients.

Mr. Stewart: A code of practice setting out principles to ensure the confidentiality of personal health information was distributed throughout the NHS in Scotland in June 1990. This supplemented earlier guidance on procedure for dealing with press, radio and television inquiries about patients. The situation is being kept under review.

Renewables Order

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress of his Department in establishing a renewables order for Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: I have nothing to add to the answer given to the hon. Member for East Kilbride (Mr. Ingram) on 21 April 1993, Official Report, column 113.

Consultants

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the mean age at which doctors achieve consultant status in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: The mean age is 36 years as at 30 September 1992, the latest date for which information is available centrally.

Cocaine Seizures

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many seizures of cocaine by (a) police and (b) customs in Scotland were recorded in each year since 1980.

Mr. Stewart: Information on the number of cocaine seizures by the police and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise since 1981 is published in "Statistics of drug seizures and offenders dealt with, United Kingdom, 1991 —Scotland tables", a copy of which is in the Library. Details of seizures for 1980 are given in the corresponding publication for 1990.

Pain Relief Clinics

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the current waiting times for appointments at pain relief clinics in those hospitals offering this service.

Mr. Stewart: The information, which relates to the average waiting time for first appointments, is set out in the table.

New outpatient attendances at pain relief clinics—mean wait over period 1 October 1992 to 31 March 1993

| Hospital | Mean wait (days) |
|---|---|
| Crosshouse hospital | 53 |

Drug Overdoses

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the number of hospital treatments for overdoses, listed by each type of drug involved, since 1988.

Mr. Stewart: The number of inpatient hospital episodes in Scotland for drug overdose listed by type of drug or agent for the years 1988-1992 is shown in the table. Information on out-patient treatments is not available.

Emergency inpatient admissions to acute general hospitals with a diagnosis of poisoning by drugs or drug dependence or abuse, 1988-1992

| Principal diagnosis | Year of discharge | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 1988 | 1989 | 1990 | 1991 | 1992 |

Notes:
1. Cases included in the table were admitted to acute general hospitals as an emergency with poisoning by drugs and medicaments coming within the groups defined in the international Classification of Diseases codes 960-979.
The figures include patients with accidental overdose and deliberate self poisoning but exclude any cases where poisoning was due to drugs in therapeutic use.
2. Also shown are figures for patients who were admitted as an emergency with a primary diagnosis of drug dependence or non-dependent drug abuse and these can include overdoses and abnormal reactions to a variety of drugs.

Drugs Seizures

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of police seizures of (a) MDMA, (b) LSD, (c) tranquillisers, (d) cannabis and (e) solvents in Scotland in each year since 1988.

Mr. Stewart: Information on police seizures of MDMA, LSD, and cannabis since 1988 is published in "Statistics of drug seizures and offenders dealt with, United Kingdom, 1991—Scotland tables", a copy of which is in the Library. Tranquillisers, along with hypnotics, although not separately identified in the tables, comprise the main drugs in class C, for which the number of seizures is shown. Solvents are neither illegal substances nor subject to the kind of controls placed on pharmaceutical products; and the question of police seizures does not, therefore, arise.

Drug Misuse

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will carry out an annual survey on the extent of drug misuse in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: Because the unauthorised possession and supply of many addictive drugs is an illicit activity, there are obvious difficulties in producing accurate figures of the number of drug misusers in Scotland on a recurring basis. Among other indicators, however, the Scottish drug misuse database, which was established in 1990, is contributing increasingly to current knowledge of drug misuse prevalence, and the scope for its further development is kept under review. Research also has an important role and relevant projects are commissioned and funded as appropriate.

Nuclear Industry

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with Scottish local authorities concerning the nuclear industry in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend has had no recent discussions with local authorities about the general question of the nuclear industry in Scotland.

Jury Trials

Mr. George Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) guilty, (b) not guilty and (c) not proven verdicts were handed down in jury trials in Scottish courts in each of the last five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The available information is given in the table.

Persons called to solemn procedure courts by outcome 1987-1991
Scotland

| Year | PNGA[1] of deserted | Acquitted not guilty | Acquitted not proven | Charge proved | Total |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|

| 1991 | 361 | 281 | 130 | 2,619 | 3,391 |

[1] Plea of not guilty accepted.

Courts (Decrees and Extracts)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will institute an inquiry into the procedures to be followed and the factors to be taken into account when a change in the rate of interest in decrees and extracts of the Scottish courts takes place.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have no plans to bring forward amendments to the existing statutory provisions which place responsibility on the Lord President of the Court of Session for changes in the rate of interest on decrees and extract decrees of the Scottish courts.

Act of Sederunt

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he had with the Lord President of the Court of Session before the Act of Sederunt (Interest in Sheriff Court Decrees and Extracts) 1993 and the Act of Sederunt (Rules of the Court of Session Amendment) (Interest in Decrees and Extracts) 1993 both became law.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None.

Education Authorities

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the annual expenditure on administration by each local education authority in each of the last three years.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 22 June 1993]: Based on information provided by local authorities in local financial returns, the figures set out in the table detail net expenditure—excluding loans and leasing charges and revenue contributions to capital—on administration by individual local authority education departments for the years 1990-91 and 1991-92. Information for 1992-93 is not yet available.

Health Board Salaries

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total cost of salaries for all (a) general managers and chief executives, (b) directors of finance or equivalent, (c) directors of human resources, personnel or equivalent, (d) directors of nursing services or equivalent and (e) chief medical officers or equivalent in January 1992 for all Scottish health boards prior to reorganisation of the NHS; and what is the current cost in each category for all health boards and NHS trusts in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 22 June 1993]: The information requested is not available centrally.

Water and Sewerage

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a detailed breakdown of his estimate of the costs associated with upgrading the Scottish water and sewerage system to meet EC standards; what improvements to the system were assumed; what assumptions were made of the sources from which capital would be raised; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 22 June 1993]: The European Community directives with the most significant financial implications for capital expenditure are the drinking water directive and the urban waste water treatment directive which are estimated at £1·2 billion and £1·3 billion respectively over the next 15 years.

The estimates are based on improvements to water mains, water treatment works, sewerage, and sewage treatment and disposal works, and are unaffected by the source of capital.

SOCIAL SECURITY

War Widows (Pensions)

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the net cost, allowing for a reduction in income support, of topping up the pensions of British widows of New Zealand soldiers currently residing in the United Kingdom to the same level as the widows' pension received by British war widows.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the net cost of increasing the pensions of British widows of New Zealand service men now residing in the United Kingdom to the level of the widows' pension received by British war widows.

Mr. Hague: The information to enable us to estimate costs accurately is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, on the basis that there are 38 such widows, it is estimated that the gross cost would be in the region of £200,000 per year.

New Age Travellers

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures he has taken to ensure that benefit payment officers will operate all relevant rules, including the genuinely seeking work rule, on new age travellers claiming benefits this summer.

Mr. Burt: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wansdyke (Mr. Aspinwall) on 18 June at column 751.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in (a) Fife and (b) North East Fife are in receipt of the mobility component of the disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Water Charges

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many requests nationally, and by region, for direct payments from a recipient's income support were made last year and the year before for help paying water debt; and how many were refused.

Mr. Burt: Regions were replaced by territories in April 1990. The information requested in respect of each of the Benefits Agency's three territories for the years April 1991 to March 1992 and April 1992 to March 1993 is in the table.

| | Scotland[1] and North Territory | Wales and Central England Territory | Southern Territory | National total |
| 1991-92 | | | | |
| Number of applications made | 28,328 | 69,665 | 34,239 | 132,232 |
| Number of applications rejected | 5,439 | 12,812 | 7,288 | 25,539 |
| 1992-93 | | | | |
| Number of applications made | 34,657 | 77,691 | 56,694 | 169,042 |
| Number of applications rejected | 5,584 | 11,347 | 10,566 | 27,497 |

[1] Figures refer to North Territory only as different arrangements for payment of water charges apply in Scotland.
Note: The figures used are based on Management Information Statistics collected by the Benefits Agency in the two 12, month periods ending March 1992 and March 1993. These figures are provisional and may be subject to amendment.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many attendance allowance claims have been refused, broken down by the reasons for refusal, in each month since May 1992 at each disability benefit centre and for the country as a whole.

Mr. Scott: The administration of attendance allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 22 June 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many attendance allowance claims have been refused, broken down by the reasons for refusal, in each month since May 1992 at each disability benefit centre and for the country as a whole.

The information you requested is shown in the attached appendix.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Resettlement Units

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have been accommodated in the course of the last two years in the resettlement units managed by the resettlement units executive agency.

Mr. Hague: The management of the Resettlement Agency is a matter for Mr. Tony Ward, the chief executive. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Tony Ward to Mr. Nick Raynsford, dated 22 June 1993:

As the Resettlement Agency is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you directly to respond to your Parliamentary Question to him, about the numbers of people that have been accommodated in the course of the last two years in resettlement units. This is something which falls within the responsibilities he has delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Before the dates of 1 June 1991-31 May 1993, 827,090 bed spaces were occupied in resettlement units managed by the Resettlement Units Executive Agency. You will appreciate that the number of beds occupied masks a complex situation. Some customers stay for one night, and others for considerably longer, whilst some customers have presented themselves for admissions at different units over the two year period. If you would like any further information, please let me know.

Pensions (Payment)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many senior citizens in the Durham city area collect their state retirement pensions from post offices and sub-post offices.

Mr. Hague: The administration of retirement pension is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Gerry Steinberg, dated 22 June 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many senior citizens in the Durham city area collect their state retirement pensions from post offices and sub-post offices.

As at 02/05/93, approximately 10,650 customers in the Durham city area were receiving state retirement pensions from post offices and sub-post offices.

I hope you will find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Market Testing

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list all the market tests that have taken place in her Department since November 1992 and indicate, in each case, whether the result was the maintenance of in-house provision, or whether the service was contracted out.

Mr. Jack: Since November 1992 the following market tests have taken place:

Free Advice on Farm Diversification
Free Advice on Farm Woodlands
Building Estates Management (Part)
General Recruitment (Up to Grade 7)
Library Services (Books and Journals)
Royal Navy Surface Surveillance (Fisheries Protection Contract)
Relocation Work (Central Science Laboratories)

In the cases of free advice on farm diversification, and farm woodlands the provision in question is being ended as part of public expenditure decisions.

In all the other cases the services listed in the table have been contracted out.

Fallen Animals

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations she has had on the cost and inconvenience to farmers arising from new regulations for slaughtering injured or fallen animals; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1992 require that if a "casualty" animal slaughtered outside an abattoir is to go for human consumption, it must receive an ante-mortem inspection from a veterinarian who should then observe the correct bleeding of the animal and certify the carcase.

There has been some concern about the logistical problems of getting the slaughterman and vet together on the farm at the same time and the associated costs of a failure to do so. We are considering the problem in the context of the review of the regulatory burdens which my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has commissioned. In the meantime, I cannot advise anyone to ignore the law.

The welfare of the animal must be paramount. If it is necessary to prevent suffering, animals should be slaughtered on the spot even if this means that the carcase cannot be sold for human consumption.

Lindane

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations she has received concerning the sale in the United Kingdom of chocolate containing traces of the pesticide Lindane; and what information she has as to which countries ban the use of Lindane.

Mr. Soames: I have not received any representations concerning the traces of Lindane found in samples of chocolate in the United Kingdom. Within the European Community, Lindane is authorised for use in all member states. We understand from data supplied to UNEP's international register for potentially toxic chemicals that Lindane is banned for use in Argentina, the former Soviet Union and Sweden.

Hydrocarbons (Coastal Waters)

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what regular monitoring her Department carries out of background levels of hydrocarbons in United Kingdom coastal waters.

Mr. Jack: This Ministry's Directorate of Fisheries Research has monitored hydrocarbon concentrations in United Kingdom coastal waters since the 1970s. The results are published regularly in the directorate's aquatic environment monitoring report series. The latest relevant reports, numbered 26 and 30, are available in the Library.

Agriculture Council (Voting)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Kincardine and Deeside (Mr. Kynoch) on 15 June, Official Report, column 483, what were the voting figures for each decision taken at the European Community's Agriculture Council held on 14 June; and if she will make it her policy to include in future statements on Council meetings information on whether formal votes were taken.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 21 June, at columns 70-71.

EDUCATION

Agency Teachers

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what action he is taking to ensure that teachers recruited through commercial teacher recruitment agencies are properly vetted by the police prior to their taking up their teaching posts; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what steps he is taking to inform head-teachers recruiting agency teachers about the status of overseas teachers with respect to their qualifications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department is currently consulting other Government Departments with a view to preparing a code of practice for teacher employment agencies and detailed guidelines to schools on the employment of teachers through agencies.

School Tests

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of schools in each local education authority did not carry the recent tests for 14-year-old pupils.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not available.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will estimate the number of hours per week teachers are occupied in marking test papers for pupils aged (a) seven, (b) 11 and (c) 14 years.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information is not available in the precise format requested. On average, teachers of seven-year-olds should be able to administer this Summer's tests in English, mathematics and science in a total of roughly 24 hours. This excludes the time taken to test pupils' ability to read aloud. Teachers have discretion to spread out these tests between half-term in the spring term and four weeks before the end of the summer term.

Tests for 11-year-olds are not yet mandatory. One of the main purposes of this summer's pilot of prototype tests for this age group is to shed light on what is manageable for teachers including marking times.

Based on experience in the trials, it is estimated that a subject teacher with a typical class of 27 14-year-olds, might spend roughly seven to 11 hours marking the mathematics tests; just over 11 hours marking the science papers, between 11 and 13·5 hours marking the English papers, and 7·5 hours on the technology papers.

Teacher Training

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on his proposal to train primary school teachers on 12-month courses; what assessment he has made of how the quality of training will compare with conventional teacher training courses; and what salary structure he expects teachers trained by this scheme to receive.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has recently issued for consultation proposals for new one-year courses for the training of specialist nursery and infant teachers. Entry to such courses would be restricted to mature people, with considerable experience of working with young children, who possess the qualifications for entry to higher education and are capable of attaining the required competences within one year. My right hon. Friend has invited views about the nature, organisation and content of such courses, which would complement and not replace existing routes into primary teaching. Those successfully completing the courses would receive specialised qualified teacher status which entitled them to teach pupils up to the end of key stage 1. Qualified teachers are paid in accordance with the scales and other provisions set out in the School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Document.

Parents Charter

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish the independent market research among parents on their views on the parents charter referred to on page 12 of the first report on the citizens charter, column 2101.

Mr. Robin Squire: The market research was carried out to enable officials to prepare advice for Ministers. It is not the usual practice of my right hon. Friend to publish either officials' advice or the research underlying it.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for education how much money was given to further education colleges in 1992-93 to prepare them for incorporation; and what provision was made in the conditions of grant for bonuses to senior staff.

Mr. Boswell: Transitional funding of some £18·3 million was made available in 1992-93 by the Further Education Funding Council to institutions joining the further education sector in England. All colleges in England received a minimum of £35,000, which they could use for any purpose that directly assisted with their preparations for independence. The position in Scotland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Bursaries

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will announce the postgraduate bursary and studentship rates payable by his Department for the academic year 1993-94.

Mr. Boswell: The main maintenance rates under the Department's own postgraduate awards scheme for certain professional and vocational courses in the academic year 1993-94 will be as follows—1992-93 rates are shown in brackets:

| | £ | £ |
|---|---|---|
| Bursaries | | |
| London | 3,170 | (3,085) |
| Elsewhere | 2,500 | (2,435) |
| Parental home | 1,890 | (1,840) |
| Studentships | | |
| London | 5,340 | (5,195) |
| Elsewhere | 4,245 | (4,130) |
| Parental home | 3,130 | (3,045) |

These represent increases of 2·75 per cent. on the current year's rates. The relevant supplementary allowances will be increased broadly in line.

EMPLOYMENT

Building Workers (Training Levy)

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what complaints he has received on the imposition of a training levy on building workers with 714 or SC60 certificates; and if he will make it his policy that such deductions should be halted forthwith.

Miss Widdecombe: We have received no complaints about the imposition of a training levy from building workers who have identified themselves as having 714 or SC60 certificates.

Under the legislation the liability to pay Industry Training Board levy lies with the employer. If the employer attempts to pass the levy on to the employee or sub contractor, there is no legal obligation for them to pay it.

Part-time Work

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) males and (b) females were working part-time in Great Britain in April 1992; and what proportion of these workers earned between (a) £5·20 and £5·50 per hour, (b) £5·50 and £5·60 per hour, (c) £3·90 and £4 per hour and (d) £3·20 and £3·30 per hour.

Miss Widdecombe: Estimates of the numbers of employees in employment at March 1992 in Great Britain were 1,048,000 part-time men and 4,709,000 part-time women.

The corresponding information for the distributions of hourly earnings can be found in the table.

Part time employees on adult rates—pay unaffected by absence
Proportion with gross hourly earnings between the following amounts
April 1992

| | Males Per cent. | Females Per cent. |
|---|---|---|
| £3·20 to £3·30 | 3·2 | 3·9 |
| £3·90 to £4·00 | 3·7 | 3·0 |
| £5·20 to £5·50 | 2·6 | 3·6 |
| £5·50 to £5·60 | 1·0 | 1·0 |

WALES

Taf Merthyr Colliery

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he and the agencies in Wales he supports financially intend to take to alleviate the problems arising from the closure of the Taf Merthyr colliery, Bedlinog.

Mr. Redwood: A regeneration programme for those areas affected by the coal review valued at £43 million was announced by my predecessor last October. This includes a wide range of measures for the Taff Merthyr area by my Department, the Welsh Development Agency, the relevant training and enterprise councils and the Employment Service, in addition to significant initiatives taken by British Coal Enterprise.

Following the closure of Taff Merthyr colliery, I am relaxing eligibility conditions of the Government's adult training programmes to allow immediate entry to training, retraining and business start up for ex-colliery employees and others within the affected area. I will formally approve further training and employment measures for the areas affected by coal closure in the near future.

NHS Staff

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many NHS staff were employed as (a) general/senior managers and (b) administrators and clerical staff in Wales in each year since 1989-90.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 18 January, at column 57. The validated 1992 figure for clerical and administrative staff is 8,347.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of the numbers of NHS nursing and midwifery staff by pay grades within the groups of senior nursing and midwifery staff, educational staff, clinical nursing and midwifery staff, learners and other staff; and if he will list the number of Project 2000 nursing students in 1989, 1990, 1991 and 1992, and the percentage change between each year.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The requested information is given in the table.

[1] The 1992 figures exclude about 64 Wte nursing and midwifery staff employed by Pembrokeshire NHS Trust on local payscales to whom the standard pay grades do not apply. In addition to the figures shown there were about 1,000 student nurses at 30 September 1992 who had been reclassified as students following the introduction of Project 2000 nursing education reforms.

[2] Since 1 January 1991 staff on "obsolete" grades shown and senior nurse payscales have been eligible to transfer to new senior nurse payscales (NX).

[3] As at 31 March.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of the numbers of health service directly employed staff by main staff group for each year from 1987 to 1992; and if he will give the changes between each year and over the whole period in numbers and percentages.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The requested information is shown in the table:

Nurses and Midwives

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of the numbers of whole-time equivalent NHS nursing and midwifery staff employed on each grade and pay point of the clinical grades, educational grades and senior nursing and midwifery pay spine in 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Due to the complex nature of the data requested, I will write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of the information in the Library of the House.

Nursing Education

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of the numbers of entrants to initial pre-registration nursing education by course of study and by the academic qualifications possessed by entrants in each year since 1989.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The number of initial entrants to pre-registration nursing education is shown in the table. Information on the qualifications possessed by these students is not readily available.

Student Statistics

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total amount spent on each student in the university of Wales and university of Glamorgan respectively, in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The total amount spent on each student in the university of Wales, since 1979-80 is as follows. Information relating to 1991-92 is not yet available. Equivalent information for the university of Glamorgan is not available centrally.

University of Wales: annual expenditure[1] per full time equivalent student

| | Expenditure[1] per full time student (£ per thousand) |

| 1991-92 | 5,241·3 |

[1] Expenditure is defined as that relating to all cost centres including departmental recurrent expenditure (specific expenditure and that from general income) and that on departmental equipment. Annual expenditure per student is derived by dividing the expenditure by the total full-time equivalent student load.

Consultants

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the mean age at which doctors achieve consultant status in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The mean age at which doctors in Wales, in post at 30 September 1991, achieved consultant status was 37.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to include specific references to equality of opportunity in the annual strategic and planning guidance issued by his Department to training and enterprise councils in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The importance of equality of opportunity is already recognised in the guidance given to Welsh training and enterprise councils by the Welsh Office, and we will ensure that it continues to be so.

Coastal Water (Pollution)

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what regular or recent monitoring his Department carries out of background levels of hydrocarbons and other pollutants in Cardigan bay and other Welsh coastal waters.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office does not carry out such monitoring. However, monitoring for a wide range of contaminants, including hydrocarbons, is undertaken at various locations off the Welsh coastline by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the National Rivers Authority and the Countryside Council for Wales.

Radon

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many grants have been approved for households which have recorded radon concentrations (a) over 200 becquerels per cubic metre and (b) up to 200 becquerels per cubic metre in Wales and postal district SA since 1989.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is not held centrally.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he is now in a position to announce the appointment of the new chairman of the Welsh Development Agency.

Mr. Redwood: I am pleased to announce that I am appointing Mr. David Rowe-Beddoe to be the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency with effect from 1 July.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Assisted Areas

13. Mr. McFall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he is going to publish the revised assisted areas map.

Mr. Sainsbury: I hope to announce the new assisted areas map before the House rises for the summer recess.

Mr. Morley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to make an announcement on the future of assisted area status for Glanford and Scunthorpe.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 7 June 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockton, South (Mr. Devlin) on 17 June, Official Report, column 715.

Aerospace Industry

15. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment his Department has made of the future prospects for the British aerospace industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department has a close and continuing dialogue with the industry on the challenges it is facing, and the most appropriate ways for the Government to help.

Pit Closures

16. Mr. Mullin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many of the pits originally scheduled for closure have been closed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: British Coal has decided it no longer wishes to operate 18 of these pits, and coaling has ceased at them. British Coal has given a commitment to offer all such pits to the private sector and has so far invited bids for nine of them. I understand that British Coal will be offering the remainder in the next few weeks.

Shipbuilding Industry

17. Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to assist the shipbuilding industry.

Mr. Sainsbury: The shipbuilding industry continues to receive assistance from the shipbuilding intervention fund and the home credit guarantee scheme.

Industrial Competitiveness

18. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much the competitive position of United Kingdom industry has changed in the last 12 months.

Mr. Sainsbury: The competitive position of United Kingdom industry has strengthened considerably in the 12 months to April this year, during which period manufacturing productivity has increased by nearly 8 per cent.

Lithuania

19. Mr. Colvin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what Government-backed export credit arrangements there are for Lithuania.

Mr. McLoughlin: Cover for short-term credit is available from NCM Credit Insurance Ltd. under tight conditions and with 100 per cent. reinsurance by the Export Credits Guarantee Department. Cover is not available for exports on medium-term credit, although the position is currently under review.

Northern France

20. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has on the availability of measures taken by the French Government which encourage relocation of business in northern France in preference to east Kent.

Mr. Sainsbury: I understand that a range of assistance is available. It includes grants for job creation and a variety of tax concessions at both local and national levels.

Regional Policy

21. Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are his plans for further changes in regional policy.

Mr. Sainsbury: The effectiveness of regional policy is kept under continuous review.

24. Mr. John Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his Department's plans for regional policy.

Mr. Sainsbury: We are currently reviewing the assisted areas map and hope to make an announcement before the House rises for the summer recess.

Manufacturing Industry

22. Sir David Knox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to meet the president of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss manufacturing industry.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade meets the president and director-general of the CBI regularly to discuss a wide range of issues. He last visited the CBI on 17 June and met a number of CBI representatives.

26. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the performance of manufacturing industry in the north-west during the past year.

Mr. Sainsbury: Manufacturing industry in the north-west has shared in the national improvement in the economy in the last year benefiting from the fall in interest rates to the lowest level for 16 years. In the three months from January to April 1993, seasonally adjusted unemployment in the region fell by 6,500.

30. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received on the decline in numbers of jobs in manufacturing industry over the last five years.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has received a number of representations about the decline in manufacturing jobs over the last five years. Improved competitiveness remains the key to growth in manufacturing employment.

31. Mr. Turner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the prospects for manufacturing industry in the black country and the west midlands in the next two years.

Mr. Sainsbury: The prospect for manufacturing industry throughout the west midlands are constantly assessed by my Department through the work of the west midlands regional office.

Political Parties (Donations)

23. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to review the Companies Act 1985 in relation to those sections dealing with political contributions.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have no plans to review these sections.

Government Purchases

25. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the measures he is taking to ensure that purchases by Government are of British manufacture.

Mr. Sainsbury: Government purchasing is based on value for money. The role of my Department is to ensure that competition for Government purchases from overseas is fair. The Treasury's central unit on purchasing advises Government purchasers on the best purchasing practices to ensure that the advantages of competition are secured.

Northern Cyprus

27. Mr. Miller: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current trade deficit with northern Cyprus.

Mr. Needham: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 19 May 1993, Official Report, column 238.

33. Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to meet representatives of the Turkish republic of northern Cyprus in order to discuss the prospects for trade with the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: None. We do not recognise the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus". The timing of any possible meeting must be carefully considered in the light of the continuing inter-communal negotiations on Cyprus under United Nations auspices.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to meet his counterpart in northern Cyprus to discuss bilateral trade arrangements.

Mr. Needham: None. We do not recognise northern Cyprus. The timing of any such meeting can only be carefully considered in the light of the continuing inter-communal negotiations on Cyprus under United Nations auspices.

Norway

28. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was (a) the value of imports from Norway last year and (b) the projected value for the current year.

Mr. Needham: In 1992, the value of invisible imports from Norway was £3·84 billion. My Department does not make projections on United Kingdom trade with individual countries.

Transport Equipment

29. Mr. Gapes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment his Department has made of the future prospects for the transport equipment sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department's sponsor divisions make continual assessments of the competitiveness and future prospects of the sectors for which they are responsible, including those sectors which fall within the generic description of transport equipment.

Trade Statistics

32. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his Department's estimate of the value of Britain's total (a) exports and (b) imports for January to May.

Mr. Needham: Figures for total trade over the period are not yet available. In the period January to May, the value of the United Kingdom's non-EC visible exports was £22·7 billion and the value of imports was £27·8 billion.

Telecommunications

Mr. Carrington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has received a report by the Director General of Telecommunications for the year 1992 as required under section 55 of the Telecommunications Act 1984.

Mr. McLoughlin: Yes. The ninth report by the Director General of Telecommunications is being published today. It covers the period 1 January to 31 December 1992. Copies of the report have been laid before each House of Parliament.

Inntrepreneur Scheme

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will reply to the question tabled by the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby for answer on 10 June relating to investigations into the Inntrepreneur scheme.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 21 June, Official Report, column 23.

Trade Marks

Mr. Hoon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his proposed timetable for legislation relating to trade marks.

Mr. McLoughlin: A Bill to implement the proposals in the White Paper "Reform of Trade Marks Law"—Cm 1203—has been fully drafted, and will be introduced as soon as the parliamentary timetable permits.

Auditing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions auditors have acted as company secretaries in each year since 1990.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: This is a matter for Companies House. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Durham to Mr. Austin Mitchell, dated 21 June 1993:

As this is a matter which is within my responsibility as Chief Executive and Registrar of Companies, I am writing to you direct.

I should explain that the Companies Act does not prohibit an auditor from acting as secretary to a company provided, of course, that he does not carry out the audit of that company's accounts. We, therefore, have no reason to compile figures of this nature, and it would involve disproportionate costs to identify from company records occasions where an auditor has acted as company secretary.

We have, since 1990, received one complaint which suggests that an auditor is acting as secretary to the company whose accounts he is auditing. That complaint was received this year and we are currently investigating the matter. We have also dealt with one case where the secretary of the company carried out the audit of the company's accounts. He was formally warned that he would be liable to prosecution if he repeated the offence.

I hope that the above information is helpful to you.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment his representative on the Auditing Practices Board has made of the going concern exposure draft circulated to the One Hundred Group of Directors.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department has sent comments on the draft guidance for directors of listed companies on going concern and financial reporting direct to the secretary of the working group on going concern, in response to an invitation from the chairman of that group.

Leyland DAF

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he has taken against Leyland DAF for late filing of its annual accounts at Companies House.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: This is a matter for Companies House. I have therefore, asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Durham to Mr. Austin Mitchell, dated 21 June 1993:

As this is a matter which is my responsibility as Registrar of Companies House, I am writing to you direct.

I have checked the register and can find only two companies within the Leyland DAF group who have failed to submit up-to-date accounts. They are Leyland DAF Limited and Leyland DAF Holdings Limited.

I can confirm that Companies House was aware of the failure of the directors of these companies to deliver accounts for the period ended 31 December 1991. This was followed up with the companies in accordance with normal procedures.

I was subsequently notified that an administrative receiver had been appointed for both companies on 3 February 1993. The receiver submitted the relevant receivership documents. The company will not now be pursued for statutory documents but the receiver has an obligation to send me accounts of the receipts and payments to cover the first twelve months of the receivership and 6 monthly periods thereafter.

Should the companies survive the receivership and emerge as active and wishing to remain on the register, the directors will be obliged to deliver outstanding statutory documents including those which became outstanding prior to the appointment of the receiver.

I hope this reply has covered the points tabled in your question.

Reporting Accountants

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has to ban reporting accountants from subsequently acting as receivers and liquidators for the same business.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: None.

Company Investigations

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade for which companies he has published an interim report by his Department's inspectors since 1979 but a final report remains unpublished.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Dunlop Holdings Ltd. and Ramor Investments Ltd. Substantial interim reports were published on 17 February 1981 and 22 March 1983 respectively.

Modified Accounts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many small and medium-sized companies have filed modified accounts at Companies House in each year since 1990; and in how many cases the filing of such accounts was found to be unwarranted.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: This matter is for Companies House. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Durham to Mr. Austin Mitchell dated 21 June 1993:

As the information requested is part of my responsibility as Registrar of Companies, I have been asked to reply to you direct.

The following modified or abbreviated accounts were accepted for filing:

| | Small | Medium |
|---|---|---|
| 1990-91 | 252,368 | 3,767 |
| 1991-92 | 270,754 | 4,386 |
| 1992-93 | 303,125 | 5,202 |

Of these, in the years in question, in 6, 5 and 4 cases respectively the accounts were subsequently found to have been accepted in circumstances where the company did not meet the relevant criteria.

Sellafield

Mr. Simpson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what safeguards will ensure the safe transport of radioactive waste to, and reprocessed fuel from, the Sellafield site; and what security measures will be in force to prevent unauthorised access to the reprocessed fuel in transit.

Mr. Eggar: Radioactive materials are only transported in extremely robust containers designed and built to meet or exceed stringent internationally agreed standards laid down by the International Atomic Energy Agency. Appropriate measures are taken to ensure the security of these movements.

THORP

Mr. Simpson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what uses, other than use in power stations, are planned for the reprocessed fuel produced from the thermal oxide reprocessing plant.

Mr. Eggar: The thermal oxide reprocessing plant is a civil facility and the nuclear materials arising from it must be used for peaceful purposes only. In practice, these are normally electricity generation or research.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what restrictions are envisaged on the uses of reprocessed fuel from the thermal oxide reprocessing plant; and how the restrictions on the use of reprocessed fuel will be policed and monitored.

Mr. Eggar: Nuclear materials arising from the thermal oxide reprocessing plant will be used for peaceful purposes only. This will be subject to verification by inspectors under international safeguards agreements.

Patents

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many patents have been awarded by the United States of America for United Kingdom-based work in each year since 1988; and what information he has on the number of patents awarded by the United States of America to (a) France, (b) Germany and (c) Japan in the same period.

Mr. McLoughlin: The annual report for the fiscal year 1991 of the United States Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks shows the number of patents issued by the United States to residents of the United Kingdom, France, Germany and Japan to be as follows:

| Year | Place of residence | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | United Kingdom | France | Germany (Fed. Rep) | Germany (Dem. Rep) | Japan |
| 1988 | 2,677 | 2,829 | 7,587 | 47 | 16,704 |
| 1989 | 3,378 | 3,310 | 8,756 | 58 | 20,907 |
| 1990 | 2,946 | 3,032 | 7,727 | 38 | 20,170 |
| 1991 | 2,974 | 3,094 | 7,584 | 0 | 21,464 |

The territorial base of the work leading to the patents is not recorded.

The report for 1992 has not yet been received.

Research and Development

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish figures showing the level of business enterprise research and development as a proportion of gross domestic product for (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the United States of America (c) Italy, (d) France, (e) Germany and (f) Japan during 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information is available from the OECD's publication "Main Science and Technology Indicators", published in 1992, and the Central Statistical Office's bulletin "Business Enterprise Research and Development 1991", published on 25 February 1993, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Thomason: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to take account of the contribution of the waste-to-energy industry in his Department's renewable energy strategy review.

Mr. Eggar: The Government are working towards 1500 MW of new renewable energy electricity generating capacity by the year 2000 supported by a continuing research and knowledge programme. We plan to take the potential of waste to energy projects into account when developing policy for renewables.

Warren Spring Laboratory

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answers to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith), of 27 May, Official Report, column 692 and to the hon. Member for Blaby (Mr. Robathan), of 10 June, Official Report, column 303, which organisation will inherit the Warren Spring Laboratory's membership of the European network of environmental research organisations.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) on 22 June, Official Report, column 141.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what expenditure has been committed, either directly or in penalty clauses, to the construction of the replacement Warren Spring Laboratory in Welwyn Garden City.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 15 June 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply regarding the estimated cost of a replacement laboratory on 22 June, Official Report, column 142. Around £6 million has been committed to the purchase of the site at Welwyn Garden City and preparatory work for the construction of the replacement laboratory. The site will be resold.

Consumers Association

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last met the Consumers Association; and what was discussed.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has not met the Consumers Association. My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Consumer Affairs and Small Firms has met them on the following occasions over the last year:

9 June 1992: Discussion included reform of the Sale of Goods Act, EC Directive on Unfair Contract Terms, UK Presidency and the Monopolies and Mergers Commissions' report on car prices.

17 July 1992: Visit to CA Research laboratory in Harpenden.

15 February 1993: Discussion centred on arrangements for the provision of effective advice and enforcement of consumer protection.

8 December 1992: To discuss proposals relating to the tying in of services to loans secured on land.

Coal

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what further discussions he has had about financial subsidy for additional coal contracts between British Coal and the generators; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Waveney (Mr. Porter) on 16 June, Official Report, columns 603-5.

Offshore Exploration

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the blocks in the 14th round from which licence applications have been withdrawn because of the impact of proposed petroleum revenue tax changes.

Mr. Eggar: In any licensing round, information on blocks applied for but not awarded is regarded as commercially confidential.

EC Technology and Industry Conference

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to participate in the European Commission's conference on its fourth framework programme on technology and industrial policies in London on 6 July.

Mr. McLoughlin: My Department has been asked to participate in the one day conference entitled "The Future of EC R&D and Industrial Policy", in London on 6 July. One of my officials, Mr. Adrian Grilli of the innovation policy division has agreed to chair this event being run by the Institute of European Trade and Technology.

Mr. Allan Mayo will be speaking for the Office of Science and Technology which is responsible for co-ordinating all United Kingdom policy on EC research and development.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what have been the costs incurred to date by the Scott inquiry.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 21 June 1993]: The DTI is responsible for meeting the direct costs incurred by the Scott inquiry which, to date, total about £150,000.

Offshore Pollution

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the type and quantity in tonnes of (a) drilling chemicals and (b) production chemicals notified to him as discharged by offshore operations in each year since 1979; and what is his best estimate of the proportion this represents in each year of the total amount of each chemical discharged into United Kingdom waters.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 10 June 1993]: Prior to 1987 the Department did not collect details of the tonnages of chemicals discharged offshore. A trial collection of data was made in 1987 and another in 1990, but there are doubts as to the completeness of the returns for those years. The first comprehensive annual return was that for 1991 which is set out in the table; the 1992 data are currently being collated. The products covered by the return are not in general discharged to the sea except from offshore installations.

Bank Auditors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has for legislation under which auditors of banks would be appointed by a body similar to the Audit Commission.

Mr. Nelson: I have been asked to reply.

There are no such proposals. The appointment of auditors remains a matter for individual banks.

Timber Imports

Mr. Gallie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the monthly cost of United Kingdom imports of timber for each month from March 1992 to March 1993.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 22 June 1993]: The available information is given in the table.

United Kingdom imports of timber[1]

NATIONAL FINANCE

Home Relocation

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy on the tax treatment of bridging loan finance costs incurred during home relocation.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government's policy is that the tax treatment of bridging loan finance costs incurred during home relocation should be subject to the usual tax rules, as well as those in clause 76 and schedule 5 of the current Finance (No. 2) Bill.

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy on the tax treatment of capital depreciation costs incurred during home relocation where either an employer or a relocation company purchases the employee's property at its current market value.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government's policy on capital depreciation costs on relocation, which are assumed to be loss on sale payments under guarantee sale price schemes, is that they should not qualify for tax relief under the new relief for relocation costs in clause 76 and schedule 5 of the current Finance (No. 2) Bill.

Private Security Firms

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the names of the private security firms currently employed by his Department, the number of employees for each firm on the contract, the total value of each contract and the total value for each financial year since 1987.

Mr. Nelson: Forward: Civil Service Catering is the only part of the Treasury currently employing private security firms. Individual contracts are arranged at local level. During 1992-93, three security firms were employed by Forward at a total cost of £122,000. Details for the current year and for earlier years are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Correspondence

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Nottingham, North of 29 April regarding the business sponsorship incentive scheme for sport.

Mr. Sproat: I can find no trace of the hon. Member's letter of 29 April ever having been received within my Department. Now that the hon. Member has sent my office a copy of the letter, I shall ensure that a reply is sent to him without delay.

ITV

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement following his meeting with ITV company chairmen on whether large ITV companies will be permitted to merge with each other.

Mr. Brooke: The meeting was helpful. I am reflecting on the various views put to me.

Boxing

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he received a copy of the British Medical Association's report into the risks associated with boxing; and if he proposes to set up an independent inquiry into these risks.

Mr. Brooke: My Department obtained a copy of the report upon its publication. I do not believe that the risks associated with boxing are sufficient to justify an inquiry.

Farm Buildings

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if it is possible to abstract from the listing of historic buildings farm houses and outbuildings which are no longer occupied or no longer serve an agricultural purpose.

Mr. Brooke: No. The statutory lists do not contain this information.

Press Regulation

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he will publish his proposals on the regulation of the press.

Mr. Brooke: The Government will set out their proposals on press regulation in their response to the report of the National Heritage Select Committee on privacy and media intrusion. We hope to publish this before the summer recess.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Royal Family

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answers of 7 June, Official Report, columns 82-83, and of 16 June, Official Report, column 645, on which of the visits by the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh the Royal Yacht and the Queen's Flight were used; and to what extent.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Aircraft of the Queen's flight were used for travel from the United Kingdom in the case of each of the visits listed. In the case of the visit to Malta, the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh embarked on the royal yacht in Palermo, Italy, and continued to use it throughout the visit. In the case of the visit to France, the royal yacht was used while the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh were in Bordeaux. In the case of the Duke of Edinburgh's visit to the Caribbean, the royal yacht was used throughout the visit.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 16 June, Official Report, column 645, into what categories his Department divides the expenditure on visits by members of the royal family.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Expenditure by the Department in support of official overseas visits undertaken by members of the royal family falls into the following categories:

(a) travel
(b) hotel expenses
(c) official presents and donations
(d) salaries—additional staff
(e) bank, postal, telephone and telegraph charges
(f) miscellaneous (insurance, reconnaissance visits partly for security purposes, and so on)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answers of 7 June, Official Report, columns 82-83, and of 16 June, Official Report, column 645, whether clothing formed part of the costs incurred by Government Departments in respect of visits by members of the royal family.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Yes.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answers of 7 June, Official Report, columns 82-83 and of 16 June, Official Report, column 645, which costs of the visits made by members of the royal family were met by other Government Departments; and if he will list the Departments.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: With the exception of visits by the Duke of Kent, no costs of overseas official visits undertaken by members of the royal family during the financial year 1992-93 were met by other Government Departments except for the costs of the royal yacht, the Queen's flight and other RAF aircraft, which were met by the Ministry of Defence. The costs of the visits by the Duke of Kent to Japan and Germany as vice-chairman of the British Overseas Trade Board were met by the Department of Trade and Industry.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 7 June, Official Report, columns 82-83, what was the cost to his Department of each of the visits taken by (a) the Prince and Princess of Wales, (b) Prince Edward, (c) the Princess Royal, (d) Princess Margaret, (e) the Duke and Duchess of Gloucester, (f) the Duke of Kent and (g) Princess Alexandra; on which of these visits the Queen's Flight was used; which Department bore the international travel costs; and what was the involvement of the Royal Yacht.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information is as follows.

The cost to the Department of the overseas visits undertaken by the members of the Royal Family as listed is as follows:

| Country | Date | Cost £ |
|---|---|---|
| The Prince and Princess of Wales | | |
| Egypt | 10–15 May | 26,600 |
| Korea | 2–5 November | 57,600 |
| Hong Kong | 5–7 November | 12,700 |
| France | 13–15 November | 2,400 |
| France | 17–19 November | 1,400 |
| United States of America and Mexico | 12–18 February | 22,600 |
| Nepal | 2–6 March | 9,900 |
| The Prince Edward | | |
| British Indian Ocean Territory, Brunei, Western Samoa | 2–18 October | 27,000 |
| The Princess Royal | | |
| Norway, Sweden, Finland | 11–19 May | 9,400 |
| India | 10–15 September | 23,200 |
| The Princess Margaret | | |
| The Netherlands | 23–25 June | 3,900 |
| The Duke and Duchess of Gloucester | | |
| Belgium | 12–13 October | 4,700 |
| The Duke of Kent | | |
| Japan | 14–23 May | Nil |
| Italy | 30 June–1 July | 6,700 |
| Germany | 9–10 November | Nil |
| Princess Alexandra | | |
| United States of America | 22–25 April | 23,000 |
| Trinidad and Tobago, Grenada | 30 October—7 November | 35,200 |

All these visits involved use of the Queen's flight/RAF aircraft and scheduled flights, except for that by the Duke of Kent to Italy, which involved only the former. The costs of the Queen's flight and other RAF aircraft are met by the Ministry of Defence. The costs of scheduled flights are met by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

The royal yacht was used during the visit to Mexico by the Prince of Wales.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 7 June, Official Report, columns 82-83, if he will list the official engagements on each visit by (a) the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh, (b) the Prince and Princess of Wales, (c) Prince Edward and (d) the Princess Royal.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I shall write to the right hon. Gentleman with details.

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence he has as to the extent and source of continuing supplies of weapons to Somalia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: An arms embargo was imposed on Somalia in January 1992 by the United Nations. We have received no reports of any violation of the embargo, but large amounts of arms undoubtedly remain in Somalia from the former regime.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment the United Nations has made as to the extent of the systematic use of rape as a weapon during the disturbances in Somalia; and what is being done to bring the offenders to justice.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There are no reports of the systematic use of rape as a weapon in the current disturbances.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in Somalia on an area-by-area basis to reconstruct a civil society; and who is responsible for such work.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Reconstruction of a civil society is ultimately the responsibility of the Somalis themselves. As a part of this process district councils are being established in several areas with the support of UNOSOM II. Clan elders are also playing a constructive role in the process.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what disciplinary action has been taken following review of the performance of the United Nations or its associated organisations in Somalia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Secretary-General has announced an investigation into the tragic shooting of Somali demonstrators by United Nations peacekeeping forces. The investigation has yet to be completed.

United States of America

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has further to improve diplomatic relations between the United States of America and the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Diplomatic relations with the United States are in excellent shape. I am pleased to say that we and the United States Administration remain in the closest contact.

PRIME MINISTER

Sustainable Development

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 17 June, Official Report, column 686, if he will give further details of the OECD meeting in Paris to which the report on sustainable development was presented.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom progress report to the United Nations Commission for Sustainable Development was made available to delegates attending the third meeting of the environment policy committee of the OECD held in Paris on 9 to 11 June. This was one of a regular series of meetings which enables Governments of industrialised countries to exchange views on issues of environmental policy. On this occasion the agenda included a review of the follow-up to last year's Earth summit. The committee will next meet in December.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 24 June.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 24 June.

The Prime Minister: This morning, I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Irish Republic (President)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Prime Minister on what dates since taking office the President of the Irish Republic made visits to Northern Ireland for which facilities were made available by Her Majesty's Government; which of those visits were (a) private and (b) official; what period of notice was given to Her Majesty's Government for each private visit; when invitations were issued by Her Majesty's Government in respect of official visits; what arrangements were made for Her Majesty's Government (i) to be informed of and (ii) to approve the itinerary of each visit; and if he will make a statement.

Prime Minister [holding answer 22 June 1993]: President Robinson has made private visits to Northern Ireland on 16 December 1990, 2 February 1992, 22 May 1992, 6 and 7 September 1992 and 18 and 19 June 1993. The usual courtesies for a visiting Head of State have been extended to the President on each occasion and Northern Ireland Office officials have been present at all venues, apart from Whiterock college of education on 18 June 1993. The period of notice given for the visits was three days, two months, 10 days, 10 days and three weeks respectively, but, in respect of the latest visit, particulars of those participating in the West Belfast item, and of its venue, were made known only three days before the visit.

No invitations have been extended by Her Majesty's Government apart from that to a reception given by the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on 2 February 1992. For each visit, Irish Government officials informed HMG of the proposed itinerary, which does not require HMG's approval.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

School Milk

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations she had made to the European Commission concerning future funding arrangements for the EC school milk scheme.

Mr. Jack: The Commission has not yet presented its detailed proposals for expenditure under the school milk scheme in 1994. When it does, our position on the matter will be determined by a thorough examination of the provisions contained therein.

Equine Disease

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent additional precautions have been taken to protect against the importation into the United Kingdom of horses infected with equine viral arteritis from third countries.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The state veterinary service will increase the level of post-import testing of stallions imported from third countries. All those giving seropositive results will be re-exported to their country of origin.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment she has made of compliance with the procedures governing the import of equidae from Poland over the last two years.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The compliance with either Community or, in their absence, national rules in respect of the import of live animals from third countries is kept under continuous review.

Since June 1991 a small number of horses has been re-exported to Poland following seropositive test results for EVA. The matter was taken up with the Polish veterinary authorities which were reminded of our import requirements.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence her Department has as to the number of occasions over the last five years on which measures designed to protect the United Kingdom from the importation of equine viral arteritis have not been complied with.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Department has evidence of 10 occasions during the last five years when measures designed to prevent the introduction of equine viral arteritis have not been compiled with.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement on the protection offered under article 20(2) of EC directive 90/426/EEC in respect of equidae imported into the United Kingdom, in circumstances where it is known that a third country has failed to comply fully with the conditions set out in the directive.

Mr. Gillian Shephard: Article 20 of directive 90/426/EEC was revoked by directive 91/496/EEC laying down the principles governing the organisation of veterinary checks on animals entering the Community from third countries. The latter permits member states to require, as appropriate, the detention in quarantine or isolation, or the slaughter or re-export of any animal which is found to be diseased or suspected of being diseased, or which does not fully meet the import requirements laid down in Community or national import rules; or where it is established that the exporting third country has not complied with the requirements provided for in Community or national rules.

Farm and Conservation Grant Scheme

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will provide a breakdown of expenditure under the farm and conservation grant scheme in cash and real terms, for each financial year since the inception of the scheme in 1989.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The breakdown requested is shown in the table.

Grant paid under the F&CGS 1989-93 in England and Wales

| Financial year | Cash £'000s | (Real Terms) £'000s[1] |
|---|---|---|
| 1989-90 | 6,663 | 6,663 |
| 1990-91 | 26,732 | 24,385 |
| 1991-92 | 35,713 | 31,089 |
| 1992-93 | 32,618 | 27,535 |

[1] Calculated using the Retail Price Index taking 1989-90 as the base year.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what purpose the farm and conservation grant scheme was established.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The farm and conservation grant scheme is designed to help farmers maintain efficient farming systems while also meeting the often heavy cost of combating pollution and conserving the countryside and its wildlife. The scheme focuses on those investments which cut costs by updating existing resources and on those which help to achieve good countryside management. A special priority of the scheme is to help farmers install and improve waste handling facilities in order to meet their obligations to minimise pollution risks.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reasons account for the decision to allow farmers under 40 years of age to qualify for an additional allowance under the farm and conservation grant scheme; and what is the amount of the additional allowance.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The extra grant for young farmers—those under 40—implements a provision of EC regulation 2328/91 on agricultural structures. An additional 25 per cent. of the normal rates of grant is payable to young farmers on first improvement plans under the farm and conservation grant scheme.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minster of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if access to the farm and conservation grant is conditional on the applicant fulfilling any residential qualifications.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: So that grant is paid only to viable businesses, the farm and conservation grant scheme requires that a farm business for which grant is sought must have been operational for at least a year. In addition, farmers situated in less-favoured areas are eligible for grant aid on the regeneration of grassland using lime and/or fertiliser and for enhanced rates of grant for some other investments. Otherwise, there are no conditions relating to residence.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the farm and conservation grant for repairs and reinstatement of farm buildings encompasses farm houses and outbuildings which have been unoccupied for a six-month or longer period, but which are to be brought back into agricultural use.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: It is a condition of the grants available under the farm and conservation grant scheme for the repair or refurbishment of traditional farm buildings that the building for which grant is sought must be in current agricultural use and have been in use during the 12 months prior to the application being received. However, no grant aid is available for the restoration of dwellings on farms.

Milk Quotas

Mr. Stern: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans the Government have for the administration of milk quotas under the new milk marketing arrangements provided for in the Agriculture Bill [Lords].

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Much of the day-to-day administration of milk quotas is currently carried out by the milk marketing boards. It would be wrong for this work to be passed on to the boards' successor bodies since it would give them access to commercially sensitive information about the operations of their competitors. The Government intend, therefore, that from the beginning of the next quota year on 1 April 1994 the Intervention Board executive agency should assume overall responsibility for the administration of milk quotas in the United Kingdom, including those functions currently carried out by the milk marketing boards. A further announcement will be made when detailed arrangements have been finalised.

As well as transferring responsibility for the administration of milk quotas to an independent agency, we are also considering whether any other changes are necessary in the operation of the quota system to ensure that it does not tilt the playing field to anyone's advantage. We are looking in particular at the arrangements for leasing quota between producers and we will be consulting the industry on this and other issues before deciding what amendments to make to the quota regulations.

Livestock Imports (Poland)

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what import precautions were in force in respect of the import of horses and farmed livestock before September 1992; and what additional precautions were in force in respect of such imports from Poland.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Imports of horses and farmed livestock were subject to harmonised Community or, in their absence, national rules. Such import conditions differed according to species and the animal health status of the country of origin. Among other things, such conditions included pre-export or post-import testing and isolation, as appropriate, and, in all cases, that consignments were accompanied by a health certificate signed by an official veterinarian of the exporting country confirming that the animals fully complied with our import requirements.

From 1 July 1992 imports of live animals were also subject to veterinary checks in accordance with the provisions of Council directives 90/425/EEC and 91/496/EEC. In view of the safeguards provided, it was not considered to be necessary to take any special precautions in relation to such imports from Poland.

ENVIRONMENT

THORP

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) of 11 June, Official Report, column 357, if he will place in the Library (a) copies of the communications from the Swedish and Danish Environment Ministers on THORP and (b) copies of the information on the Paris Commission.

Mr. Yeo: It is not normal practice to place in the Library of the House confidential correspondence with foreign Governments. I have placed in the Library the two draft Parcom recommendations requested, together with the final recommendation.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on the preferred option for the disposal of radioactive spent fuel from advanced gas-cooled reactors, as between reprocessing and dry storage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: It is for the owners of spent fuel to decide on safety, technical and economic grounds whether to reprocess spent fuel from advanced gas-cooled reactors or place it in dry storage.

Homelessness

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest figures for homeless households in temporary accommodation in England and Wales.

Sir George Young: The latest available estimate for the number of homeless households living in temporary accommodation relates to 31 March and appears in table 4(d) of "Households found accommodation under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act 1985: England. Statistics for the first quarter of 1993", a copy of which is in the Library.

For information about Wales, I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Bed-and-breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest estimate of the cost to local authorities of placing homeless families in bed-and-breakfast accommodation.

Sir George Young: The most recent year for which information is available is 1990-91, when it is estimated that English local authorities' revenue expenditure, defined as net current expenditure, on bed and breakfast and similar accommodation was £66·632 million.

Housing Completions

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the housing completion figures in (a) 1987 and (b) 1992.

Sir George Young: Estimates of housebuilding completions for England and Great Britain are shown in the publication "Housing and Construction Statistics". Figures for 1987 are in tables 6.1(a) and 6.1(d) of the 1981 to 1991 annual edition; and provisional figures for 1992 are in tables 1.2(a) and 1.2(d) of the December quarter 1992 edition—issue No. 52. Copies of this publication are in the Library.

Gipsy Sites

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to extend the period of consultation on his draft advisory circular on gipsy sites and planning to the end of October 1993 to take account of the local authority holiday season and the absence of gipsies from their normal habitats in July and August.

Mr. Curry: Our policy is to allow a reasonable time for interested parties to express their views. In order to clarify gipsies' position in the planning system, it is important that the guidance is issued as soon as possible. I do not therefore propose to extend the two-month consultation period beyond the end of July.

District Councils

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each district council with no overall political control (a) the total population, (b) the total capital budget for 1993-94 and (c) the total revenue budget for 1993-94

Mr. Baldry: I have arranged for the available information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Urban Regeneration Agency

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the selection of a chief executive for the Urban Regeneration Agency.

Mr. Gummer: Lord Walker of Worcester, as chairman-designate of the URA, has selected Mr. David Taylor, currently the managing director of AMEC Developments Ltd., to be the agency's first chief executive. Mr. Taylor has been chosen in open competition from a field of 178 applicants. He will bring to the agency a wealth of experience in regeneration gained during his private sector career. Subject to enactment of the Leasehold Reform, Housing and Urban Development Bill, he will be appointed chief executive by the agency when established later this year.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Milligan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements he is making for the issue of supplementary credit approvals to local authorities in England in respect of ERDF grants in 1993-94.

Mr. Curry: Supplementary credit approvals will be issued quarterly for ERDF expenditure defrayed on approved projects for which local authorities have submitted grant claims. In addition, temporary increases in authorities' aggregate credit limits will be available on request to assist the financing of expenditure on approved ERDF projects in the period before supplementary credit approvals are received. Local authorities in England are being advised by letter today of these arrangements.

Building Management Businesses

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he has made in selling the Building Management Business.

Mr. Curry: I hope to exchange contracts with purchasers of the Building Management Businesses shortly. We are proceeding with individual sales as negotiations are completed. Parliamentary approval of new expenditure to enable the vendor to complete the sales will be sought in a winter supplementary estimate for the sale of PSA Services businesses vote—class VII vote 13. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure will be met by repayable advances from the contingencies fund.

Ground Maintenance Work, Chester

Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has decided to take against the city of Chester following the notice served on the authority on 1 April, under section 13 of the Local Government Act 1988, in respect of ground maintenance work.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend has given careful consideration to the response which the City of Chester has made to the notice served on 1 April 1993, and has today given a direction under section 14 of the Local Government Act 1988 in respect of ground maintenance work. The direction places restrictions on the extent to which the authority can undertake ground maintenance work without the express agreement of the Secretary of State.

HEALTH

Boxers

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many boxers have been killed, or brain damaged by boxing in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested concerning deaths for the period 1987 to 1991 in England and Wales is routinely published by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys in its monitor entitled "Fatal accidents occurring during sporting and leisure activities" series DH4; information for 1992 is not yet available.

During this period, one death was registered in 1987.

The information requested for the incidence of brain damage is not available centrally.

District Nurses

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of whole-time equivalent district nurses in 1992.

Mr. Sackville: The latest information shows that in England, at 30 September 1991, there were 9,900 whole-time equivalent district nurses.

At October 1992, there were 9,120 whole-time equivalent practice nurses.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if her Department will establish a joint research programme with the Medical Research Council into the physical origins and treatment of myalgic encephalomyelitis.

Mr. Sackville: A task force on myalgic encephalomyelitis—ME—is preparing a report which should provide a basis for considering a more structured approach to research in this field. Both the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, and the Department will continue to receive and evaluate individual proposals for ME research.

Thames Region Provider Units

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many neuroscience, plastic surgery, cancer, cardiac and renal beds there are in each provider unit in the Thames region;

(2) if she will list the provider units in the Thames region at present in respect of each of paediatric, neuroscience, plastic surgery, cancer, cardiac and renal services; and the number of beds in each unit.

Dr. Mawhinney: The number of ordinary and day case patients treated by specialty for districts and trusts have been published in "Ordinary and day case admissions for England 1991-92", a copy of which is available in the Library. Information on beds by specialty is not available centrally.

Speech Therapy

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many children have been identified as requiring speech therapy in the city of Newcastle in each of the last five years;

(2) what has been the average waiting time, for each of the last five years, for children in the city of Newcastle waiting to receive speech therapy from the point at which speech therapy is recommended to the date at which treatment commences.

Mr. Bowis: The information requested is not available centrally. However, for children aged 15 or under in Newcastle, 670 new episodes of speech therapy treatment were started in 1989-90, 695 in 1990-91 and 727 in 1991-92.

Residential Care

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to initiate a public inquiry into the running of all residential care establishments in connection with allegations of maltreatment of children in such establishments; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: None. Since 1991, there have been a number of inquiries into specific aspects of residential child care. Where there are specific allegations of mistreatment, the Government are always concerned to ensure that they are thoroughly investigated by the managing authorities, as laid down in procedures for child protection and that appropriate action is taken in the event of the confirmation of such allegations. We have recently established a residential child care support force whose prime purpose will be to promote improvements in the quality and delivery of the service for these young people.

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the terms of reference of the support force for children's residential care.

Mr. Bowis: We are currently consulting on draft terms of reference which are as follows:

1. a. to offer advice to individual authorities on quality of care and management issues in children's residential care, with particular reference to the appointment and selection, personnel management, and development and internal training of children's residential care staff.
   b. to offer advice to individual authorities and, where appropriate, groups of authorities on suitable mechanisms for matching need and supply in their localities or regions, taking account of the potential contributions of voluntary, private and public sectors; and on related commissioning and contractual issues. A particular focus of the work will be to assist authorities and others to improve occupancy rates and hence reduce unit costs in children's residential homes where this is appropriate.
   c. to prepare material for a code of employment practice, for discussion with employer and other interests.
2. The Children's Residential Care Support Force will work under Department of Health auspices, and from time to time as requested, report on its programme and progress. It will work with social services and, as appropriate, other agencies by invitation in a consulting and facilitating role. The Social Services Inspectorate's advice will be available to it. It will work within the framework of the Children Act 1989 and regulations and guidance issued following that and other relevant legislation; the Warner report and Government decisions in it; and other material that may be relevant. Its remit is for a period of two years from the summer of 1993. Ministers will then review the progress made.

I expect to be able to announce next month the membership of the support force.

Cervical Smear Tests

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how frequently in each district health authority area (a) women between the ages of 20 years and 35 years and (b) women over 35 years receive cervical smear tests.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available centrally, but a report by the National Audit Office in 1992 found that at 31 March 1991, 46 per cent. of districts in England recalled women every five years, 39 per cent. recalled every three years and the remaining 15 per cent. recalled different women at different intervals.

The central method of collecting information on the cervical screening programme is currently being revised, and it is intended that this information will be available from the financial year 1994-95.

Nurse Regrading

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses have been waiting five years or more to complete the appeals procedure for regrading.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals she has to buy out nurses regrading appeals; and if she will make a statement on the situation (a) nationally and (b) in the Nottingham area.

Mr. Sackville: Local managers have been asked to consider the use of buy-outs where they judge such measures will be cost effective. Some appellants in the Nottingham area have accepted buy-out offers and others will be considering doing so.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Tipping), of 15 June, Official Report, column 510, if she will give the information on outstanding nurses' grading appeals by grade of nurse, including auxiliaries.

Mr. Sackville: Information on the number of appeals outstanding by grade at employing authority level is not available centrally. At regional level, no reliable data are currently available. The information on the number of appeals outstanding by grade at national level for England is shown in the table.

Nurses and midwives clinical grading appeals outstanding as at 31 May 1993
England

| Grade claimed | National level |
|---|---|
| B | 465 |
| C | 214 |
| D | 160 |

| Grade claimed | National level |
|---|---|
| E | 188 |
| F | 415 |
| G | 437 |
| H | 248 |
| I | 27 |

Respiratory Distress Syndrome

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action is being taken to reduce the number of new-born babies dying from respiratory distress syndrome; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 17 June 1993]: Information about the effectiveness of clinical treatments is available to doctors through professional journals and other scientific publications. The results of widespread clinical trials have been published which suggest that artificial surfactant is an effective treatment for premature babies suffering from, or at high risk of, respiratory distress syndrome. The use of this treatment has grown rapidly within the national health service, even though it only became available commercially 18 months ago.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Potatoes

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many tonnes of potatoes have been supplied as aid to each region or nation in the former Yugoslavia; for what purposes they were provided; where they were sourced; what was the price per tonne paid to the growers; what was the price per tonne paid by his Department; what information he has that seed potatoes so provided were actually planted; and what further aid is contemplated in respect of the agricultural industry.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: At the request of UNHCR we supplied 2,000 tonnes of seed potatoes to the Tuzla region of Bosnia in March of this year. These were provided as part of our humanitarian aid programme to the former Yugoslavia to provide a cost-effective food source for the local population during 1993. They were procured through a supplier in Scotland who obtained supplies from more than 30 growers. The price paid to the supplier, reflecting both the urgency and the requirement for export-grade super elite standard potatoes, was £140 per tonne for 1,000 tonnes of Desiree potatoes and £145 per tonne for 1,000 tonnes of Pentland Squire potatoes. In addition to the costs of purchase this price included grading, bagging, marking and certification.

Our representatives in the former Yugoslavia have confirmed that the seed potatoes have been planted, and that the aid was well received and used. We have no plans for any further such projects at present.

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to the number of Somalis dependent for food aid on foreign donors.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In February the World Food Programme/Food and Agriculture Organisation crop and food supply assessment mission estimated that 200,000 tonnes of imported food aid would be required to support approximately 2·5 million Somalis in the period March to August 1993.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the number of children currently dying in Somalia from measles, dysentery, diarrhoea, tuberculosis, malaria and other illnesses.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The demise of health services in Somalia makes it extremely difficult for relief agencies to compile reliable statistics on the incidence of child mortality.

Since January 1992 and in response to individual requests from relief agencies, we have committed £2·8 million in humanitarian aid funds in support of health care activities. This includes support for mother and child health care programmes and an expanded programme on immunisation, both of which are helping to reduce the incidence of disease in children.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made in removal of mines in Somalia; and what assistance his Department has given.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The British company Rimfire has been training and supervising more than 400 local people in a major mine clearance programme in north-west Somalia, the worst affected region, for the last 19 months. Over that period, we have contributed £673,000 to the Hargeisa part of the operation. Work in Hargeisa has now been completed. Later this year we expect UNOSOM II to put forward a plan to address the mine clearance needs of the whole of Somalia. In the meantime Rimfire's multi-donor funded operation in the north-west continues.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in involving Somali professionals in the reconstruction of the country.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: UNOSOM II employs some Somali professional staff and relief agencies rely heavily on Somali staff, many of whom are professionals, to help plan and implement their programmes. We shall encourage the employment of Somali professionals wherever appropriate and expect the numbers employed to accelerate as the process of recovery gets under way.

EMPLOYMENT

Training

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many complaints have been received about the standard of training at agencies to which his Department refers clients.

Miss Widdecombe: There is no central record of such complaints. Local training and enterprise councils contract with providers to deliver Government funded training programmes in their areas. TECs are required to operate quality control procedures and will take up any complaint made to them by a client.

Disabled People

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement outlining the current training provision given to disability employment advisers concerning the interpretation of reasonable cause for the dismissal of registered disabled people from employment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The question whether there is reasonable cause for a particular dismissal is a matter of fact for the court to decide in the light of all the circumstances of the case. Disability employment advisers do not advise on such matters and, therefore, receive no specific training on the interpretation of this provision.

Youth Training

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of young people who are eligible for youth training schemes under the youth training guarantee are receiving such training; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: In May there were around 241,000 young people in England on youth training—YT—or participating in youth credits, there were a further 4,000 young people who were covered by the YT guarantee and had been waiting for a YT place for eight or more weeks, of whom 1,600 had already received an offer.

Information on how many young people who are in training and were covered by the guarantee is not available.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Sunday Trading

12. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have taken place on breaches of the Sunday trading laws in the last 12-month period for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In 1991, the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available, 522 prosecutions were brought under part IV of the Shops Act, of which 86 were brought to successful conclusions.

Street Violence

13. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what priority he attaches to initiatives addressed to street violence and mugging.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A high priority is given to such initiatives. Many of the schemes funded by the safer cities programme have been targeted at street violence.

Fire and Civil Defence Authorities

14. Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when next he plans to meet representatives of the fire and civil defence authorities to discuss their funding requirements for 1994-95.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There are no immediate plans for such a meeting.

Prison Privatisation

15. Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of his Department's prison privatisation programme.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Following the contracting out of the Wolds remand prison and Her Majesty's prison Blakenhurst, tenders for Her Majesty's prison Doncaster are to be invited in July. The market testing of Manchester prison is proceeding and a decision on the service supplier is expected in July.

17. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will allow the existing prison service to bid to run the prison in future prison privatisation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Prison Service will not be bidding in the next competitive tender to run Her Majesty's prison Doncaster. This continues the policy of no in-house bids for new establishments in the current building programme, which ends with Doncaster. The service will concentrate on preparing in-house bids for the next tranche of market testing of existing establishments.

Police Service (Changes)

16. Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans next to meet representatives of the Superintendents Association in the north-west to discuss the Government's proposed changes to the police service.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to meet north-western representatives of the Superintendents Association.

Sentencing

18. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding appeals against lenient sentences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: We receive representations from time to time both about individual cases and about the scope of the powers vested in my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General under the Criminal Justice Act 1988. His careful and discriminating use of those powers has repeatedly proved the wisdom of that legislation.

Juvenile Offenders

19. Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research his Department has carried out into current methods of dealing with persistent juvenile offenders.

Mr. Maclean: The Home Office has commissioned more than 47 research projects on various aspects of juvenile crime since 1979; but the Government's conclusion that the existing powers of the courts to deal with persistent juvenile offending are unsatisfactory also took account of views firmly expressed by experienced practitioners within the criminal justice system. Currently an in-depth survey of persistent juvenile offending, and the response made to it, is being carried out in two London boroughs and one midlands county as part of the preparation for the introduction of the new secure training order for persistent juvenile offenders which my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Rushcliffe (Mr. Clarke) announced in his statement on 2 March 1993, Official Report, columns 139-42.

22. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of current measures to deal with persistent juvenile offenders.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend shares the view of his predecessor that the powers currently available to the courts when they have to deal with persistent juvenile offenders are unsatisfactory. He intends therefore to take forward the proposals for the secure training order which my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Rushcliffe (Mr. Clarke) announced to the House on 2 March 1993, Official Report, columns 139-42, and to bring the necessary legislation before the House as soon as possible.

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met representatives of the Association of Chief Police Officers to discuss the problems arising from juvenile offenders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend met the President of the Association of Chief Police Officers on 28 May 1993 although he has not yet had the opportunity to discuss the subject of juvenile offending with representatives of the association. He is, however, aware of the views which they have expressed about it, for example in evidence given earlier this year to the Select Committee on Home Affairs.

Crime Levels, Yorkshire

20. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to visit Yorkshire in the near future to discuss levels of crime.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend has, at present, no plans to make such a visit; but we have, and will maintain, regular contacts with services, organisations and individuals knowledgeable about crime in Yorkshire.

Security Services

21. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy towards parliamentary accountability of the security services.

Mr. Howard: Government policy on the accountability of the Security Service was set out in their reply to the report of the Select Committee on Home Affairs which was published on 27 May.

British Summer Time

23. Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the extension of British summer time.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As I explained in my reply to a question from the hon. Member on 30 November 1992, Official Report, column 7, the Government will bring forward proposals on future summer time arrangements when the outcome of the current review by the European Commission is clear.

Car Crime

24. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had with car manufacturers about reducing the incidence of car theft.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders is represented on the Home Office advisory committee on car crime prevention, one of the main aims of which is to consider what practical steps car manufacturers and others can take to reduce the incidence of car theft.

Mr. James Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions his Department has had with fleet buyers in seeking to prevent car crime.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The British Vehicle Rental and Leasing Association is represented on the Home Office advisory committee on car crime prevention which meets regularly to discuss what more can be done to help prevent car crime.

In addition, a senior officer from the Home Office crime prevention centre sits on the panel which assesses entries for the BVRLA's prestigious vehicle anti-theft award. I shall be presenting this year's award later this month.

National Board for Crime Prevention

25. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representative of business and commerce have been included in the membership of the National Board for Crime Prevention.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Three of the 11 members of the National Board for Crime Prevention have commercial or business backgrounds. They are: Keith Ackroyd, the managing director of the retail division of the Boots Company plc, and chairman of the British Retail Consortium; Peter Batchelor, the executive director of sales and marketing at Vauxhall Motors; and David Sieff, a director at Marks and Spencer.

Rape

26. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what studies he has commissioned about the length of sentences for rape.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend has commissioned no such studies. But information about the length of custodial sentences imposed for all indictable offences is published regularly in the series of Command Papers entitled "Criminal Statistics", copies of which are in the Library of the House. They show that virtually all persons convicted of rape offences—including attempted rape—are sentenced to immediate custody and that, excluding cases in which the court has imposed the maximum sentence of life imprisonment, the average sentence length, which was just over four years in 1985, rose to approximately six years in 1987 and has remained at that level ever since.

Domestic Violence

27. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research his Department has conducted into domestic violence.

Mr. Maclean: Relevant factual information is regularly obtained through the British crime survey and recorded crime statistics. In addition, the Home Office has undertaken studies into the nature of domestic violence as well as the response to the problem. A review of existing research in 1989—Home Office research study 107: "Domestic Violence": Lorna J. F. Smith—provided fresh insight into the nature of domestic violence and contributed to the guidance that was issued in July 1990 to the police and Crown Prosecution Service to ensure a quick and effective response. A current Home Office research study is assessing the effects of the new policies. In the area of action research, the Home Office is also funding a number of local innovative projects into violence and in particular domestic violence which are intended to inform future policy development.

Carl Bridgewater Case

28. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to complete his review of the Carl Bridgewater case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I would refer the hon. Member to the oral reply given earlier today to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn).

Feltham Young Offender Centre

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase the allowance of food to the young people in Feltham young offender and remand centre.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange a reply.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated June 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you in response to your Parliamentary Question about what plans he has to increase the allowance of food to the young people in Feltham Young Offender and Remand Centre.

The daily food allowance was increased on 1 May 1993. In the case of Feltham this resulted in an increase from £1·22 to £1·35 per prisoner per day. There are no plans for a further increase in the allowance or the amount of food provided, which we believe is adequate.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what structured training programmes he intends to introduce at Feltham young offender and remand centre.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated June 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your Question about the structured training programmes that are to be introduced at Feltham Young Offender and Remand Centre.

Sentenced young offenders will be provided with their own training plans by the end of September which will take account of their needs, behaviour, attitude, education and work options. There will be modules which challenge offending behaviour and 'relapse prevention' training. Opportunities for achieving National Vocational Qualifications in a range of subjects including Gardening, Painting and Decorating, Catering, Industrial Cleaning and Business Administration will be offered in appropriate cases. Discussions with the local NVQ advisor will be held by the end of July with a view to introducing the NVQ arrangements before the end of 1993.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce a probation department at Feltham young offender and remand centre.

Mr. Maclean: Feltham remand centre has a team of one senior and five main grade probation officers. The young offender institution has a single senior probation officer whose main role is to develop and maintain the operation of the personal officer scheme and act as liaison point between the institution and the outside supervising services.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to prevent young people from becoming victims of drug abuse.

Mr. Maclean: One of the primary tasks of 20 Home Office local drug prevention teams is to work with local communities in finding effective ways of tackling misuse, particularly among high-risk groups such as young people.

Prisoners (AIDS)

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners with AIDS have been granted early parole under section 36 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None.

New Age Travellers

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what requests he has had from police authorities in the west of England for assistance in helping to meet the extra costs incurred by dealing with past and expected new age traveller invasions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None.

Police (Stress-related Illnesses)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many working days have been lost through stress-related illnesses in each police force area in the United Kingdom in each year since 1990.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not held centrally and could be collected from individual forces only at disproportionate cost.

Palace of Westminster (Fire Safety)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the dates in the past 10 years when the Palace of Westminster and parliamentary outbuildings have been inspected for compliance with the fire safety regulations and standards which apply; if he will give details of all fire safety regulations and standards which apply; if he will list those areas where the inspections have found non-compliance with the relevant requirements; and what steps he has taken to rectify the situation in those areas.

Mr. Charles Wardle: During the past 10 years, members of Her Majesty's fire service inspectorate have visited the Palace of Westminster on nine scheduled occasions to monitor the progress of an agreed programme of work necessary before the issue of a fire certificate under the Fire Precautions Act 1971.

These visits were in:

November 1983
October 1984
April 1987
January 1988
July 1989
January 1990
February 1990
January 1991
February 1991

Numerous other visits have been made to address specific points and the work should be complete in 1994.

There are nine parliamentary outbuildings which are dealt with individually for the purpose of fire certification. Some hold certificates, and some have applications under consideration. I will write to the hon. Member with full details.

Police (Red Tape)

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to reduce red tape in the police force.

Mr. Charles Wardle: An extensive study into police paperwork is being undertaken. It will propose ways in which the administrative procedures following an arrest can be streamlined without jeopardising the rights of suspects. A review was also undertaken last year to examine ways in which the demands on the police for statistical and other information from the Home Office could be reduced. Computerisation and civilianisation are also being pursued as ways of relieving operational officers of administrative tasks.

Custody Officers

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish figures showing the total number of custody officers in each police force in England and Wales in (a) 1980, (b) 1985 and (c) 1992.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The post of custody officer was introduced by the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, which did not come into effect until 1 January 1986. The table shows the total number of custody officers in 1992 in those police forces in England and Wales for which figures are available. I understand that those forces for which figures are not shown appoint custody officers from their complement of sergeants as and when they are needed.

Prison Escort Service

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the highest number of escapes in a week from the prison escort service (a) since 1988 and (b) since Group 4 Security has operated the service.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Nigel Evans, dated June 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the highest number of escapes in a week from the Prison Escort Service (a) since 1988 and (b) since Group 4 Court Services Ltd has operated the service.

From 1988 until Group 4 Court Services Ltd became involved in the Court Escort Service, the highest number of prisoners who escaped in one week was 12. On 5 April 1993 Group 4 Court Services Ltd began operating in one area, the East Midlands and Humberside—replacing both Prison Service and the substantially more numerous police escorts in that area. Since 5 April the highest number of prisoner escapes in one week, up to the end of May, was 6. These figures include all escorts from prisons in England and Wales staffed by Prison Service personnel or Group 4 Court Services Ltd staff, but excludes escapes from police escort.

This information is derived from incidents reported to the Incident Management Support Unit, a part of the Directorate of Custody.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Company Investigations

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total cost of each of the company investigations currently in progress and the manner in which it has been disbursed to the relevant individual inspectors.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The cost of current Companies Act inspections charged to date, inclusive of VAT, is as follows:

| Investigation | Accountant inspector and support staff from his firm including disbursements £ | Legal inspector and support including disbursements £ | Total cost £ |
|---|---|---|---|
| Guinness Plc | 1,510,000 | 389,000 | 1,899,000 |

| Mirror Group Newspapers Plc | 2,321,000 | 412,000 | 2,733,000 |

[1] Inspectors are both DTI officers.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total cost of each of the company investigations completed by his Department during the year to 31 March and the manner in which such costs have been disbursed to the relevant individual inspectors.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The cost of Companies Act inspections, completed during the year to 31 March 1993, inclusive of VAT, is as follows:

| Investigation | Accountant inspector and support staff from his firm including disbursements £ | Legal inspector and support including disbursements £ | Total cost £ |
|---|---|---|---|
| National Westminster Bank Plc | 2,101,000 | 477,000 | 2,578,000 |
| Norton Group Plc | 842,000 | 156,000 | 998,000 |
| Edencorp Leisure Plc | — | — | [1]207,000 |
| James Neill Holdings Plc; Francis Industries Limited; FH Lloyd Holdings Plc; The Mersey Docks and Harbour Company; Metal Closures Group Plc; Winchmore Plc | 129,000 | 125,000 | 254,000 |

[1] Inspectors were both DTI officers.

Accounting Standards Board

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has held with the Accounting Standards Board on its priorities.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I discussed the work of the Accounting Standards Board with the chairman and members of the board last July. I expect to have further discussions with them in due course.

Ernst and Young

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he has taken against Ernst and Young following criticisms of the firm's standards by his inspectors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The inspectors' reports concerned have been referred to the firm's supervisory body, the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales. As a recognised supervisory body, the institute is responsible for taking any disciplinary or regulatory action against an auditor registered with it.

Industrial Development

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last met the Governor of the Bank of England to discuss the financing of industrial development.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department keeps in regular contact with the Bank of England on a range of matters. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade last met the Governor in January.

Electricity Interconnector

Mr. Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the recent trend in the amount for electricity imported and exported via the channel interconnector, and on the prospects of the remainder of 1993.

Mr. Eggar: Net imports across the interconnector in the three months from February to April 1993 were 4.29 TWh. The future pattern of trade will depend on the operation of commercial contracts, including a contract for the export from the United Kingdom of increasing quantities of electricity at periods of peak demand in France during the winter.

Export Licences

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many export licence applications were referred to Ministers for (a) Iran and (b) Iraq for each year from 1980; and of those for each country in each year how many were (a) granted and (b) refused.

Mr. Needham: No reliable information is available from 1980-84. Export licence applications for Iran from 1985 to 1992, and for Iraq from 1985 to August 1990, were considered by the interdepartmental committee—IDC—which consisted of representatives from the Ministry of Defence, the Department of Trade and Industry and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. All applications for the IDC are referred to FCO and MOD Ministers to give final approval to the military, atomic and nuclear list goods. Final approval for industrial list goods rests with the DTI unless the FCO has overriding political considerations.

DTI Ministers become involved only if there is a policy issue which needs to be resolved. In 1992 DTI procedures were changed, and all IDC cases are now referred to DTI Ministers.

Since August 1990, as only humanitarian exports have received exports for Iraq, no licence applications have been referred to DTI Ministers.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many export licence applications for (a) Iran and (b) Iraq were received for each year from 1980; and how many in each year for each country were (i) granted, (ii) refused, (iii) withdrawn or (iv) cancelled.

Mr. Needham: Export licence applications before 1985 have not been preserved, following a regular programme of destruction of routine documents.

From 1985 to 1992 export licence applications for Iran were processed by the interdepartmental committee—IDC—which was composed of representatives from the Department of Trade and Industry, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Ministry of Defence. The most accurate figures available are as follows:

| | 1985 | 1986 | 1987 | 1988 | 1989 | 1990 | 1991 | 1992 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Received | 259 | 298 | 593 | 607 | 568 | 675 | 1,081 | 814 |
| Approved | 218 | 256 | 405 | 457 | 396 | 377 | 558 | 337 |
| Refused | 10 | 17 | 61 | 51 | 71 | 44 | 143 | 109 |
| Cancelled/withdrawn | 31 | 25 | 127 | 99 | 101 | [1]254 | [2]270 | [2]133 |
| No licence required | — | — | — | — | — | — | 70 | 53 |
| Outstanding at year end | — | — | — | — | — | — | 40 | 182 |

Note:

The basis on which the figures were collected changes after 1990. Up to 1990 the figures show the final outcome for all licences received in each year. For 1991 and 1992, the figures show the position at the end of the year for all licences received that year. So: the figure marked [1] includes pending cases at end 1990, and [2] includes cases still pending at the end of the previous year.

From 1985 to August 1990, export licence applications for Iraq were processed by the IDC. The figures are as follows:

| | 1985 | 1986 | 1987 | 1988 | 1989 | [1]1990 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Received | 367 | 295 | 315 | 401 | 410 | 241 |
| Approved | 323 | 272 | 272 | 327 | 345 | 118 |
| Refused | 11 | 6 | 16 | 25 | 19 | 28 |
| Cancelled/withdrawn | 33 | 17 | 27 | 49 | 46 | 95 |

[1] Until August.

Since August 1990 UN sanctions have been enforced against Iraq. Licences are granted only for humanitarian purposes. Applications for licences are considered carefully on a case-by-case basis, not only in the United Kingdom, but by the UN sanctions committee in New York which has, since October 1992, have issued letters of authorisation for each export. The figures are:

|---|---|---|---|
| Received | 117 | 423 | 1,043 |
| Approved | 7 | 342 | 696 |
| Refused | 18 | 21 | 154 |
| Pending at year end | 92 | 60 | 193 |

[1] August-December.

Iran and Iraq

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total value of United Kingdom exports to (a) Iran and (b) Iraq for each year from 1980, broken down into civil and defence-related exports for each country.

Mr. Needham: Information on United Kingdom visible trade is pubished in the "Annual Abstract of Statistics", a copy of which is available in the Library.

For reasons of commercial confidentiality, it has been the consistent policy of successive Governments not to disclose particulars of defence trade with other countries. It is therefore not possible to provide a breakdown into civil and defence-related exports.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Bates: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the future of the transitional reinsurance facility provided by ECGD to the privatised successor of its Insurance Services Group.

Mr. Needham: At the time of privatisation of ECGD's Insurance Services Group, the Government undertook to top up the reinsurance available from the private sector as necessary for up to three years to ensure that the reinsurance needs of the privatised operation would be met.

It has become clear that in the immediate future capacity in the private reinsurance market may well not expand sufficiently to meet the likely demand for short-term export credit insurance. This, in turn, reflects the current rapid growth in our exports.

The Government have, therefore, decided to extend the transitional reinsurance facility until at least the end of 1997. It nevertheless remains the Government's objective to maximise the extent to which reinsurance is provided by the private market and it will take all necessary measures to encourage that process. The Government retain the right, however, to terminate this facility, but, in order to provide a stable framework of support for both insurers and United Kingdom exporters, it undertakes to give two years' notice of any such decision. The case for continuation of the facility beyond 1997 will be reviewed annually from 1995.

Given the significant change in the nature of this facility, the Government have also decided that they should, in principle, be available to other credit insurers who give support to our exporters.

I am pleased to be able to make this statement in response to the representations which have been made to me by the principal export credit insurers, exporting companies and their representative organisations. It further underlines the Government's commitment to promoting exports in order both to protect and provide jobs and reinforce our emergence from recession.

Director General of Fair Trading

Mr. Bates: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he intends to publish the report by the Director General of Fair Trading for the year 1992.

Mr. McLoughlin: The 19th annual report by the Director General of Fair Trading has been published today. It covers the period from 1 January 1992 to 31 December 1992. Copies of the report have been laid before Parliament.

Nuclear Industry

Mr. Bates: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will report on progress to implement the United Kindom's voluntary offer to provide the International Atomic Energy Agency under the terms of INFCIRC/415 with information on international transfers of nuclear materials and equipment.

Mr. Eggar: Information on licensed United Kingdom transfers of nuclear equipment to countries outside the European Community will be provided quarterly by my Department. Information on nuclear materials, licensed for export to a country outside the European Community, is being provided on behalf of the Twelve by the Commission of the European Community. We consider the provision of this information to the agency to be in the public interest as part of continuing efforts to strengthen IAEA safeguards.

Commercial confidentiality will be respected. The agency has undertaken to treat the information with the same level of confidentiality as that applied to information under a safeguards agreement.

Company Failures

Mr. Cox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the number of company insolvencies and liquidations in the Greater London area during each of the last three years.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No geographical information on creditors' voluntary liquidations is available. For compulsory liquidations and bankruptcy orders, the only geographical information is by the court in which the order was made. This is not a good basis for analysing business location, since many cases in England and Wales are dealt with in London regardless of the business's location, and work may be moved between courts according to differing workloads.

Information for businesses in Greater London could be obtained only by scrutinising individual case files, which would involve disproportionate cost.

Nuclear Facilities

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which nuclear facilities are incapable of meeting a dose constraint of 0·3 mSv of radiation per year for members of the public.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have been asked to reply.

None, although in some cases this could involve disproportionate cost. A constraint of 0·3 mSv of radiation per year for members of the public has recently been recommended as a design and planning target for new plant.

WALES

Strikes

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many work days were lost through strike action in Wales for each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The information requested is given in the table.

Stoppages of work due to industrial disputes

| Year | Days lost (thousands) |
|---|---|
| 1979 | 1,642 |
| 1980 | 2,918 |
| 1981 | 292 |
| 1982 | 283 |
| 1983 | 353 |
| 1984 | 3,527 |
| 1985 | 940 |
| 1986 | 78 |
| 1987 | 203 |
| 1988 | 116 |
| 1989 | 307 |
| 1990 | 84 |
| 1991 | 20 |
| 1992 | 10 |

Source: Employment Department.

NHS Staff

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will give details of the total number and whole-time equivalent number of health care assistants or health assistants or health care support workers employed wholly or primarily in nursing roles by the NHS in 1990, 1991 and 1992;

(2) if he will give details of the whole-time equivalent numbers of (a) agency and (b) bank nursing and midwifery staff employed in the national health service for each year from 1987 to 1992.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information is not held centrally in sufficient detail to enable breakdowns of nursing staff employed by health authorities and national health service trusts into occupational groups such as those requested.

Acorn Nursery, Cardiff

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales by what amount the Welsh Office subsidises the Acorn private nursery in Cardiff.

Mr. Redwood: The interdepartmental civil service nursery in Cardiff is currently managed under contract by Acorns Nurseries, which is not subsidised by the Welsh Office.

Foreign Investment

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures of the total number of jobs created by foreign investment in Wales by companies from (a) Japan, (b) Germany, (c) France and (d) the United States of America in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The total number of new and safeguarded jobs promised by inward investment projects recorded in the past five financial years is shown in the table. These figures are based on information provided by the companies at the time and take no account of subsequent developments.

As the figures show, the United States and Japan have been especially good generators of jobs in Wales.

| Year | Japan | Germany | France | USA |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1988-89 | 984 | 1,688 | 177 | 3,460 |
| 1989-90 | 1,926 | 291 | 630 | 3,718 |
| 1990-91 | 1,129 | 586 | 1,683 | 3,399 |
| 1991-92 | 2,264 | 1,559 | 587 | 3,052 |
| 1992-93 | 530 | 415 | 772 | 3,983 |
| TOTALS | 6,833 | 4,539 | 3,849 | 17,612 |

Forest Land

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the areas of forest land which (a) were offered for sale on 16 June 1989 and (b) have been put up for sale since that date, indicating which have been sold to the private sector and the receipts, by county, accruing to the Forestry Commission from such sales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the areas of forest land which were offered for sale on and after 16 June 1989 is not readily available and could be provided only at disporportionate cost. Lists giving details of the areas of forest land sold by the Forestry Commission from the start of the disposals programme in July 1981 to December 1992 are held in the Library of the House. Records of the receipts accruing from these sales are not held on a county basis.

Children

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to give one of his Ministers special responsibility for children.

Mr. Redwood: I have no such plans.

Hepatitis A

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Llwyd) of 7 June, Official Report, column 132, what was the total number of cases of hepatitis A recorded in Wales for each county in each year since 1979.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The number of cases of hepatitis A recorded in Wales for each county in each year since 1987 is given in the table. Information prior to 1987 is not available.

Prince of Wales Orthopaedic Hospital

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the South Glamorgan health authority in relation to the suspension of the director of the treatment centre at the Prince of Wales orthopaedic hospital, Rhydlafar in Cardiff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None. No further comment can be made while the issues are under consideration by the health authority.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Overseas Incapacity Provision

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has on incapacity provision abroad.

Mr. Scott: The Department collects information on foreign social security schemes, including the provision of incapacity benefits, from a wide range of sources. These include the following publications which are held in the Library:

"Social Security Programmes Throughout the World"
"Social Protection in the Member States of the Community"
"Mercer's International Benefit Guidelines"

Unemployment Register

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people were removed from the unemployment registers in each month during the last two years; and how many of them were removed from the registers (a) for making fraudulent claims, (b) for not genuinely seeking work and (c) unreasonably refusing a job offer.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have been asked to reply.

Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones, dated 24 June 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to him about the number of people removed from the unemployment register in the last two years for making fraudulent claims, not genuinely seeking work and unreasonably refusing a job offer. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

I would first like to apologise for the delay in replying to this question, which was due for reply on 10 May. The delay occurred because the question was originally tabled to the Welsh Office. I understand that, following receipt of the question, the Welsh Office contacted the Department of Social Security (DSS) who accepted responsibility for preparing a reply. The question was then transferred to the DSS. The Table Office last week contacted the DSS to enquire as to when the question had been passed to the Employment Department for reply. While the Employment Department officials have no record of being contacted by the DSS, we accept that the question is the responsibility of the Employment Service and have prepared the following reply.

On the question itself, it may help if I first explain that the monthly unemployment count includes all people claiming unemployment benefits, such as unemployment benefit (UB), income support (IS) or National Insurance credits, on the day of the count and who, on that day, were signed on as unemployed and available for work. Essentially, all people who sign as unemployed are counted irrespective of whether they are actually receiving benefit. A person ceases to be included in the count only if they choose not to continue signing for whatever reason.

Below are the quarterly figures for the number of people who, over the last two operational years, have withdrawn their claims to benefit or have started to declare part-time earnings, not previously disclosed, as a direct result of an investigation by an Employment Service Inspector. Monthly figures are not available.

| Quarterly Periods | Withdrawn/Modified claims |
|---|---|
| 1 April 1991 to 30 June 1991 | 12,451 |
| 1 July 1991 to 31 September 1991 | 13,351 |
| 1 October 1991 to 31 December 1991 | 12,528 |
| 1 January 1992 to 31 March 1992 | 14,691 |
| 1 April 1992 to 30 June 1992 | 17,747 |
| 1 July 1992 to 31 September 1992 | 18,555 |
| 1 October 1992 to 31 December 1992 | 15,150 |
| 1 January 1993 to 31 March 1993 | 12,259 |

Figures are not collected for the number of people who choose not to continue signing as a result of their benefit being disallowed for failing to actively seek work or for refusing employment. People who continue to sign while a disallowance is in force are included in the unemployment count.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

TRANSPORT

Bus Services

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the annual number of bus journeys by passengers in each year since 1985-86 (a) by region and (b) in Great Britain.

Mr. Freeman: The number of bus journeys made by passengers in Great Britain in each year since 1985-86 is given in the table. Regional data are not available. Area figures for local bus journeys in London, English metropolitan areas, English shire countries, Scotland and Wales are given in table 2.1 of "Bus and Coach Statistics 1991-92", a copy of which has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Bus passenger journeys in Great Britain

Million

| Year | Local journeys | Non-local journeys | All journeys |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1985-86 | 5,641 | 537 | 6,178 |
| 1986-87 | 5,341 | 572 | 5,913 |
| 1987-88 | 5,292 | 592 | 5,884 |
| 1988-89 | 5,215 | 563 | 5,778 |

| Year | Local journeys | Non-local journeys | All journeys |

| 1989-90 | 5,074 | 594 | 5,668 |
| 1990-91 | 4,852 | 619 | 5,471 |
| 1991-92 | 4,669 | [1]— | [1]— |

[1]— Passenger journey data for non-local bus services have not been collected since 1990-91.
Source: Statistical returns from PSV operators.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many successful applications have been made to the traffic commissioners to run a new bus service; and how many were for new routes in each year since 1986 (a) by region and (b) in Great Britain;

(2) how many changes in bus services were registered with the traffic commissioners in each year since 1986 (a) by region and (b) in Great Britain.

Mr. Freeman: The number of registrations of new bus services and variations to services in Great Britain since 1986 are set out in the table. Details are not available on a regional basis, but are given for each traffic area office. Figures on the number of new routes are not available.

Number of registrations and variations accepted by traffic area offices

| Year | Metropolitan | South East | East | West | South Wales | West Midlands | North West | North East | Scotland | Total |

[1] Figures for 1990-91 and 1991-92 are not directly comparable with earlier years in all cases. Traffic Area Offices were reorganised in 1991, involving some redistribution of work.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the grounds for his recent overturning of the traffic commissioner's decision to impose traffic regulation conditions on bus services in Sheffield.

Mr. Freeman: The traffic commissioner's decision was not overturned; it was varied. The reasons are set out in full in the decision letter which I will send to the hon. Member.

Trains (Bicycles and Luggage)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with British Rail on the arrangements for, and costs of, carrying bicycles and luggage by train (a) within the existing structure of the rail network and (b) after the introduction of franchising.

Mr. Freeman: None. At present this is a matter for British Rail. After privatisation, the Government believe that private sector operators will be keen to respond to passengers' demands, tailoring their services to make them more attractive and thus maximise fare revenue.

SCOTLAND

Kilgarth Tip

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to make a decision on applications before him in respect of Kilgarth tip, Coatbridge.

Mr. Lang: Submissions on the appeal by Glasgow district council against conditions imposed by Monklands district council on the waste disposal licence for Kilgarth tip, Coatbridge, were completed on 6 April. They are now under consideration and the decision will be made as soon as possible.

Access Funds

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the amounts to be allocated to each of the access funds for education in Scotland for 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 June 1993]: A total of £3·606 million will be available for the access funds for higher and further education institutions in Scotland for academic year 1993-94; individual allocations to the three funds have yet to be determined. In the academic year 1992-93, a total of some £3·3 million was disbursed in access funds to higher and further education institutions, including universities, in Scotland. The overall provision for 1993-94 thus represents an increase of about 9·6 per cent. over 1992-93.

With the change in funding arrangements for higher education under the Further and Higher Education Acts 1992, responsibility for the provision of access funds for students at previously Universities Funding Council-funded universities in Scotland has been transferred to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

Improper Expenditure (Surcharges)

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what statutory rights he has to surcharge members of (a) health boards, (b) health trusts, (c) local enterprise companies, (d) other non-departmental public bodies and (e) elected local authorities; what plans he has to make any change to the current situation, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 7 June 1993]: I have no statutory powers to surcharge members of health boards, national health service trusts or local enterprise companies. As far as local authorities are concerned the position is that, following recommendations made by the Commission for Local Authority Accounts in Scotland relating to unlawful or improper expenditure incurred by any local authority, I am empowered by section 104 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973 to consider the possibility of surcharging the person or persons concerned, a sum not exceeding the amount of unlawful or improper expenditure in question. Under the same section of that Act, I am empowered also to surcharge members of river purification boards, which are non-departmental public bodies. I have no statutory powers to surcharge members of non-departmental bodies. I have no plans to change the present arrangements in respect of any category of body.

DEFENCE

Maintenance Depots

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the maintenance depots which carry out (a) first and (b) second-line repair services; indicating (i) which of them use contractors and (ii) the number of inspectors at each depot to check contractors' work; and how many vehicles were sent back to contractors because of unsatisfactory work in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Aitken: First and second-line maintenance is normally undertaken by service or civilian personnel at the units where the vehicles or equipment are actually in use. For example, RAF first and second-line work is usually undertaken by service and civilian personnel at operational/training flying stations.

In the Army, work is also carried out by the Army Base Repair Organisation which provides facilities for second-line repair at:

26 District Workshop Stirling
27 District Workshop Warminster
31 District Workshop Catterick
36 District Workshop Colchester
43 District Workshop Aldershot
44 District Workshop Ashford
Eng Res Workshop Long Marston

Contractors are not employed for this work.

The Royal Navy does, however, use contractors for scheduled maintenance, which includes first and second-line repair, of Royal Navy helicopters and aircraft at:

RNAS Portland
RNAS Yeovilton
RNAS Culdrose
RNAS Roborough

Figures are not available for the number of vehicles, if any, sent back to contractors following first or second-line repair, or the number of staff whose duties include inspection of contractors work, and compilation of such data would involve disproportionate cost.

AWE Aldermaston

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the report produced by AWE Aldermaston on the radiological contamination of soil at Aldermaston court.

Mr. Aitken: Yes.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has issued his Department with the equivalent of an administration order to remove radiologically contaminated soil around manhole covers of the pipeline used by AWE Aldermaston to discharge radioactive waste to the Thames; if he will place in the Library the results of the soil analysis carried out by AWE Aldermaston; if he will publish a list of the landowners involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is aware of the low-level contamination found in small areas of soil immediately adjacent to a pipeline taking treated liquid effluent from AWE Aldermaston. Our plan for its removal will be submitted to them for approval.

Our discussions with the landowners are in confidence and it is not for us to make their identities public. I will write to the hon. Member about the soil analysis carried out by AWE Aldermaston.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) of 2 March, Official Report, column 111, if he will place a copy of the results of the inquiry into the incident at AWE Aldermaston on 8 December 1992 in the Library.

Mr. Aitken: The report of the inquiry into the incident at AWE on 8 December 1992 was written for management purposes and it would not be appropriate to make it available. However, a copy of the report has been passed to the Health and Safety Executive and I have written to the director general asking him to consider it carefully as part of their independent safety review, following which a report will be published.

Expenditure

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the annual defence expenditure as a percentage of gross domestic product from 1963.

Mr. Hanley: The information is as follows:

| | Per cent. |
|---|---|
| 1963-64 | 6·0 |
| 1964-65 | 5·7 |
| 1965-66 | 5·7 |

| | Per cent. |
|---|---|
| 1966-67 | 5·6 |
| 1967-68 | 5·5 |
| 1968-69 | 5·1 |
| 1969-70 | 4·7 |
| 1970-71 | 4·8 |
| 1971-72 | 4·9 |
| 1972-73 | 4·7 |
| 1973-74 | 4·7 |
| 1974-75 | 4·7 |
| 1975-76 | 4·9 |
| 1976-77 | 4·9 |
| 1977-78 | 4·6 |
| 1978-79 | 4·5 |
| 1979-80 | 4·6 |
| 1980-81 | 4·9 |
| 1981-82 | 5·0 |
| 1982-83 | 5·2 |
| 1983-84 | 5·2 |
| 1984-85 | 5·3 |
| 1985-86 | 5·1 |
| 1986-87 | 4·8 |
| 1987-88 | 4·4 |
| 1988-89 | 4·0 |
| 1989-90 | 4·0 |
| 1990-91 | 4·0 |
| 1991-92 | 4·2 |
| 1992-93 | 4·0 |

Notes:
1. Figures include exceptional expenditure on Falklands/Gulf conflict but exclude Gulf burden sharing contributions from other Governments.
2. Figures from 1978-79 take account of the technical changes in the treatment of Armed Forces and civilian pensions described in the 1992 Autumn Statement (Cm 2096) and other classification changes. It has not been possible to adjust figures for years before 1978-79 on to a fully consistent basis and comparisons with 1978-79 and later years may therefore be unreliable.
3. Figure for 1992-93 as at Spring Supplementary Estimate.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the level of the United Kingdom's defence spending in each of the last 10 years in (a) cash prices (b) constant prices and (c) as a proportion of gross national product.

Mr. Hanley: Detailed information on the level of the United Kingdom's defence spending between 1983-84 and 1992-93 was set out in the "Statistical Supplement to the 1992 Autumn Statement", Cm 2219.

Electronic Warfare Training

Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the contract for the provision of electronic warfare training to the RAF.

Mr. Hanley: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Stockton, North (Mr. Cook) on 14 June, Official Report, columns 479-80.

Hawk Aircraft

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what after-sales monitoring takes place to ensure that Hawk aircraft sold for training purposes are not converted to fighter aircraft.

Mr. Aitken: Consideration is always given to the use to which defence equipment might be put before an export licence is granted. Assurances as to the end use of the Hawk aircraft will also be sought prior to supply.

Arms Sales (Indonesia)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what after-sales monitoring takes place to ensure that arms sold to Indonesia are not used for repressive purposes.

Mr. Aitken: All exports of defence equipment require an export licence, and applications are carefully scrutinised case by case. We do not allow the export of equipment likely to be used indiscriminately for the repression of civilian population. We have no evidence that British equipment supplied to Indonesia in the past has been used for civilian repression.

Trooping the Colour

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost to public funds of the annual ceremony of Trooping the Colour.

Mr. Hanley: No additional costs are incurred for the horses or the men, as they are funded in any event. Other costs associated with Trooping the Colour include drycleaning of ceremonial uniforms, accommodation services including facilities, fuel and transport costs, rations and communication costs. Full details are not recorded separately however and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Medication

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the amount spent by each service on medication in the last financial year; and what are the arrangements for the payments for medication by service men (a) on active service and (b) not on active service.

Mr. Hanley: The amount spent on medication—drugs and dressings—for each service in financial year 1992-93 was as follows:

£ million

| Service | Amount |
|---|---|
| Royal Navy | 3·293 |
| Army | 12·190 |
| Royal Air Force | 5·615 |
| TOTAL | 21·098 |

Service personnel are entitled to free medication whether or not they are on active service.

Maralinga Nuclear Test Site

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 7 June, Official Report, column 130, if he will make a statement on the outcome of his meeting with Australian Ministers about the Maralinga nuclear test site in Australia.

Mr. Hanley: Australian and United Kingdom Ministers and officials met on 17 and 18 June to discuss the question of further clean-up of the former British nuclear weapon test sites in Australia. A proposal has been developed which Australian Ministers believe provides the basis for settling outstanding Australian claims against Britain. The solution envisages an ex gratia payment by the United Kingdom to the Australian Government in full and final settlement of their claims. The proposal is to be considered by the Australian Cabinet.

Army Personnel Centre

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answers to the hon. Member for Stockport (Ms. Coffey) of 7 June, Official Report, column 12, how many married quarters there are in the Stockport and Glasgow areas for any personnel located in either area, for the proposed new Army personnel centre.

Mr. Hanley: It has been estimated that five existing married quarters in the Stockport area and 17 in the Glasgow area could be made available for military personnel if the new centre were established at either location.

Mine Clearing

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contribution has been made by the United Kingdom to mine-clearing operations overseas in terms of financial costs and other forms of support.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I have been asked to reply.

Since April 1991 the ODA has funded the following humanitarian mine clearance operations:

| Country and Project | 1991-92 £ | 1992-93 £ | 1993-94[1] £ |
|---|---|---|---|
| Afghanistan Mine Clearance | — | 188,900 | 290,631 |
| Afghanistan Minefield surveying planning and management; mine awarness; clearance training; clearance | — | 1,000,000 | 500,000 |
| Cambodia Mine Clearance, training and mine awareness programme | 60,000 | 199,886 | 232,520 |
| Cambodia Public awareness (radio programmes) | — | 6,451 | — |
| Somalia Mine clearance training; clearance management; mine awareness in the north-west | 300,000 | 373,540 | — |
| | 360,000 | 1,768,777 | 1,023,151 |

[1] To date.

In addition, an allocation of £710,000 has recently been agreed for a project to establish and monitor three locally trained demining teams in the Zambezia province of Mozambique. Once the project has been formally agreed by the peace commission in Mozambique the Halo Trust will implement it.

Apart from these humanitarian operations, United Kingdom military personnel are providing training in mine clearance as part of the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia, and advice to the Government of Kuwait on mine clearance operations.

The European Community also supports humanitarian mine clearance operations in for instance Afghanistan and northern Iraq. Part of the funding for such operations is borne by the United Kingdom.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Contract and Estate Law

Mr. McFall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) what expressions of concern he has received (a) from small businesses and (b) from others about the current law of privity of contract and estate in England and Wales;

(2) what representations he has received in support of the reform of privity of contract and estate.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor has received a considerable number of expressions of concern about the law in this area, the majority from small businesses and organisations representing their interests; but there have also been representations from landlords and property investors. It would not be practicable to list the representations that have been received. The Lord Chancellor is well aware of the respective interests of both tenants and landlords, and has already announced the Government's decision to implement the Law Commission's recommendations in this area for future leases.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Sunday Trading

Sir George Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what account will be taken, in any reform of the law on Sunday trading, of public demand for all shops to be free to open for some period during the day on Sundays.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We intend to offer Parliament a choice between the four main options for reform of Sunday trading law. Hon. Members will no doubt take public opinion into account before choosing between these options.

Immigration

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the total number of non-United Kingdom nationals admitted for settlement in the United Kingdom in each year since 1982, indicating whether these originated in (a) the new Commonwealth, (b) the Republic of Ireland, (c) eastern Europe and (d) elsewhere; and if he will give an estimate of what proportion of this total was of working age.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The numbers of persons accepted for settlement in the United Kingdom, by nationality, are published in table 14 of the Home Office Command Paper "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom 1990" (Cm 1571) for the years 1982-89 and in table 1 of Home Office Statistical Bulletin Issue 14/93 "Control of Immigration: Statistics—Third and Fourth Quarters and Year 1992" for 1990-92. Copies of both these publications are in the Library. These figures do not include citizens of the Republic of Ireland, who are generally able to move freely within the common travel area.

The readily available information on age is for non-EC nationals accepted for settlement on removal of the time limit on their stay (ie subsequent to initial admission for a limited period) in 1992. These acceptances comprised the large majority of total settlement in 1992 (88 per cent.). Around 80 per cent. were aged between 16 and 60.

New Age Travellers

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice he is giving local authorities to assist them in coping with large-scale acts of trespass on local authority or private land by new age travellers this summer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In 1991 we issued a leaflet giving general guidance to land owners, including local authorities, relating to trespass on land and we encourage all local authorities to liaise closely with the police if they suspect that any land in their areas is vulnerable to mass trespass. Officials have met representatives of the Malvern Hills district council and Salisbury district council to discuss their applications to the Home Secretary for orders under section 13 of the Public Order Act 1986.

Custody Officers

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the number of physical attacks against custody officers within each police force area in England and Wales in each year since 1985.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Illegal Employment Prosecutions

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been initiated in the last five years for the illegal employment of non-EC persons who do not possess a work permit.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Although it is an offence to take work in breach of conditions of stay, employers do not commit an offence simply by virtue of employing such people.

Wolds Remand Centre

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many inmates were involved in the incident at the Wolds remand centre on 11 and 12 June; how many staff were on duty at the time and how many extra staff were called in; what is the value of the damage done by inmates during the course of the incident; for what reason the emergency services were called; and if he will call for a detailed inquiry.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange a reply.

Letter from Mr. D. Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 24 June 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking about an incident at the Wolds Remand Prison on 11th and 12th June.

49 prisoners, all in one unit, refused to return to their cells at lock-up on 11 June. 23 staff were on duty at the time. Contingency plans were put into operation, but for obvious reasons it is our policy not to give operational details of them for any establishment. It is standard procedure for emergency services to be alerted to an incident. The unit was quiet by 0015 and complete control was secured by 0135. The value of the damage caused by prisoners is put at £8,000. The Home Office controller, based at Wolds, monitors the contractor's performance and will provide a full report; the incident on 11 June does not merit a separate inquiry.

TRANSPORT

New Age Travellers' Vehicles

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 3 July 1992, Official Report, column 726, what recommendations the vehicle inspectorate and the police forces have received underlying the policy of prohibiting from road use vehicles (a) not carrying tax discs or (b) which are unroadworthy; and if he will make a statement on any extra measures he is taking in respect of expected movements of new age travellers in the coming summer.

Mr. Key: The vehicle inspectorate normally imposes an immediate prohibition on vehicles which are in a dangerous condition. This prevents or restricts their use on the road until the defect has been rectified. Where there is a lesser defect, it may impose a delayed prohibition, which comes into effect only if the defect has not been rectified within a specified time limit. The police can only impose immediate prohibitions. Policy on prohibitions is a matter for chief constables, but generally the police use the same criteria as the vehicle inspectorate in deciding whether a defect is serious enough to merit an immediate prohibition. There are no powers for either the police or the vehicle inspectorate to prohibit vehicles not displaying valid tax discs.

Most of the vehicle inspectorate enforcement resources are used to ensure that lorries, buses and coaches are safe, although some private vehicles are checked with police co-operation. No extra measures by the vehicle inspectorate are planned at present in respect of new age travellers. The deployment of police resources is a matter for chief constables.

However, vehicles not displaying valid tax discs may be stopped by the police and the keepers prosecuted/fined. The maximum penalty is £1,000 or five times the annual rate of duty whichever is the greatest. Furthermore, a valid tax disc cannot be obtained unless the keeper is in possession of a valid roadworthiness test certificate.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria he will use to judge the effectiveness and value for money of his rail privatisation proposals.

Mr. Freeman: Our proposals are intended to enable the railways to provide a higher quality of service, with greater responsiveness to customers' needs, and to offer better value for money to the public who travel by rail.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements he has made to ensure that business travellers will still be able to use rail warrants to pay for tickets after the franchising of rail passenger services.

Mr. Freeman: Future participation in warrant schemes will be a matter for negotiation with operators. Arrangements to facilitate this are still under discussion.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which authority will become responsible, under his proposals for the privatisation of BR, for handling telephone inquiries for the inquiry bureaux currently operated by British Rail; and what steps he is taking to ensure that they continue to provide information for the whole of the national rail network.

Mr. Freeman: The provision of co-ordinated passenger information over the telephone is still under discussion. If necessary, it will be possible to impose suitable obligations through licences or franchise agreements.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that rail franchise operators will continue to accept Inter-Rail and Rail Europe Senior railcards after privatisation of British Rail.

Mr. Freeman: Franchisees will be required to honour existing tickets. Future participation in international ticketing offers will be a matter for commercial negotiation, as it is now for British Rail, within joint industry arrangements as necessary.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the first rail passenger franchises to be offered to the private sector; and which services these will be.

Mr. Freeman: I expect the first franchises to be offered to the private sector in 1994. These are likely to be the seven service groupings announced in February. The Victoria-Gatwick express is in the vanguard of the restructuring process and is expected to be offered to the private sector ahead of other services.

Rail Services (East Anglia)

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to seek discussions with British Rail over changes in levels of services announced in Norfolk and Suffolk; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: None. British Rail must be free to match service levels to demand. I understand that the changes in the winter Sunday services reflect the high cost of providing these lightly-used services, many of which cater for a largely seasonal trade.

Disabled Rail Travellers

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to place a duty on the Rail Regulator to consult the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee with the view of drawing up a national code of practice for disabled rail travellers.

Mr. Freeman: It is our intention to bring forward an amendment to the Railways Bill which places such a duty on the Regulator.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations about the channel tunnel rail link his Department has received since 23 March from (a) the county of Kent and (b) the borough of Ashford.

Mr. Freeman: Until 24 June, 650 from the county of Kent and from Kent Members of Parliament, including 384 from Ashford postal addresses and from the hon. Member for Ashford. A separate total of representations from within the borough boundaries is not readily available.

Railway Rolling Stock

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had with British Rail about their proposed order for rolling stock allowed for in the lease finance announced in last October's financial statement.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail is currently considering what rolling stock to acquire on lease using the £150 million facility made available in last year's autumn statement. The choice between the two options—dual-voltage Networkers for Network SouthEast or IC225s for the west coast main line—is entirely a matter for British Rail in the light of negotiations with suppliers and lessors. I expect a decision in the summer.

I will support further leasing deals provided that they comply with the Treasury's guidelines.

EDUCATION

Environmental Policy

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is his Department's policy on the purchase and use of (a) recycled paper, (b) low-energy light bulbs, (c) tropical hardwoods, (d) peat and (e) cars with catalytic converters.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department's policy is to take full account of the environmental implications of all decisions involving the purchase and use of resources. An environmental policy statement has been issued to all staff which reaffirms our commitment to increase the use of recycled paper, reduce and eventually eliminate the use of non-renewable resources, and to reduce the use of hazardous substances.

Further and Higher Education

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what statistics he has on the percentage of students who take up further and higher education in each EC country.

Mr. Boswell: In 1992-93 some 71 per cent. of 16-year-olds and 55 per cent. of 17-year-olds participated in full-time education in schools, sixth-form colleges and further education colleges in England. In the same year the age participation index in Great Britain (defined as the number of young home initial entrants to higher education expressed as a percentage of the averaged 18 to 19-year-old population) was some 28 per cent. Further details are shown in tables 17 and 21 of the Departmental Report, CM 2210. Comparisons with certain EC countries are shown on pages 16 and 17 of "Education Statistics for the United Kingdom", 1992 edition, a copy of which is in the Library.

Public Appointments

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the names, occupations and current employers of those who currently hold positions in each public body to which he makes appointments; if he will make a statement on the considerations taken into account when making such appointments; and if he will list details of the posts and salaries or allowances payable which have changed since the publication of "Public Bodies 1992".

Mr. Boswell: The names of those who have been appointed to the Department's public bodies are given in the table, together with details of changes as they apply to posts, salaries or allowances since publication of "Public Bodies 1992". Information relating to occupations and current employers of appointees could be supplied only at disproportionate cost, but we are satisfied that the members of our public bodies represent an appropriately wide range of backgrounds and are appointed on the basis of their aptitude, merit and suitability.

The following public bodies have assumed their functions since 1 April 1992:
The Higher Education Funding Council, England (HEFCE)
The Further Education Funding Council (England) (FEFC)

Truancy

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when the report of the investigation into levels of truancy in English secondary schools, which was carried out by the University of North London on commission from his Department, will be published.

Mr. Forth: Advance copies of the report have been published today. A copy is being placed in the Library.

WALES

Rail Rover Tickets

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the loss to Welsh tourism if the Freedom of Wales rail rover ticket were not continued by the rail passenger franchise operators planned for the principality.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I see no reason why Welsh tourism should suffer any loss. British Rail operates the existing scheme for sound commercial reasons and it will be in the best interests of a franchise to continue similar arrangements.

Dental Health

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to prohibit the manufacturers of fruit drinks with a high dental caries predisposition to market their products through free promotions in schools.

Mr. Redwood: My Department has no powers to do so. The matter is primarily one for individual schools.

Sheep Scab

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures showing the monthly reported incidents of sheep scab in Wales in each year since 1987.

Mr. Redwood: The number of reported incidents of sheep scab in Wales for each month since 1987 is as follows:

Sheep Scab confirmed cases in Wales 1987-1992

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

University of Wales

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion of the Government's science budget was allocated to each constituent college of the university of Wales for each year since 1988; and what is the projected figure for 1993-94.

Mr. Waldegrave: The approximate proportion of the science budget allocated to the colleges of the University of Wales is shown in the table below for the financial years 1988-89 to 1992-93. This includes expenditure on research grants, studentships and fellowships. Projected figures for 1993-94 are not available as many grants are made in responsive mode and are therefore dependent on project proposals submitted.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Chartered Association of Certified Accountants

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what powers he has to investigate the balloting for elections for the council of the Chartered Association of Certified Accountants.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have no such powers.

Auditing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the cost savings to small businesses as a result of a partial abolition of small company audits and a requirement to produce a compilation report by accountants.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the consultative document issued by my Department in April, entitled "Audit and Accounting Requirements for Very Small Companies", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has for legislation under which auditing firms would be prevented from writing up board minutes of their audit clients and then auditing the same.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Under the Companies Act 1989, a person who is an officer or employee of a company—or a partner or employee of such a person—is prohibited from being appointed as auditor of the company. Moreover, under the Act the Secretary of State may recognise supervisory bodies for auditors only if the body appears to him to have adequate rules and practices designed to ensure that company audit work is conducted properly and with integrity, and that persons are not appointed as company auditors in circumstances in which they have an interest likely to conflict with the proper conduct of the audit.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has for legislation to require the auditors of public limited companies to publish information about their affairs.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: An auditor which is a company or an unregistered company within the meaning of the Companies Act 1985 is already subject to the disclosure requirements of that Act. I have no plans to extend those requirements to unincorporated bodies, save for those partnerships which would be subject to the Partnerships and Unlimited Companies (Accounts) Regulations 1993, a draft of which was laid before the House on 21 June.

Supervisory Bodies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he has taken to increase the public accountability of the bodies authorised to act as recognised supervisory bodies under the Companies Act 1989.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reports for the year to 30 September 1992 by the five Recognised supervisory bodies, which were prepared and submitted to me under section 37 of the Companies Act 1989, and copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will be reviewing the operation of the recognised supervisory bodies.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department will be reviewing later this year the operation of the recognised supervisory bodies procedures for monitoring compliance by their members with their rules.

Auditing Practices Board

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations his Department has made to the Auditing Practices Board on the contents of the proposed going concern standard.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department wrote to the Auditing Practices Board on 21 May with its comments on a draft of the proposed statement of auditing standards on going concern.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what steps he has taken to ensure that the employing organisations of the members of the Auditing Practices Board do not exercise influence over its proceedings;

(2) what plans he has to seek views on the membership of the Auditing Practices Board from (a) the Commission for Racial Equality and (b) the Equal Opportunities Commission.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The constitution and procedures of the Auditing Practices Board are matters for the Consultative Committee of Accountancy Bodies.

Accounting Standards Board

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what will be the cost of seconding his Department's head of accounting and auditing division, Mr. M. Butcher, to the Accounting Standards Board.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The secondment is expected to last for about one year. The Department has agreed to meet salary and salary-related costs for up to three months of this period. On the basis and at current salary levels the direct cost to DTI will not exceed £15,000.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the total sum to date that his Department has collected from the 15 per cent. audit fees in the assets of bankruptcy from BCCI; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: BCCI is subject to compulsory liquidation proceedings and the total sum collected by the Department from the Secretary of State fee (previously known as the audit fee) since 1991 is £751,502. The Department cannot separately identify how much of this was collected at the 15 per cent. rate.

The Secretary of State fee scales were amended on 14 January 1992 which has the effect of reducing the fee chargeable on amounts over £20 million.

The total Secretary of State fee collected from all compulsory liquidations in 1992-93 was £4,870,885. Fees are used to defray the costs of the Insolvency Service.

Pit Closures

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been achieved in implementing the £200 million regeneration package for pit closure areas.

Mr. Sainsbury: Since October Lord Walker has been working with Government Departments, English Estates, British Coal Enterprise, training and enterprise councils and local bodies to determine how best the package could be used. The framework of regeneration measures announced in October and enhanced in the Government's White Paper "The Prospects for Coal" (Cm 2235) has now been put in place in all areas affected by pit closures.

This is the start of the process of regeneration. In all areas local bodies are working together to ensure that these measures lead to new employment.

Measures announced so far for each area are:

NORTH EAST

English Estates

£16 million for the provision of industrial and commercial sites.

TECs

An additional £9·887 million budget allocation for TECs in coalfield areas.

Coalfield Areas Fund

£250k for regeneration projects in Easington.

Enterprise Zone

A proposed Enterprise Zone in the vicinity of Easington.

Tyne and Wear Development Corporation

£4 million for the TWDC.

YORKSHIRE AND HUMBERSIDE

English Estates

£24 million for the provision of industrial and commercial sites.

Plans announced:

Barnsley—192,000 sq ft of additional factory/workshop space and 7·5 acres of land for further industrial schemes.

Doncaster—110,000 sq ft of factories and workshops.

Rotherham—30,000 sq ft of factories.

TECS

An additional £15·258 million budget allocation for TECS in coalfield areas.

Coalfield Areas Fund

Over £275k for regeneration projects.

Enterprise Zone

A proposed Enterprise Zone in the vicinity of the Dearne Valley.

AA Status

Barnsley, Doncaster to be upgraded to Development Areas in new Assisted Areas map.

EAST MIDLANDS

English Estates

£21 million for the provision of industrial and commercial sites.

Plans announced:
The provision of 93,000 sq ft of new factory space.

TECS
An additional £16·774 million budget allocation for TECS in coalfield areas.

Robin Hood Line
£6·5 million to help extend the Robin Hood Line from Newstead to Mansfield.

Coalfield Areas Fund
£1·4 million for regeneration projects in Nottinghamshire and Derbyshire.

East Midlands Regional Development Organisation
£250k for the new East Midlands Regional Development Organisation.

Enterprise Zone
A proposed Enterprise Zone in the Vicinity of Mansfield.

AA Status
Mansfield to become an Assisted Area in new AA map.

Regional Enterprise Grants
Regional Enterprise Grants extended to specific wards in coalfield areas.

WEST MIDLANDS

English Estates
£7 million for the provision of industrial and commercial sites.
Plans announced:
77,500 sq ft of new factory space and the acquisition of a 26 acre site.

TECS
An additional £4·793 million budget allocation for TECS in coalfield areas.

Coalfield Areas Fund
£826k for regeneration projects in Stoke.

Regional Enterprise Grants
Regional Enterprise Grants extended to specific wards in the Trentham area.

NORTH WEST

English Estates
£4 million for the provision of industrial and commercial sites.
Plans announced:
88,000 sq ft of new factory space and acquisition of 10 acres of land.

TECS
An additional £2·178 million budget allocation for TECs in coalfield areas announced.

Coalfield Areas Fund
£270k for regeneration projects.

BRITISH COAL ENTERPRISE
Through the provision of Job Shops and investment in workspace for small businesses, British Coal Enterprise is providing counselling for all miners made redundant and backing young and growing companies across all affected areas.

Gas (Exempt Supplies) Act

Mr. Duncan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to lay an order to bring into force the Gas (Exempt Supplies) Act 1993; and if he will consider streamlining the handling of authorisations for the supply of propane and butane in the interim period.

Mr. Eggar: I expect to bring the Act into force by mid-1994. In the meantime when existing authorisations for the supply of propane and butane expire they will be extended by the Director General of Gas Supply. As regards new authorisations, applicants will simply have to demonstrate that they:

(a) had given the appropriate notice under the Pipelines Act 1962;
(b) had systems which had been installed/inspected by a company or individual belonging to the LP Gas Association or another properly qualified engineer;
(c) operated, or planned to operate when supply commenced, either directly or via an agency agreement, an arrangement whereby immediate action to prevent reported gas escapes can be initiated by telephone on a 24 hour basis; and
(d) had secured, or planned to secure when supply commenced, rights of entry to premises supplied in order to deal with gas escapes or other damages arising from the supply of gas to the premises.

I am reviewing the Gas (Authorisation Application) Regulations 1986 and will revise them as necessary to reflect the reduced information requirements in support of applications for LPG supply authorisations.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 9 June, Official Report, column 254, if he will provide a regional breakdown of projects, spending and jobs created for each year.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 21 June 1993]: On re-examination of our computer records we have discovered that the information given in our earlier reply about the number of projects supported was incorrect. The figure should have been 378 and not 651 as previously stated. The amount of grant paid and the number of jobs, were not affected.

A breakdown of the information given in the earlier reply by region and for each year from 1987-88 is as follows:

| Region | 1987-88 to 1989-90 | | | 1990-91 to June 1993 | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Number of projects | Amount of assistance £ million | Number of jobs | Number of projects | Amount of assistance £ million | Number of jobs |
| East Midlands | 7 | 0·7 | 100 | 20 | 2·7 | 534 |
| North East | 49 | 3·7 | 1,401 | 104 | 50·3 | 5,738 |
| North West | 29 | 2·4 | 673 | 70 | 11·1 | 2,358 |
| South West | 11 | 2·9 | 395 | 9 | 2·3 | 489 |
| West Midlands | 3 | 0·1 | 111 | 27 | 6·9 | 2,636 |
| Yorkshire and Humberside | 19 | 1·7 | 371 | 32 | 11·0 | 3,463 |

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the criteria submitted by his Department to the European Commission in connection with the submission of the assisted areas map to the European Commission on 15 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 23 June 1993]: In order not to prejudice negotiation with the European Commission, no information on the proposed assisted areas map will be released until it has been agreed with the Commission.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he had with local authorities in (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Northern Ireland and (d) Scottish district and regional council[illegible]ior to the submission of the assisted areas map to the European Commission on 15 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 23 June 1993]: Ministerial colleagues in Scotland, Wales and my own Department and I myself have met a number of delegations from local authorities during the assisted areas map review. As the review is of assisted areas in Great Britain, there have been no discussions with local authorities from Northern Ireland.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in establishing police forces in Somalia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: During the first months of 1993, UNOSOM and UNITAF provided assistance for the establishment of auxiliary police forces in various parts of Somalia including Mogadishu, Baidoa, Bardera, Belet Huen and Kismayo. These forces, numbering 5,000 officers, were reconstituted as the Somalia Police Force on 4 May 1993. Local police forces also operate in Hargeisa and Bossaso.

UNOSOM II is now preparing a plan for the establishment of police, prison and judicial systems throughout Somalia. The Overseas Development Administration's overseas police adviser will visit Somalia in July to determine how best Her Majesty's Government can support the development of police forces in the north-west.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of the Government's and EC's programmes approved within the past year geared to the reconstruction of Somali society.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Our bilateral emergency relief assistance has supported the reopening of schools, provision of basic health, water and sanitation services, supply of seeds and tools for farmers and help for the reintegration of displaced persons. We continue to explore with relief agencies the potential for further support for rehabilitation activities and have offered funds and technical expertise for project identification missions.

EC assistance has supported a de-mining programme and the provision of veterinary services and water supplies. A joint EC/member states team plans to visit Somalia next month to identify potential areas for EC rehabilitation assistance to be funded from the special initiative for Africa, agreed at the 25 May Development Council.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment has been made by (a) his Department and (b) the EC of the adequacy of their response to the Somali crisis since the beginning of 1992.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Her Majesty's Government and the European Commission were among the first to respond to the crisis in Somalia with the provision of food and non-food emergency assistance. Since January 1992 British bilateral humanitarian aid commitments have totalled over £27 million. EC commitments have totalled almost £100 million of which the United Kingdom share is £16·68 million.

The capacity of all aid agencies to operate effectively continues to be constrained by prevailing security conditions. My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development led an EC troika of Development Ministers in September 1992 to assess needs and has seconded an ODA official to the office of the United Nations Secretary-General's special representative to Somalia, Admiral Howe, to help plan the process of recovery and to provide advice on how we might assist. A joint EC/member states team plans to visit next month to assess the future EC aid programme.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what dates over the last five years (a) the World Health Organisation, (b) the Food and Agricultural Organisation and (c) UNICEF have been operating in Somalia; and what are their current activities.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Until 1991 WHO, FAO and UNICEF operated continuously in Somalia. From 1991 to date their provision of support for relief operations in Somalia has continued, although at various stages international staff have been withdrawn.

UNICEF activities include the provision of primary health care, food for mothers and children and restoration of water supplies. FAO supports the provision of emergency seeds, veterinary services and the re-equipping of farmers and fishermen. WHO is supporting the establishment of an epidemiological surveillance system, control of communicable diseases and the supply of essential drugs.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the policy of (a) UNITAF and (b) UNOSOM 2 in respect of disarming the warring factions in Somalia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Broadly, UNITAF carried out disarmament when it was considered essential to ensure the delivery of humanitarian aid. The mandate for UNOSOM II granted by UNSCR 814 emphasised the crucial importance of disarmament and the urgent need to build on the efforts of UNITAF. This process has already begun.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the United Nations about its civil reconstruction activities in Somalia since the UNITAF deployment.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have had frequent contact with the United Nations over the issue of civil reconstruction, most recently during the visit to New York earlier this month by my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development. We have also participated in the several UN-sponsored conferences that covered the issue, including the meeting in Nairobi on 22 June.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Rail Rover Tickets

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made of the loss of income to the tourist industry which would result if rail rover tickets were not continued by private rail franchise operators.

Mr. Sproat: No such assessment has been made.

British Rail (Tour Ticketing)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what discussions he has held with representatives of the tourist industry about the impact of the loss of British Rail's present inclusive tour ticketing arrangements if these were not continued by private sector rail franchise operators.

Mr. Sproat: I am fully aware of the concerns of representatives of the tourism industry. On Monday 21 June I met the Council for Travel and Tourism, and noted its concerns regarding the continuation of tour ticketing arrangements. I am, however, confident that as these tickets are very popular with passengers the private sector will be keen to retain these products.

Public Bodies

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the names, occupations and current employers of those who currently hold positions in each public body to which he makes appointments; if he will make a statement on the considerations taken into account when making such appointments; and if he will list details of the posts and salaries or allowances payable which have changed since the publication of "Public Bodies 1992".

Mr. Sproat: The Department of National Heritage does not currently hold a central list containing the occupation, current employers and remuneration of public appointees and to assemble this information would involve disproportionate cost. Careful consideration is given to the specific skills and experience required for each appointment and to the personal qualities and background of the appointee.

Royal Palaces

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his reply of 25 May, Official Report, columns 482-83, if he will give a breakdown of (a) the categories of expenditure at each of the occupied royal palaces and (b) the amount spent on utilities, wages and other costs.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 16 June 1993]: The figures for property services in 1992-93, broken down by palace where this information is kept separately, are as shown. The breakdown also shows expenditure on running costs (not broken down by palace), utilities and fire precautions.

Breakdown of Expenditure at each of the occupied Royal Palaces in 1992-93 in £000s

HEALTH

NHS Budget

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the budget for the national health service in London in each year from 1991-92 to 1994-95 as a percentage of the total NHS budget.

Mr. Sackville: There are no budgets for most elements of family health services expenditure, which is primarily demanded and funded accordingly. Final cash limits (budgets) for district health authorities are set by regional health authorities and are not available centrally.

Isobutyl Nitrite

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will investigate the extent of abuse of isobutyl nitrite among school children; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The Department funds the St. George's hospital medical school to produce annual reports on trends in deaths from volatile substance abuse, which includes deaths associated with abuse of alkyl nitrites. Copies of the latest report will be placed in the Library.

Social Work Training

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the future of social work training.

Mr. Bowis: On 21 June my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced the appointment of a new chairman of the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work (CCETSW), the body responsible for the promotion and regulation of social work training. At the same time, we published the Government response to a recent policy and financial management review of CCETSW, which emphasised that the main task of the central council must be to ensure that social services training of vocational, professional and post-qualifying levels properly equips staff to meet the needs of the 1990s. Copies of the report of the review and the Government's response will be placed in the Library.

NHS Meetings (Public Admission)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what circumstances an NHS authority or trust can exclude members of the public from its meetings; what procedure has to be followed to provide for such exclusion and for publicising decisions affecting the public made at closed meetings; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The national health service should be as open as possible to patients and others who rely upon its services. The meetings of NHS authorities are governed by the Public Bodies (Admission to Meetings) Act 1960. The meetings of NHS trusts are governed by the NHS and Community Care Act 1990. All decisions on the level and and manner of providing health services should be made public, and decisions about significant changes are subject to formal consultation procedures.

Post-operative Care

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to introduce charges for post-operative care in the NHS; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Liverpool Women's Hospital

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the reorganisation of the women's hospital in Liverpool.

Mr. Sackville: Liverpool health authority approved proposals for the provision of a new women's hospital in 1991, following a positive response to public consultation. Construction of the new women's hospital is well under way and it will be operational in spring 1995. The hon. Member may wish to contact Ms J. Greensmith, chairman of Liverpool Obstetric and Gynaecology Services National Health Service Trust, for more details.

Matrons

Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will now urgently reintroduce into all national health service hospitals, the title and traditional job specification of matron in order to improve the quality of nursing supervision.

Mr. Sackville: There remains a key professional leadership role for a senior nurse in all national health service hospitals. The exact titles and job specifications of senior nurses are best decided locally. The title "matron" may be used if this is felt to be appropriate by local managers.

Every national health service trust is required to have a senior nurse as an executive director.

UKCC for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visitors

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations she has received in the last five years from (a) nurses and (b) patients concerned with decisions made by the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visitors professional conduct committee.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 15 June 1993]: Two from patients' relatives since September 1991. Records prior to that date are not comprehensive.

SCOTLAND

Caledonian MacBrayne

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the contributions made from EC funds to the development of termini serving the Caledonian MacBrayne network in each of the past 10 years, stating existing ownership in each case.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 23 June 1993]: The information is not readily available in the format requested. The total contribution made from EC funds to the development of termini serving the Caledonian MacBrayne network during the past 10 years is given in the following table:

| Piers/Linkspans | Year of award | EC allocation £ | Total EC grant paid £ |
|---|---|---|---|
| Tobermory pier | 1985 | 110,000 | 110,000 |
| Gourock pier | 1985 | 175,000 | 158,351 |

| Brodick passenger terminal building | 1993 | 120,000 | — |
| Brodick berthing facility | 1993 | 120,000 | 36,488 |
| Kennacraig berthing facility | 1993 | 120,000 | — |

Note: All these facilities are owned by Caledonian MacBrayne.

Public Appointments

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the names, occupations and current employers of those who currently hold positions in each public body to which he makes appointments; if he will make a statement on the considerations taken into account when making such appointments; and if he will list details of the posts and salaries or allowances payable which have changed since the publication of "Public Bodies 1992".

Miss Widdecombe: In view of the number of appointments made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for employment how many applications have been made since 1979 to industrial tribunals for interim relief; how many applications were successful; and how many were rejected.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 23 June 1993]: I regret that figures for the years 1979 to 1991 are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The provisional figures for the period 1 April 1992 to 31 March 1993 are as follows:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| Registered applications | 94 |
| Successful cases | 2 |
| Rejected cases | 32 |
| Settled withdrawn | 24 |
| Carried forward changed jurisdiction | 36 |

PRIME MINISTER

Political Parties (Funding)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if he will introduce legislation to require political parties that have received moneys from a source that has been shown to be criminal to return such funds to the appropriate body.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 21 June 1993]: I have no plans to do so.

EMPLOYMENT

Vocational Training Schemes

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps should be taken by individuals wishing to claim unemployment benefit while undertaking a nationally recognised vocational training scheme following the announcement in the Budget statement of 16 March.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. M. Fogden to Mr. Tim Devlin, dated 25 June 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to him about what steps should be taken by individuals wishing to claim unemployment benefit whilse undertaking a nationally recognised vocational training scheme following the announcement in the Budget statement of 16th March. This is something that falls within the responsibilities he has delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

For Training for Work (TFW) participants, allowances are paid at the benefit level previously in payment but with an addition of £10 Premium. In cases where there is no entitlement to benefit or benefit has ceased, the £10 Premium only is payable. Information on joining TFW is available from all Employment Service local offices.

For clients on Learning For Work (LfW), the situation will be slightly different with allowances at the benefit level previously in payment but with no Premium being payable. Where there is no entitlement to benefit or benefit has ceased, no allowance will be payable. The programme will be starting on 1 September 1993 in England and Wales and on 16 August 1993 in Scotland. Information on joining LfW will be available from Employment Service local offices.

Unemployment benefit offers support whilst a person is unemployed and seeking work; it is not intended as support for courses of vocational training or study. In order to receive unemployment benefit, people undertaking any type of training must remain available for and be actively seeking work, and be willing to rearrange their study, if necessary to evenings and weekends, to enable them to take up an opportunity of employment. Should this not be possible they would have to abandon the course in favour of employment. They must also continue to take reasonable steps to seek work. Participating in a course of vocational training may be regarded as one reasonable step but they would also be expected to take additional steps.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Environmental Policy

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's policy on the purchase and use of (a) recycled paper, (b) low-energy light bulbs, (c) tropical hardwoods, (d) peat and (e) cars with catalytic converters.

Mr. Goodlad: Within the overall objective of obtaining value for money, the policy of both diplomatic and aid wings of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on the purchase of the items listed is:

(a) to purchase recycled paper wherever cost-effective and where it meets operational requirements;

(b) to replace standard light bulbs with high-efficiency, low-energy alternatives throughout all office accommodation and to ensure that all new and refurbished buildings are provided with such lighting;

(c) to ensure that, as far as possible, all timber purchased is from sustainable sources, particularly in relation to teak and mahogany. No rosewood is used;

(d) no peat or peat-based products are purchased. Advice for missions overseas is that loam-based composts should be used for containered plants;

(e) to provide overseas posts and aid projects with petrol engined vehicles fitted with catalytic converters wherever unleaded fuel is readily available. The small UK fleet is exclusively diesel-engined.

Royal Family

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 7 June, Official Report, columns 82-83, what was the cost to the Department of each of the overseas visits by members of the royal family other than the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh during the financial year 1992-93.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the answer that I gave on 24 June at col. 239.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which officials of his Department attended the meeting on THORP, held at 1 Parliament street, London on 15 June.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None.

Public Appointments

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the names, occupations and current employers of those who currently hold positions in each public body to which he makes appointments; if he will make a statement on the considerations taken into account when making such appointments; and if he will list details of the posts and salaries or allowances payable which have changed since the publication of "Public Bodies 1992".

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what electrical services undertaken by the Public Works and Services Department of St. Helena have been privatised.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 18 June 1993]: From 1 June 1993, the provision and maintenance of electrical installations in private properties has been undertaken by the private sector.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the present scale of fees and charges payable for medical attention by citizens of St. Helena; and what were the comparable figures in real terms 10 and 20 years ago.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 18 June 1993]: The table gives the fees and charges payable by citizens of St. Helena in respect of medical attention, in-patient and out-patient treatment, etc. for the years 1993, 1983, and 1977. 1973 fees were set in 1967 and were given in old currency.

This information has been provided by the St. Helena Government, who are unable to give comparable figures in real terms over the period.

[4] Single ward charge additional (if applicable).

DEFENCE

Aldermaston

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all toxic chemicals discharged into the environment or disposed of off-site by the atomic weapons establishment, Aldermaston.

Mr. Aitken: To identify and list individually the wide and varied range of over 1,000 toxic chemicals used by the atomic weapons establishment, Aldermaston, those which may ultimately be discharged into the environment, or disposed of off-site, would involve disproportionate cost. Nevertheless, in all cases where toxic materials are discharged or disposed of, the statutory requirements and the need for authorisations, consents or licences are observed.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on decommissioning and radioactive waste management at the atomic weapons establishment, Aldermaston; how that policy has changed since the unpublished 1990 memorandum by the Comptroller and Auditor General on "Ministry of Defence: Nuclear Research and Support Services", paragraphs 4.17 to 4.28; and what further policy changes he plans to make.

Mr. Aitken: My Department's policies on decommissioning, and radioactive waste management at the atomic weapons establishment, Aldermaston, are in accordance with the International Atomic Energy Authority guidelines, and have not changed since the unpublished 1990 memorandum by the Comptroller and Auditor General on Ministry of Defence nuclear research and support services. However, the programmes of work for decommissioning and radioactive waste management have since been revised, and will continue to be revised on an annual basis.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 25 June 1992, Official Report, column 299, how much of the 1,800 cu m of low-level waste stored at the atomic weapons establishment, Aldermaston at December 1991 is estimated to be plutonium-contaminated material.

Mr. Aitken: Approximately 90 per cent. of low-level radioactive waste is plutonium contaminated.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) of 19 November 1992, Official Report, column 294, what was the average annual increase in the volume of intermediate-level waste stored at the atomic weapons establishment, Aldermaston, as at December for 1983 to 1992.

Mr. Aitken: The information requested may be calculated from my earlier answer by dividing the difference in intermediate-level waste holdings for the two years by nine.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the role and powers of the Health and Safety Executive concerning the company Hunting BRAE, while it is managing the Atomic Weapons Establishment.

Mr. Aitken: The role and powers of the Health and Safety Executive in respect of the management of the atomic weapons establishment have not changed since my answer of 4 March 1993, Official Report, column 227.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what account he has taken of the current estimated date of readiness of the Nirex national repository for radioactive waste in his policy on managing radioactive waste management at the atomic weapons establishment, Aldermaston.

Mr. Aitken: The latest available readiness date of the repository is taken into consideration by AWE Aldermaston in formulating its radioactive waste management policy and strategy.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 303, how much plutonium-contaminated liquid waste is stored in closed steel tanks located in bitumen-lined pits at the atomic weapons establishment, Aldermaston; and what is its total activity.

Mr. Aitken: The amount of plutonium contaminated liquid waste stored in closed steel tanks at AWE Aldermaston is some 720 cubic metres. Its total activity is 925 Gigabecquerels (alpha), and 2·38 Terabecquerels (beta).

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 25 June 1992, Official Report, column 299, what is the expected average annual change in the volume of intermediate-level waste to be stored at the atomic weapons establishment, Aldermaston, over the next 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The average rate of increase of intermediate level waste arising at the atomic weapons establishment, Aldermaston, over the next 10 years will be approximately 240 cubic metres per annum.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all toxic chemicals in use by the atomic weapons establishment, Aldermaston.

Mr. Aitken: As with all major industrial sites AWE Aldermaston uses a wide and varied range of materials, exceeding 1,000 in total, which have toxic properties; it would therefore, be impractical to list them all without incurring disproportionate cost and effort.

Nuclear Waste Storage

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 13 May, Official Report, column 569, which branches of his Department currently make use of the storage and disposal facilities available at Harwell and Dounreay.

Mr. Aitken: The atomic weapons establishment and the naval reactor test establishment.

Waste Management

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 13 May, Official Report, column 571, if he will list the research programmes currently in hand; who is conducting each research programme; by what date he expects each research programme to be completed; what is the cost of each research programme: and if he will place copies of the report of each research programme in the Library.

Mr. Aitken: Research is being directed towards methods of destroying organic materials such as ion exchange resin which are associated with the decontamination of the reactor plant of nuclear-propelled submarines. This work is being carried out under the contract by AEA Technology at Harwell and Rolls-Royce and Associates at Derby. The atomic weapons establishment is pursuing a number of in-house initiatives towards minimising the volumes of wastes by improved segregation at source and improved monitoring. These are ongoing research programmes with no fixed end date. Details of costs and the reports of the programmes cannot be released for reasons of security and commercial confidentiality.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what account he has taken of the observations made in the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee's 13 annual report, paragraph 3.14; and if he will formally invite the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee to carry out a review of his Department's standards for radioactive waste management.

Mr. Aitken: My Department welcomes the reviews carried out previously by RWMAC and we have been in discussion with RWMAC in relation to a review to be carried out in 1994. My officials are already preparing a letter of invitation.

Equipment (Repairs)

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the systems to ensure that design and manufacturing faults discovered in military equipment while in service are notified to the manufacturers and that due account is taken of them before further equipment of the same type is supplied to Her Majesty's forces.

Mr. Aitken: The three armed services each operate systems for the reporting of defects in equipment and for the rectification of any faults. The continuing efficiency of these systems is currently under review. Where appropriate, action is taken with the supplier to remedy, at his expense, the reliability of equipment that in the light of in-service experience does not meet the contractual requirement. It has been, and continues to be, my Department's policy and practice to take any unsatisfactory performance by a contractor into account when making a decision regarding repeat orders or the placement of new contracts.

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps are taken to ensure that sufficient account is taken in the equipment procurement process of the advice of warrant officers and non-commissioned officers whose duty it will be to repair and maintain the equipment once in service.

Mr. Aitken: Representatives of the services' in-service support organisations play key roles both in project and integrated logistic support management, and especially in the specification, review and validation of maintenance proposals.

Joint Forces Headquarters

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the operating costs of the joint Forces Headquarters for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Hanley: A joint force headquarters (JFHQ) is constituted only during a crisis to provide an in-theatre headquarters for major United Kingdom deployments. There is no peacetime requirement for such a headquarters although there is a small number of staff who have been identified to form an initial core of any potential JFHQ and who are tasked in peacetime with planning and exercises. The cost of these staff is not separately identifiable and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

The only occasion a JFHQ was required in the last 10 years was when a JFHQ was created in October 1990, based in Riyadh, for in-theatre planning, preparation and execution of Operation Granby. It was stood down on completion of the operation. The operating costs of the headquarters were not identified separately and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Military Exercises

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list separately the joint military exercises carried out over the last five years by the United Kingdom with non-North Atlantic Treaty Organisation countries overseas.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Over the past three years, however, United Kingdom forces have exercised overseas with forces from: Australia, Bahamas, Bahrain, Belize, Botswana, Brunei, Curacao, Egypt, Grand Cayman, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Malaysia, Martinique, New Zealand, Oman, Saudi Arabia, Singapore, Sweden, Thailand and Trinidad. In addition, the Navy carries out a number of short ad hoc exercises with friendly navies on an opportunity basis.

Science and Technology

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how the science and technology in his Department will be affected by the White Paper on science engineering and technology; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The recent White Paper "Realising Our Potential—A Strategy for Science, Engineering and Technology" makes clear that my Department is making increased efforts to ensure that the technologies its research generates are more widely available for civil use; to exploit the commercial potential of its research; and to encourage collaboration with the civil sector wherever possible so as to enhance the contribution to the economy as a whole.

Llanishen AWE

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria were used in the selection of the consortium chosen to run the Llanishen atomic weapons establishment.

Mr. Aitken: Tenders for the contract to operate the atomic weapons establishment (which includes the site at Llanishen, Cardiff) were evaluated against a range of stringent criteria for operating the establishment. These included health and safety factors, which were particularly important in judging the competition.

Lung Diseases (Naval Service)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has for the number of (a) men and (b) women, suffering from lung diseases contracted during, and as a result of, service in the Royal Navy in the period 1939 to 1945.

Mr. Hanley: My Department has no statistical evidence upon which a meaningful estimate of ex-service personnel suffering from general lung conditions contracted during, and as a result of, service in the second world war could be based.

Ulster Defence Regiment and Royal Irish Regiment

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) part-time and (b) full-time members there were in the Ulster Defence Regiment in 1988; and how many (i) part-time and (ii) full-time members there are in the Royal Irish Regiment currently serving in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: As at 1 June 1988 there were 3,440 part-time and 2,830 full-time members in the Ulster Defence Regiment; as at 1 June 1993, there were 2,671 part-time and 2,894 full-time members of the home service element of the Royal Irish Regiment.

Trooping of the Colour

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many, by category, of the commissioned, warrant and non-commissioned officers, and other ranks marching on Horseguards parade during Trooping of the Colour were from the (a) African, (b) Afro-Caribbean and (c) Indian or other non-white communities; what proportion in each case they represented of the total number of troops taking part; what steps are being taken to ensure that the recruitment of officers and other ranks to these regiments becomes representative of the ethnic structure of the population generally; and what targets there are to set the regiments concerned towards achieving this.

Mr. Hanley: No records are currently held of the ethnic origins of any Army personnel. We are, however, planning to introduce in-service ethnic monitoring which will provide a breakdown of the ethnic origins of serving personnel of all ranks. A number of measures are in place to encourage the recruitment of ethnic minorities into the Army. Targets for recruitment from ethnic minority communities are set for the Army as a whole, not for individual regiments and corps, and for 1993-94 the target is set at 1·5 per cent., as it is for the other two services.

Public Appointments

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the names, occupations and current employers of those who currently hold positions in each public body to which he makes appointments; if he will make a statement on the considerations taken into account when making such appointments; and if he will list details of the posts and salaries or allowances payable which have changed since the publication of "Public Bodies 1992".

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to "Public Bodies" and "Public Appointments: A Handbook for Women's Organisations", both of which are in the Library of the House and which show available details for each Ministry of Defence public body. Appointments are made on the basis of an individual's aptitude and merit.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Labour Statistics

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing for each council area or for each travel-to-work area in Northern Ireland the number of (a) males and (b) females in employment; and what were the figures five years, 10 years, 15 years and 20 years ago or as much of such information as is available.

Mr. Atkins: Information on the total number of employees in employment (excluding agriculture) by travel-to-work area is available from censuses of employment held in 1978, 1981, 1984, 1987 and 1991 and is set out in the table. Information prior to 1978 is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Housing Executive Grants

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive replacement grant scheme in each year since it was introduced; how many applications were received and how many were approved in each year since the scheme was introduced; and how many grants have been paid in respect of those approvals in each year.

Mr. Atkins: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive but the chief executive has advised me that, because it would have limited value in the initial stages of the grant application process, an analysis by grant type is not maintained. However, he confirmed that 24 formal applications were approved in respect of replacement grant in the year 1992-93, the first year, following the introduction of the scheme in mid-1991, in which such applications were eligible. Between 1 April and 22 June 1993 a further five applications were approved. While to date no grants have been paid because none of the proposals have been processed to a payment stage, the estimated cost of this commitment amounts to some £373,000.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive improvement grant scheme in each of the last five years; how many applications for the scheme were received; and how many were approved in each of the last five years.

Mr. Atkins: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive but the chief executive had advised me that, because it would have limited value in the initial stages of the grant application process, an analysis by grant type is not maintained. However, he confirmed that the number of formal applications for improvement grants approved and the relevant costs in each of the years in question was:

| | Approved | Cost £ million |
|---|---|---|
| 1988-89 | 3,260 | 27·3 |
| 1989-90 | 2,801 | 22·6 |
| 1990-91 | 2,864 | 21·3 |
| 1991-92 | 2,762 | 22·3 |
| 1992-93 | 5,569 | 21·3 |

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive repair grant scheme in each of the last five years; how many applications for the scheme were received; and how many were approved in each of the last five years.

Mr. Atkins: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Executive but the chief executive has advised me that, because it would have limited value in the initial stages of the grant application process, an analysis by grant type is not maintained. However, he confirmed that the number of formal applications for repair grants approved and the relevant costs in each of the years in question was:

| | Approved | Cost £ million |
|---|---|---|
| 1988-89 | 6,975 | 12·2 |
| 1989-90 | 6,492 | 10·7 |
| 1990-91 | 5,039 | 9·4 |
| 1991-92 | 3,637 | 7·2 |
| 1992-93 | 4,410 | 8·3 |

Limavady Bypass

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects the construction work on the Limavady bypass to begin.

Mr. Atkins: The construction of the first stage of Limavady bypass is expected to start in 1997-98, subject to the availability of finance.

Traffic, Limavady

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the volume of traffic now using Linenhall street, Limavady over each 24-hour period in each day of the week; what are the maximum and minimum hourly rates; what is his estimate of the hourly maximum capacity of the street; and what forecast he has made of when this figure will be reached.

Mr. Atkins: The information is not available in the form requested. In the last survey undertaken, the maximum hourly rate of traffic using Linenhall street, Limavady, was found to be approximately 950 vehicles. The estimated hourly capacity of this street is 1,500 vehicles, a figure which may be reached in the period 1998 to 2004, depending on the continuing rate of traffic growth.

Community Psychiatric Nurses

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many community psychiatric nurses are employed by each health and social services board; what are the minimum qualifications for community psychiatric nurses employed by health and social services board; and what relevant qualifications are required for social workers approved for the purposes of article 5 of the Mental Health (Northern Ireland) Order 1986.

Mr. Ancram: The number of community psychiatric nurses employed by each health and social services board at 31 December 1992 was as follows:

| | Number | Whole-time equivalents |
|---|---|---|
| Eastern | 107 | 104·03 |
| Northern | 20 | 20·00 |
| Southern | 39 | 39·00 |
| Western | 28 | 28·00 |

The minimum qualifications for community psychiatric nurses employed by health and social services boards are registered mental nurse (RMN) with community psychiatric nursing (CPN) diploma or certificate.

The relevant qualifications required for social workers approved for the purposes of article 5 of the Mental Health (NI) Order 1986 are the certificate of qualification in social work (CQSW), the certificate in social services (CSS) or the diploma in social work (DSW). In addition to be approved under the Mental Health (NI) Order 1986 a social worker undergoes a training course approved by the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work and, if successful, is assessed as competent to practice. The appropriate health and social services board then issues a letter stating that the person is qualified to operate under the order.

Community Regeneration

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the criteria for aid under the CRISP—community regeneration initiative special projects—programme with a list of the towns and villages and other locations where CRISP schemes have been (a) approved and (b) completed; and how much public money has been committed to each such scheme, with an indication of the nature of the scheme.

Mr. Atkins: The criteria for aid under the International Fund for Ireland's community regeneration and improvement special programme (CRISP) programme which is jointly funded by DOE(NI) and IFI are as follows:

1. A CRISP application must be for a town or village with a population less than approximately 10,000 in an area which has been designated as disadvantaged by the International Fund for Ireland.
2. The CRISP application should be from a soundly-based local group which is broadly representative of the local community and should have the capacity to become registered as a company limited by guarantee.
3. A CRISP application generally comprises three elements—a core economic project, environmental improvement and urban development programme. The core economic project is generally funded on the basis of a grant of 80 per cent. and a 20 per cent. loan repayable with interest over 10 years. A project must demonstrate its viability on this basis and be related to local economic needs. The extent of environmental improvements is generally related to the scope within the centre of the settlement for improving publicly owned areas which are run down. The amount of urban development grant approved reflects a judgment about the extent to which the private sector will claim grants for improving its property.
4. Another consideration in deciding on a CRISP application is whether it is part of a wider regeneration strategy and the level of commitment of other agencies to other regeneration measures in that strategy.

A list of the towns where CRISP schemes have been approved with details of the financial commitment to each scheme and the nature of the scheme is given in the tables. As yet, none of the schemes has been completed, although a number of individual core projects are complete.

Potatoes

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his estimate of the unsold tonnage of last year's crop of potatoes in Northern Ireland; and what estimates he has been given of this figure by the Ulster Farmers Union.

Mr. Ancram: The Government estimated surplus production from the 1992 potato crop to be between 40,000 tonnes and 60,000 tonnes. The Ulster Farmers Union estimated the surplus at approximately 55,000 tonnes.

Fishing

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland arising from the Sea Fish (Conservation) Act 1992 (a) how many fishermen have now been allocated their number of fishing days, (b) how many fishermen have challenged the number of fishing days allocated to them and (c) how many fishermen have lodged appeals against the number of fishing days allocated to them.

Mr. Ancram: Provisional days at sea allocations have been issued to 253 fishermen in Northern Ireland. As at 21 June 1993, 55 of these fishermen have applied for adjustment of their provisional allocation. No appeals have been lodged as the appeal stage of the days at sea arrangements does not commence until formal days at sea allocations are issued to fishermen later in the year.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many and what proportion of people in receipt of invalidity benefit are over pension age, giving figures separately for men and women; and how many of each sex would be entitled to a full basic pension.

Mr. Scott: The available information is in the table. Information about the number of invalidity benefit recipients over pension age who would be entitled to a full basic rate of retirement pension is not available, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Numbers receiving invalidity benefit on 30 March 1991

| | Men | per cent. | Women | per cent. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| All recipients | 976,000 | 100 | 330,000 | 100 |
| Recipients over pension age | 201,000 | 21 | 37,000 | 11 |

Notes: Based on a 1 per cent. sample of claimants, rounded to the nearest thousand; the latest date for which information is available is 30 March 1991.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in receipt of invalidity benefit receive dependency additions for (a) a male adult dependant, (b) a female adult dependant, (c) one child, (d) two children, (e) three children, (f) four children and (g) five or more children.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Invalidity benefit recipients as at 30 March 1991 with dependency increases for:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| An adult dependant | 418,000 |
| One child dependant | 50,000 |
| Two child dependants | 30,000 |
| Three child dependants | 13,000 |
| Four child dependants | 3,000 |
| Five or more child dependants | 3,000 |

Notes: Based on a 1 per cent. sample of claimants, rounded to the nearest thousand; the latest date for which information is available is 30 March 1991.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the distribution of invalidity benefit recipients by (a) age, (b) sex and (c) marital status.

Mr. Scott: The available information is in the table. Information about the marital status of male invalidity benefit recipients is not available.

Invalidity Benefit recipients as at 30 March 1991

| Age | Men | Married Women | Other Women |
|---|---|---|---|
| Under 20 | 1 | 1 | 1 |

ii. [1]equals a sample of less than 500.

iii. Women over age 65 are not entitled to invalidity benefit.

Disability Living Allowance

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures for the relative frequency of medical examinations by disability for those people who have applied for or been granted disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: I am informed by Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement of his Department's policy in determining which applicants for disability living allowance are to undergo medical examinations.

Mr. Scott: Disability living allowance claimants may be medically examined, where either the disabled person requests an examination or the adjudication officer responsible for determining entitlement considers that this is the best method of obtaining the information necessary to make a decision. In addition, a representative sample of applicants are examined as part of the evaluation of the claims and adjudication systems.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what circumstances it is the policy of his Department to rely on a single medical examination rather than a report by the general practitioner for the continuation of the disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: Entitlement to disability living allowance is determined by independent adjudication officers. It is for the adjudication officer in each individual case to decide what is the best source of the information that he needs to enable him to make a decision on the claim.

Quarry House

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to move staff from Quarry house to London in each of the next five years; and in what grades.

Mr. Hague: We have no such plans.

Public Appointments

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the names, occupations and current employers of those who currently hold positions in each public body to which he makes appointments; if he will make a statement on the considerations taken into account when making such appointments; and if he will list details of the posts and salaries or allowances payable which have changed since the publication of "Public Bodies 1992".

Mr. Burt: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is responsible for a large number of public appointments. The information requested for each of these could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, some information is available from the Cabinet Office publications, "Public Bodies" and "Public Appointments: A Handbook for Womens Organisations", copies of which are in the Library.

When making appointments account is taken of the relevant background and experience of the individuals concerned.

Changes in posts, salaries and allowances since the publication of "Public Bodies 1992" are detailed in the following table:

Appointments and Remuneration

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners were claiming invalidity benefit for each year since the benefit's inception; and what percentage these figures are of the total number of claimants in those years.

Mr. Scott: The available information is in the table.

| Date | Invalidity benefit claimants over pension age | Percentage of total invalidity benefit claimants |
|---|---|---|
| 3 June 1972 | 14,000 | 3·4 |
| 2 June 1973 | 17,000 | 3·9 |
| 1 June 1974 | 20,000 | 4·5 |
| 31 May 1975 | 24,000 | 5·3 |
| 6 June 1976 | 21,000 | 4·4 |
| 4 June 1977 | 28,000 | 5·5 |
| 3 June 1978 | 36,000 | 6·4 |
| 2 June 1979 | 43,000 | 7·0 |
| 31 May 1980 | 52,000 | 8·5 |
| 30 May 1981 | 52,000 | 8·2 |
| 29 May 1982 | 57,000 | 8·3 |
| 2 April 1983 | 62,000 | 8·4 |
| 31 March 1984 | 68,000 | 8·5 |
| 30 March 1985 | 84,000 | 9·9 |
| 5 April 1986 | 101,000 | 11·2 |
| 4 April 1987 | 127,000 | 13·1 |
| 2 April 1988 | 150,000 | 14·3 |
| 1 April 1989 | 174,000 | 15·5 |
| 31 March 1990 | 206,000 | 17·0 |
| 30 March 1991 | 238,000 | 18·2 |

Notes:
1. Figures for 1972 to 1976 based on a 2 per cent. sample of claimants; 1977 to 1978 on a 2·5 per cent. sample; 1979 to 1991 on a 1 per cent. sample.
2. All figures are rounded to the nearest thousand.

Liable Relatives

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many liable relatives were paying maintenance contributions to claimants on supplementary benefit and income support for each year since 1972; and what percentage these figures are of the number of claimants with children for whom liable relative payments could be made in those years.

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the form requested for years prior to 1991, when the statistics collected related to the number of cases where a maintenance liability was established rather than those where payment was actually made.

The information for 1991 and 1992 is in the table. The figures represent the number of cases receiving payments. It is possible that some cases may receive payments from more than one liable relative.

| | 1991 | 1992 |
|---|---|---|
| Number of total LR cases with dependent children | 680,000 | 948,000 |
| Number of cases where maintenance was paid | 194,000 | 207,000 |
| Percentage of cases where payment was made | 28·5 | 21·9 |

The higher number of total cases in 1992 is likely to be due mainly to new procedures which enabled more reliable identification of cases in which there might be a liability to maintain. The figure of 680,000 for 1991 may therefore be an underestimate of the real number.

National Insurance

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 8 June, Official Report, columns 209-10, how many cases of national insurance contributions evasion have been uncovered, resulting in action short of legal prosecution; and how much revenue has been recovered in each year since 1984-85.

Mr. Hague: The administration of national insurance is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive of the Contributions Agency. She will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Miss A. Chant to Mr. Alan Milburn, dated 23 June 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Contributions Agency I am responsible for answering questions about relevant operational matters. I have been asked to reply to your question about the number of cases of National Insurance Contributions evasion which have resulted in action short of legal prosecution and the amount of revenue recovered.

The Agency considers investigation of all cases of apparent non-compliance with National Insurance law. However, it does not attempt to differentiate between cases which involve genuine mistakes made by employers and those which involve suspected evasion of liability as it is often difficult to draw a clear dividing line between these two extremes of non-compliance. The Agency's main objective is to collect arrears and ensure current and future compliance. It does, of course, keep a particularly close eye on any employers it thinks may be involved in deliberate evasion.

In his reply to your earlier questions my Deputy, Mr. Bertram, supplied details of the number of cases that had been authorised for prosecution but pointed out that we had no specific details about evasion. He also explained that the Agency uncovers cases of many types of non-compliance in a variety of ways, including survey visits made to employers by inspectors, examination and processing of employers' End of Year Returns and enquiries made by individual contributors. Throughout the whole range of our activities the Agency has not encountered any evidence that evasion of National Insurance liability by employers is a significant problem. But it always investigates thoroughly any instances of suspected or alleged evasion.

Figures for the numbers of cases of evasion which result in action short of prosecution are not kept. Indeed they would be virtually impossible to categorise with any degree of robustness. But an effective monitoring and control system ensures that appropriate action is taken in all cases where non-compliance is uncovered whatever the cause.

I regret that I am unable to give you the precise information that you requested but I hope that my reply will prove helpful. If you have any further queries on the matter I would be only too pleased to discuss them with you.

Market Testing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the cost to date and the expected future cost of his Department's market-testing programme; which firms of consultants have been used in connection with the market testing programme; and how they were selected.

Mr. Hague: [pursuant to his reply, 7 June 1993, c. 143-44]: The information given contained a typographical error. The correct information is that the expected cost of the market testing programme for 1993-94 is broadly estimated at £13·5 million.

Income Support

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants of income support in each Benefit Agency Office having claimants in Derbyshire, have arrangements for (a) direct payment of housing costs, (b) attachment of community charge, (c) direct re-payments to the social fund, (d) direct payments to the electricity companies and (e) direct payments to British Gas; and what are the total counts for (a) to (e) for customers who are residents of Derbyshire.

Mr. Burt [pursuant to his answer 10 May 1993, c. 342-43]: Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, has written further to the hon. Member.

Letter from Mr. M. Bichard to Mrs. Margaret Beckett dated 21 June 1993:

I am writing to you further to my letter of 7 May 1993 in response to your earlier Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking about persons in each Benefits Agency office in Derbyshire who had arrangements for direct payments to be made from their income support.

At that time I said that I would write to you at a later date giving figures for the number of persons in each Benefits Agency office in Derbyshire who had their mortgage payments paid direct to their mortgage lender.

I am pleased to say that these figures are now available and are as detailed below as at 31 May 1993.

| | Number |
|---|---|
| Derby (London Road) | 1,431 |
| Derby (Becket Street) | 3,269 |
| Ilkeston | 1,818 |
| Buxton | 189 |
| Chesterfield | 1,279 |

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Legal Action (Ministers)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Attorney-General what is his usual practice in allowing individuals to take legal action against Ministers or Government Departments; and how many times he has done so since 1979.

The Attorney-General: As a general rule, I do not have any role to play in decisions by individuals to take legal action against Ministers or Government Departments.

Public Appointments

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the names, occupations and current employers of those who currently hold positions in each public body to which he makes appointments; if he will make a statement on the considerations taken into account when making such appointments; and if he will list details of the posts and salaries or allowances payable which have changed since the publication of "Public Bodies 1992".

The Attorney-General: I do not make any appointments to public bodies.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Duty-free Sales

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total value of duty-free sales on (a) surface and (b) air routes between Britain and the continent in (i) the first quarter of 1993 and (ii) the first quarter of 1992; and how much additional revenue would have been received by the Exchequer if these sales had been made through retail outlets in the United Kingdom.

Sir John Cope: Information on duty-free sales is available only from infrequent surveys which cannot be used to provide reliable estimates of sales in particular quarters.

National Lottery

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the written guidance he has issued to the chief officers of the National Heritage Memorial Fund, the Arts Council and the Sports Council concerning the distribution of proceeds from the national lottery.

Mr. Nelson: No such guidance has been issued. It would be for the Secretary of State for National Heritage to decide whether any guidance would be appropriate or necessary.

Tax Relief (Shore Option Schemes)

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost to the Exchequer in each of the years 1991-92 and 1992-93 of tax relief on (a) approved discretionary share option schemes and (b) approved all-employee savings-ralated share option schemes.

Mr. Dorrell The latest estimates are as follows:

| | £ million | |
|---|---|---|
| | 1991-92 | 1992-93 |
| Approved discretionary share option schemes | 45 | 45 |
| Approved savings-related share option schemes | 55 | 75 |

Corporation Tax

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 9 June, Official Report, column 258, what was the total turnover and the total profits of the largest 25 United Kingdom firms of which corporation tax was due in each year from 1987; and if he will provide the turnover and corporation tax figures in both (a) current prices and (b) 1987 prices.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 22 June 1993]: Latest readily available figures covering five years for turnover, profit before tax, and corporation tax liability of the 25 largest profitable United Kingdom companies and company groups, based on turnover in their latest accounts, are as follows:

| | Turnover £ billion | Profit before tax[1] £ billion | Corporation tax liability[2] £ billion |
|---|---|---|---|
| At current prices | | | |
| 1987 | [3] | [3] | 3·1 |
| 1988 | 190 | 19 | 3·0 |
| 1989 | 230 | 23 | 3·5 |
| 1990 | 270 | 25 | 3·5 |
| 1991 | 275 | 20 | 3·3 |
| 1992 | 275 | 21 | [4] |
| At constant 1987 prices | | | |
| 1987 | [3] | [3] | 3·1 |
| 1988 | 180 | 18 | 2·8 |
| 1989 | 200 | 21 | 3·1 |
| 1990 | 220 | 20 | 2·9 |
| 1991 | 210 | 15 | 2·5 |
| 1992 | 200 | 16 | [4] |

[1] World-wide activity reported in published accounts.
[2] After relief for foreign tax.
[3] Not readily available.
[4] Not yet available.

Tax Evasion

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many criminal and civil cases relating to tax evasion have been pursued in each of the last five years; and what revenue has been recovered.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 24 June 1993]: The information requested is as follows:

| | 1988-89 | 1989-90 | 1990-91 | 1991-92 | 1992-93 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Criminal cases | 12 | 14 | 14 | 11 | 14 |
| Civil cases | 64,926 | 70,548 | 74,974 | 74,414 | 68,563 |
| Revenue recovered (£ million) | 706 | 933 | 1,091 | 1,324 | 1,361 |

Numbers of cases are for successful Inland Revenue investigations only.

AGRICULTURAL, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Equine Viral Arteritis

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 15 June, Official Report, column 482, what steps she is taking to stop the spread of equine viral arteritis by casual contact including aerial transmission; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Equine viral arteritis is not a notifiable disease in Great Britain and statutory disease control measures and movement restrictions do not apply. The United Kingdom equine industry operates a voluntary code of practice for the prevention and control of EVA which includes guidance on the appropriate measures to prevent the introduction and spread of the disease. It is considered to be an effective means for stud owners to protect their animal health status and its use is commended to all sectors of the equine industry. Those organising shows and equine sporting events have been additionally advised to take normal disease prevention measures and not to allow horses which exhibit signs of infectious disease, especially respiratory infections, to enter the showground or event.

We fully support the measures taken by the United Kingdom equine industry, including the application of voluntary movement restrictions to affected premises.

The VPC considered the application for an inactivated EVA vaccine at its meeting yesterday. It advised that subject to the satisfactory resolution of outstanding quality points, an animal test certificate could be granted, allowing use of the product under veterinary supervision and subject to the normal conditions associated with such certificates. Officials at the Veterinary Medicines Directorate are discussing these points urgently with the company concerned, together with arrangements for making the product available as speedily as possible.

Tuberculosis

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations she has received regarding the need for carcasses of dead badgers to be checked for tuberculosis; and what is her assessment of the dangers to cattle of unchecked tuberculosis in the badger population.

Mr. Soames: I have received no representations regarding the need for carcasses of dead badgers to be checked for tuberculosis. Badgers infected with tuberculosis do not pose a significant threat to the national cattle herd. In the south-west of England, where the majority of cattle breakdowns occur, some 0·5 per cent. of herds had a new confirmed breakdown in 1992. Almost all of these were considered by the Department's veterinary staff to be due to badger infection.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many incidents of tuberculosis in cattle have been reported in each quarter since 1 January 1990.

Mr. Soames: The number of new cattle herd breakdowns due to tuberculosis, confirmed in each of the quarters in question was:

| | 1st Quarter | 2nd Quarter | 3rd Quarter | 4th Quarter |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1990 | | | | |
| New confirmed breakdowns | 37 | 31 | 49 | 26 |
| 1991 | | | | |
| New confirmed breakdowns | 17 | 28 | 42 | 38 |
| 1992 | | | | |
| New confirmed breakdowns | 26 | 34 | 52 | 43 |
| 1993 | | | | |
| New confirmed breakdowns | 58 | — | — | — |

Crassula Lelmsii

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action she is taking to counter the spread of Crassula Lelmsii, the Australian swamp stone-crop weed.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 24 June 1993]: I have been asked to reply. Research about the effect of this species is at present being carried out by English Nature and the Institute of Freshwater Ecology. They have also produced a public information leaflet giving guidance on the identification and control of the plant.

ENVIRONMENT

Rivers

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress the National Rivers Authority is making (a) nationally and (b) in the north west in regulating the use of rivers and controlling pollution.

Mr. Yeo: The NRA's 1990 river quality survey reported around 90 per cent. of waterways as of "good" or "fair" quality. The next survey, expected in 1995, should reflect the benefits from the NRA's tighter pollution controls and increased enforcement activity throughout England and Wales, the reduction in numbers of major water pollution incidents, and the accelerated investment by the water industry on sewerage and sewage treatment.

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of pollution entering the North sea comes from rivers; and what proportion comes from British rivers.

Mr. Yeo: Since different countries use different methods of estimating inputs of contaminants, the available statistics do not permit reliable international comparisons. The available date is set out in the periodical "Monitoring and Assessement" reports of the Oslo and Paris Commissions.

Affordable Accommodation

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further plans he has to increase the supply of affordable accommodation for rent and sale.

Sir George Young: We are pursuing a number of policies, both through the provision of new accommodation and measures to maximise the use of existing property, to ensure that a decent home is within reach of every family. Nearly £50 million additional resources were made available last year in the housing market package to enable housing associations to purchase over 18,000 empty and repossessed properties to use for families in housing need; and some £50 million in grants which enabled 3,300 housing association and local authority tenants to buy new homes, releasing their current homes for reletting to those in housing need. These special measures, announced in the Autumn Statement, brought my Department's total spending on housing to £8·5 billion.

Over the three years from 1992-93, the Housing Corporation estimates that housing associations will be able to provide 170,000 new social homes for rent and shared ownership. In addition, measures taken to encourage the private rented sector, such as our flats over shops and housing associations as managing agents initiatives,and to make better use of the existing public sector stock, will increase the supply of homes for rent still further.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will extend the range of local services put out to compulsory competitive tendering.

Mr. Baldry: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that the then Under-Secretary of State for Local Government gave to the right hon. Member for Chingford (Mr. Duncan-Smith) on 24 May 1993 at column 366.

Burning Plastic

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what reports he has had on the effect of burning plastic on the spread of dioxins and similar compounds into the air; and if he will make a statement on the main sources of dioxins in the atmosphere.

Mr. Yeo: I have not received any such report. However, it is accepted that the burning of some plastics, in common with the burning of many other materials, can lead to the formation of dioxins. For incinerators, I am advised that the operating conditions of the incineration process are paramount in controlling the quantities formed. This is why incinerators are subject to stringent controls under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

For the main sources of dioxins in the atmosphere, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 24 February 1992 at column 406.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to promote the burning of plastics.

Mr. Yeo: None.

Water Resources

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how, and to what extent, the National Rivers Authority has jurisdiction over the management of water resources controlled by the British Waterways Board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The Water Resources Act 1991 exempts all navigation authorities, including British Waterways Board (BWB), from the requirement to apply to NRA for abstraction licences in connection with their own operations but obliges BWB to apply to NRA for licences in respect of abstractions from BWB waters by others.

"Health Effects of Sea Bathing"

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to publish the results of the study, "Health Effects of Sea Bathing", EH9021.

Mr. Yeo: The report referred to is the interim report on the health effects of sea bathing covering the period April 1991 to March 1992. Copies were placed in the Library in September 1992. I intend to publish a report on the whole four-year research project later this year.

Sewage-based Fertilisers

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to encourage water authorities to sell sewage-based fertilisers.

Mr. Yeo: About half the sewage sludge produced by water companies is already used as a fertiliser. The potential market for sludge-based products has been assessed in research undertaken for the Department by the Water Research Centre. The final report will be made available to the water industry shortly.

Packaging (Recycling)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to require firms to recycle their packaging.

Mr. Yeo: The Government take the view that companies involved in placing packaging on the market should take a share of the responsibility for dealing with it after it has served its original purpose. We have therefore been conducting intensive discussions with a range of industries on how they might contribute to improved recycling rates. We are still considering how best to achieve this.

Fly Tipping

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is proposing to tackle the problem of fly tipping.

Mr. Yeo: Measures to reduce fly tipping are included in the Control of Pollution (Amendment) Act 1989 and the Environmental Protection Act 1990. Under provisions which came into force on 1 April 1992, there is a duty of care on all holders of waste (except private households) to prevent the illegal disposal of their waste. Under the duty, waste may only be handed to an authorised person and transfers of waste must be documented. Carriers of waste must be registered with their waste disposal authority and authorities have powers to seize identified vehicles used in fly tipping. The Environmental Protection Act also includes a provision placing responsibility on the person controlling a vehicle for fly-tipping offences using that vehicle. This latter measure is to be implemented this year; the Government have no plans for further measures at present.

House Condition Survey

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now expects to publish the results of the house condition survey.

Sir George Young: The first results were published on Monday 21 June in "English House Condition Survey 1991: A Preliminary Report on Unfit Dwellings".

Environmental Policy

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's policy on the purchase and use of (a) recycled paper, (b) low-energy light bulbs, (c) tropical hardwoods, (d) peat and (e) cars with catalytic converters.

Mr. Yeo: My Department's policy is set out in our Policy Statement on Green Housekeeping, published in March 1993. Specifically, our policy is: to extend the amount of recycled paper bought from the present 40 per cent. to the current practicable limit of 70-75 per cent. as soon as possible; to reduce energy consumption by 15 per cent. over the five years to 1995-96 by, among other things, installing energy efficient lighting wherever it is practicable to do so; to encourage sustainable forestry practices by purchasing office furnishings which, as far as possible, do not contain hardwoods from virgin areas; to minimise the use of slow renewables such as peat by using soil improvers derived from the processing or reuse of organic wastes such as coir, manure, leaf mould and bark chippings; to fit all official vehicles with catalytic converters by May 1994.

Publicity

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many (a) paid and (b) unpaid publicity projects hav been organised by his Department's information directorate since April 1992; what evaluation has been made of the effectiveness of the publicity projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: From April 1992 to the present, my Department's information directorate has carried out 717 paid publicity projects. For the most part, unpaid publicity activities are undertaken to support paid publicity activities. During the same period, 1,016 press notices were issued on matters of public interest.

Information is always gathered on the takeup of all publicity materials by the public—particularly of publications—as part of the overall communications strategy for every publicity project. Research is carried out regularly to monitor the effectiveness of paid publicity initiatives, particularly in the case of large, long-term projects.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account he will take in setting the aggregate for standard spending assessments for 1994-95 of the savings in energy costs open to local authorities taking advantage of increased competition in the supply of fuels.

Mr. Baldry: In setting the total of standard spending for 1994-95 Ministers will consider a wide range of factors. These will include the pressures on local authority services arising from increases in pay and prices, demographic changes and the scope for securing savings and improved value for money.

Tower Hamlets (Appeal)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to reconsider the decision to withdraw the application for a petition to appeal in the case of R. v. Secretary of State for the Environment ex parte Tower Hamlets; and if he will state the reasons for his decision.

Mr. Baldry: We have no plans to reconsider our decision. The time limit for seeking leave to appeal to the House of Lords has now passed.

North Hull Housing Action Trust

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement about the timetable for formulating the exit strategy for the tenants whose home improvements have been completed by the North Hull housing action trust;

(2) when tenants in South close within the North Hull housing action trust, who have indicated their wish to return to Hull city council, will have the opportunity to exercise this right; and if he will make a statement;

(3) when the exit strategy for First avenue tenants will be ready; and if the tenants will be allowed to exercise their right to return to Hull city council in October;

(4) what plans he has to use the Hull exit strategy as a model for all other housing action trusts.

Sir George Young: It is for the North Hull housing action trust to formulate its own exit strategy, and agree it with Ministers as part of the corporate planning process. The strategy needs to be consistent with the statutory objectives of housing action trusts as set out in Section 63 of the Housing Act 1988, and also with the guidelines issued by my Department to all housing action trusts on the disposal of tenanted properties. These require, among other things, that tenants should be consulted about a range of alternative landlords and ownership options before they are required to make final decisions about their future tenure. This is entirely consistent with the declaration of intention between Ministers, the leader of Hull city council and the chairman of the North Hull housing action trust in December 1991. As the North Hull housing action trust was the first housing action trust to be established, its exit strategy will inform those for subsequent housing action trusts. But each housing action trust will need to prepare and agree an exit strategy which fully reflects local circumstances.

I have agreed the proposal put to me by the North housing action trust that those tenants in South close who had indicated a clear preference to return to Hull city council before my Department's guidelines were issued should be enabled to do so as soon as the necessary procedures are completed. As for the tenants in First avenue, discussions are currently taking place between the North Hull housing action trust and my Department about the range of options that will be put to tenants before they are required to choose their future landlord. It is too early to say whether the formal consultation process will be completed in time for any tenants to change their landlords by October. But all tenants who wish to do so will be able to return to Hull city council, as agreed between Ministers, the city council and the chairman of the HAT in December 1991. The Leasehold Reform, Housing and Urban Development Bill, currently before Parliament, will strengthen this commitment by providing a statutory right for all HAT tenants to return to the council in the area in which their house is situated if they elect to do so.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now fix a firm date to meet a delegation from Hull city council and the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North to discuss the affairs of the North Hull housing action trust.

Sir George Young: I have already told the leader of Hull city council that it is my intention to visit the North Hull housing action trust in the near future, at which time I would expect to meet representatives of the council. But in the meantime I should be happy to meet a delegation from the city council led by the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North (Mr. McNamara).

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the relationship between the North Hull housing action trust and his Department's regional office at Leeds.

Sir George Young: I am satisfied that my Department's regional office is able to give the North Hull housing action trust the advice, guidance and support it needs to fulfil its statutory objectives and secure value for money.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy, in his consultations with Hull city council for the replacement of the chairman of the North Hull housing action trust, that the appointee is independent and not directly connected with any political party.

Sir George Young: In looking for a successor to Mr. Liggins as chairman of the North Hull housing action trust, I shall be seeking to appoint someone who can secure the objectives of the housing action trust and gain the confidence of the residents and of Hull city council. I would not wish to rule out someone who had held local government or ministerial experience provided they were prepared to accept that their relevant political activities would be in strict accordance with the code of conduct issued to all prospective board members.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provision will be made for the division of responsibility for legal costs when the houses currently owned by the North Hull housing action trust are returned to the ownership of Hull city council.

Sir George Young: It is not necessarily the case that houses currently owned by the North Hull housing action trust will return to the ownership of Hull city council. It will be for individual tenants to decide on their future landlord. However, as I have agreed that those houses which return to the council after having been improved by the housing action trust should do so at nil cost to the council, I think it would be reasonable for the city council to meet all the legal costs.

Jewel Tower

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the purpose of the works and repositioning of the storm gutters on the footpath adjacent to the Jewel tower next to the Houses of Parliament; and what further work is to be done so that rain water does not collect across the pavement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 21 June 1993]: The provision and the subsequent maintenance of storm water drainage is a matter for the local authority. I suggest that this matter should be addressed to the city of Westminster.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make it his policy to impose upon the Legal Aid Board a duty to automatically provide all applicants with a complete breakdown of their assessment of resources determining legal aid eligibility.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Legal Aid Board or the legal aid assessment office will always provide this information on request. It would not be a sensible use of resources to require more than that.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Police Stations (Attacks)

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many mortar and bomb attacks have been launched against police stations in Northern Ireland in each of the last four years.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The information requested is as follows:

| Year | Bomb Attacks | Rocket/mortar Attacks |
|---|---|---|
| 1989 | 22 | 6 |
| 1990 | 23 | 12 |
| 1991 | 41 | 13 |
| 1992 | 17 | 6 |

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many portakabin-type structures are still in use at police stations in Northern Ireland; and what assessment has been made of their vulnerability to mortar and bomb attacks relative to other kinds of structure.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: There are a number of portakabin-type structures, or sectional buildings, within the police estate. They are used mainly for storage facilities. For security reasons, I do not consider that it would be appropriate to specify the precise number still in use.

All the buildings are nevertheless assessed as to their comparative vulnerability to mortar and bomb attack with particular consideration being given to their location and use.

RUC Drug Squad

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans there are to deploy greater manpower resources to the Royal Ulster Constabulary's drugs squad; if other officers are seconded to augment the squad; and how many seconded officers have served six months or longer periods during each of the last four years.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The deployment of police officers is an operational matter for the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary, and I understand that the strength of the drugs squad is regularly reviewed by him. There is an ongoing programme of six-month secondments to the drugs squad; figures on secondments are not kept on a yearly basis but it is estimated that 90 officers have been involved over the last four years.

Police Advisory Board

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how often the Police Advisory Board, as constituted under the Police Act (Northern Ireland) 1970, is supposed to meet; how often it has met in each of the last four years; and if it is planned to meet in the current year.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: There is no statutory requirement for the Police Advisory Board to meet. The most recent meeting of the board was held in January 1988. It is intended to hold a further meeting of the board later this year.

Muggings, Coleraine

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many muggings have been reported to the police in Coleraine (a) during 1992 and (b) in 1993 to date.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: Thirteen robberies were reported to the police in the Coleraine sub-division in 1992, the circumstances of which approximate to what is generally understood by "muggings". In 1993, to 22 June, three such robberies have been reported.

Water Disconnections

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by year for the last five years, and by water authority the number of (a) domestic and (b) industrial water disconnections made.

Mr. Atkins: The Water Executive, which is part of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland, is the only water authority in Northern Ireland.

The water supplied to a property which is used solely for domestic purposes is not metered and is not subject to disconnection for non-payment of an account.

Information on industrial premises is not held separately and the figures for commercial, industrial and agricultural premises are as follows:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| 1988 | 408 |
| 1989 | 292 |
| 1990 | 258 |
| 1991 | 385 |

Public Bodies

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the names, occupations and current employers of those who currently hold positions in each public body to which he makes appointments; if he will make a statement on the considerations taken into account when making such appointments; and if he will list details of the posts and salaries or allowances payable which have changed since the publication of "Public Bodies 1992".

Sir Patrick Mayhew [holding answer 25 June 1993]: Information on the names, occupations and current employers of those who currently hold positions on public bodies to which I make appointments, and details of the posts and salaries or allowances payable which have changed since the publication of "Public Bodies 1992" could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

In making public appointments, the prime considerations are the individual's ability or potential to contribute to the work of a particular body to which he or she is appointed and the need for each public body to have the range of experience and skills necessary to carry out its functions.

Opsahl Report

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the report, "A Citizen's Inquiry: the Opsahl report on Northern Ireland"; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The commission provided me with a copy of its report when it was published. It provides a valuable record of the commission's work, which clearly did much to stimulate the submission of views from a wide range of individuals and organisations. In addition the commission itself made a number of recommendations. A number of these are clearly controversial and have provoked dissenting comment. Its value, in my view, lies principally in enlivening and developing informed public debate and in offering an important source of ideas, both from the commission itself and from the many submissions made to it.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Hong Kong

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals have applied for British citizenship under the British Nationality (Hong Kong) Act 1990; and how many have been awarded British citizenship so far.

Mr. Charles Wardle: As at 19 June 1993, 66,734 applications had been received from principal applicants. No record is kept of the number of dependants shown on the applications. A total of 30,762 principal beneficiaries had been registered as British citizens by that date together with 51,127 dependants.

Cardiff Prison

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the age of the remand prisoner who attempted suicide at Cardiff prison on 22 June.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general for the prison service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Alun Michael, dated 27 June 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the age of the prisoner who attempted suicide at Cardiff prison on 22 June.

The prisoner was aged 18 and was discovered hanging from the window bars at about 1 am by the prisoner sharing his cell. He summoned staff who, finding no sign of life, resuscitated him while awaiting an ambulance. The prisoner was taken to hospital and, I am pleased to say, is recovering. He will return to custody as soon as he is fit.

This young man was seen by a doctor on reception at Cardiff as part of the standard screening for potential suicides. He was considered not to be at risk and gave no indication that he would attempt to take his own life. Staff at Cardiff prison are to be commended for their prompt and professional action in saving this young man's life. The prisoner who summoned help has had counselling and I understand that both his father and solicitor have praised staff at the prison for their care and humanity.

Crime Clear-up Rates

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 4 March, Official Report, column 279, what proportion of the clear-up rate for each police force in 1992 was accounted for by offences taken into consideration.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is contained in the table.

European Election Boundaries

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reason arrangements for the redrawing of the European parliamentary boundaries were not initiated shortly after the decision on extra seats at the Edinburgh summit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We thought it right to give careful consideration to the distribution of the extra seats to the various parts of the United Kingdom before bringing our proposals before Parliament.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice he sought from the boundary commissions on their ability to redraw the European Parliament constituency boundaries in time for the 1994 elections; and what correspondence was exchanged.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no doubts about the ability of the boundary commissioners to carry out this work, if they had both the time and the necessary statutory powers. Consequently, no correspondence has been exchanged.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the review of boundaries for European parliamentary constituencies in Wales to be completed; and what consultations he proposes to hold on the membership of the committee to conduct the review.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We expect the European Parliamentary Constituencies Committee for Wales to complete its review as soon as possible after the European Parliamentary Elections Bill receives Royal Assent. It is our intention that the Opposition parties in the House of Commons will be consulted about the membership.

Group 4

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms Ruddock) of 10 June, Official Report, column 297, when he expects the examination of the contract with Group 4 in respect of court escort services to be concluded.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the prison service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. John Spellar, dated 24 June 1993.

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question pursuant to the Answer of 10 June to the honourable Member for Lewisham, Deptford [Official Report, column 297] about the examination of the contract with Group 4 for court escort services.

The demands on the criminal justice system and the resources available to it are continually changing. To meet these changes courts open, close, or change their use, and prison establishments change their catchment areas or functions. All such changes affect the resource requirements of the court escort service. It was to examine such changes that the work referred to in my letter to Mrs. Ruddock was undertaken. That work is still continuing (no contract changes have yet been made) and some aspects of it are likely to be concluded before others. At the same time, further changes in the prison population in the contract area are occurring and the effects of these too are being considered.

The contract with Group 4 recognises that costs will vary with such changes in the requirement and mechanisms exist to adjust the contract accordingly. This will be a continuing process throughout the life of the contract.

Police, North Yorkshire

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been (a) the establishment and (b) the number of police in post in North Yorkshire on 1 April in each year since 1979.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on police strength is collected at the end of each month. The figures set out in the table give the information requested as at 30 April in each year.

North Yorkshire Constabulary

| Year as at 30 April | Establishment | Strength |
|---|---|---|
| 1979 | 1,328 | 1,337 |
| [1]1980 | 1,368 | 1,355 |
| 1981 | 1,368 | 1,352 |
| 1982 | 1,368 | 1,361 |
| 1983 | 1,368 | 1,362 |
| 1984 | 1,368 | 1,358 |
| 1985 | 1,368 | 1,348 |
| 1986 | 1,368 | 1,365 |
| 1987 | 1,368 | 1,362 |
| 1988 | 1,368 | 1,370 |
| 1989 | 1,383 | 1,363 |
| 1990 | 1,408 | 1,380 |
| 1991 | 1,408 | 1,380 |
| 1992 | 1,418 | 1,389 |
| 1993 | 1,418 | 1,380 |

[1] The North Yorkshire Police Authority did not ask for an increase in establishment between 1980-81 and 1987-88.

Obscene Publications Act 1959

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many publications have been confiscated in each of the last three years under the Obscene Publications Act 1959.

Mr. Maclean: Figures for seizures and forfeitures under section 3 of the Obscene Publications Act 1959 are not collected centrally. However, from inquiries which have been made of the two largest forces in England and Wales —the Metropolitan police and Greater Manchester—both of which have dedicated obscene publications squads, I understand that a total of 264,504 items and 234,386 items were seized by them in 1991 and 1992 respectively. A total of 74,690 items have been seized by the same police forces so far this year.

Betting Shops

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many betting shops are open for evening racing; and how many betting shops that were previously open for evening racing have now closed.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government do not collect this information.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what effect the evening opening of betting shops has had on attendances at greyhound racing stadiums.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that the greyhound racing industry is concerned that there has been a recent downturn in admissions, but that no figures are available yet.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the names, occupations and current employers of those who currently hold positions in each public body to which he makes appointments; if he will make a statement on the considerations taken into account when making such appointments; and if he will list details of the posts and salaries or allowances payable which have changed since the publication of "Public Bodies 1992".

Mr. Howard [holding answer 25 June 1993]: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Buildings

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the buildings currently owned or rented by his Department, together with (a) the estimated value, (b) the annual rent and (c) the annual maintenance cost of each building in the current financial year.

Mr. Howard: [holding answer 3 June 1993]: The information is not recorded centrally and is not available in the form requested. The number of buildings owned or rented by the Home Office—on the prisons and non-prisons estates—is set out in the tables, together with details, where available, of the estimated value of the estate and the rents or leases payable.

| Prison Service Estate | Number of Buildings | Estimated Value |
|---|---|---|
| Prison Establishments | 129 | £3-4 billion |
| Prison Quarters | 2,296 | £110-140 million |
| Other Buildings | 15 | £0·75-1·25 million |
| Total | 2,440 | £3-4 billion |

The majority of the prison quarters and other buildings are freehold. A total of 127 prison establishments are owned by the Department and two are leased. The rents payable for prison service property and farmland in 1993-94 will be in the region of 1 million pounds. The accommodation and maintenance charges for the headquarters buildings, including prison service training schools and supply and transport branch, will total approximately £17 million and minor repairs and maintenance to prison establishments will cost about £18 million in 1993-94.

| Non-prisons estate | Number of buildings | Rent or leases payable per annum (£ million) |
|---|---|---|
| Owned buildings | 16 | — |
| Rented buildings | 97 | 33·4 |
| Leased buildings | 34 | 11 |
| Total | 147 | 44·4 |

Of the buildings on the non-prisons estate which are not owned by this Department 88 are on the common user estate and are thus owned or rented by the property holdings directorate of the Department of the Environment to whom we pay rent to cover the costs of our occupations in the buildings.

Information on the value of the buildings on the non-prisons estate is not readily available and a full valuation could be carried out only at disproportionate cost. The estimated cost of maintenance in 1993-94 is £17 million.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Diplomatic Service

Mr. George Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries where restrictions exist on personal travel by members of the diplomatic service.

Mr. Goodlad: It has been long-standing practice to give advice to all staff on the problems they may face in travelling to certain countries, and to require them to give notice of such visits, particularly if they have access to classified information. On security grounds we do not publish the list of countries concerned, but it is kept regularly under review.

Mr. George Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those countries where marriage to, or cohabitation with, nationals is prohibited for employees of Her Majesty's diplomatic service; and when that list was last revised by reduction or addition.

Mr. Goodlad: Diplomatic service staff are not specifically prohibited from marrying, or cohabiting with non-British citizens. However, depending on circumstances, such relationships might affect an officer's postability or security clearance.

Haiti

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to assist efforts to restore democratic Government to Haiti; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Along with our European Community partners, we have consistently reaffirmed our commitment to the restoration of democratic government in Haiti. We support the efforts of the Organisation of American States (OAS) and the United Nations to bring about a political settlement. We are taking steps to implement UN Security Council resolution 841, which was adopted by the UN on 16 June 1993 to impose sanctions on Haiti.

Conventional Arms Register

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date the Government submitted to the United Nation's Secretary General a return from the United Kingdom to the UN Register of Conventional Arms Transfer in New York; and if he will place a copy of the return in the Library.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [pursuant to his reply, 5 May 1993]: The copy of the United Kingdom's return placed in the Library of the House on 29 April inadvertently contained some errors on page 5. A corrected version has now been placed in the Library.

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has (a) to visit northern Cyprus and (b) to meet representatives from northern Cyprus during the Commonwealth conference in Cyprus in October; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There are no such plans; the programme for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs' visit to the commonwealth heads of Government meeting, has not yet been finalised.

Somalia

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations the United States Administration held with Her Majesty's Government or its representatives at the United Nations concerning its military actions in Somalia in June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 25 June 1993]: United Nations military actions in Somalia in June have been carried out in accordance with United Nations Security Council resolution No. 837, to which we have given our full support.

EMPLOYMENT

Sheltered Employment

Mr. Coe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to improve the present programme of sheltered employment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, is publishing today a consultative paper on the arrangements for funding sheltered employment. The main proposals involve:

introducing a more flexible system of block grants to providers which will allow a better response to client needs; improving performance and use of resource through having formal contracts with clear targets; better targeting of sheltered employment on need;

arrangements to encourage more people with severe disabilities to move from sheltered workshops or factories to placements with employers and, where possible to full open employment.

The document has been sent to the main interests concerned and comments requested by 13 September. Decisions will be reached as soon as possible after that.

I believe that the proposals will address criticisms of the excessive complexity and inflexibility of current funding arrangements and will enable more people to be helped in better ways.

Copies of the document are available in the Vote Office.

Oral Disorders

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for employment if he will publish for each of the last 10 years the number of working days lost through oral disorders.

Miss Widdecombe: This information is not available.

Environmental Policy

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his Department's policy on the purchase and use of (a) recycled paper, (b) low-energy light bulbs, (c) tropical hardwoods, (d) peat and (e) cars with catalytic converters.

Miss Widdecombe: The Employment Department, in common with other Government Departments, has produced an environmental strategy which sets out our policy on environmental and energy issues.

It contains commitments to purchase and use recycled paper wherever this is practical; to reduce energy consumption by, among other means, the installation of more efficient equipment including low-energy light bulbs; to purchase goods and services which avoid dependence on the production and use of non-renewable resources such as tropical hardwoods; and to fit all Departmental vehicles with catalytic converters where possible.

Although we have no specific policy on the use of peat, the general commitment against the use of non-renewable resources would cover it.

Abattoirs

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have been employed in abattoirs in (a) England, (b) Scotland and (c) Wales in each year since 1985.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The available information on regional employment in abattoirs is from the periodic censuses of employment and is given in the table:

Estimated number of employees in employment in Abattoirs[1] September of each year

| | England | Scotland | Wales |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1984 | 8,100 | 1,500 | 200 |
| 1987 | 9,400 | 1,400 | 400 |
| 1989 | 9,000 | 1,200 | 300 |
| 1991 | 8,300 | 1,500 | 600 |

[1] Activity heading 4121 of the Standard Industrial Classificatiion 1980.

Review Bodies (Staff)

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff are involved in servicing the review bodies on doctors and dentists' remuneration, and on nursing staff, midwives, health visitors and professions allied to medicine; how many NHS staff are covered by those review bodies; and what is the annual cost of running these bodies.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration and the Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions

Allied to Medicine are expected to be serviced directly by up to eight staff in 1993-94, shared equally between the two bodies and assisted by other clerical and secretarial staff of the Office of Manpower Economics.

As at 30 September 1991, the latest date for which figures are available, there were some 112,000 doctors and dentists and the full-time equivalent of some 527,000 nursing staff, midwives, health visitors and professions allied to medicine in the NHS. This includes staff employed by national health service trusts, which are free to determine the pay of their staff locally.

The annual cost of running the two review bodies, in respect of the salary costs of the eight staff and the travel and subsistence costs for members, who are otherwise unpaid, and staff is expected to be £265,000 in 1993-94.

Market Testing

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to the oral answer from the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) of 14 December 1992, Official Report, columns 15-16, on the sale of the Professional and Executive Register, if he will now list the organisations which bid for the register; and whether the company which bought the register submitted the highest bid.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend, the previous Secretary of State wrote to the hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) on 15 February 1993 setting out the Government's position.

Port Accidents

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many fatal accidents there have been in United Kingdom ports since July 1989.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Garston (Mr. Loyden) on 27 May 1993, Official Report, columns 655-56.

PRIME MINISTER

Low-energy Light Bulbs

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what steps have been taken to install low-energy light bulbs at 10 Downing street and Chequers.

The Prime Minister: Following an energy audit of 10-12 Downing street high-efficiency, low-energy lamps have been installed where appropriate. Low energy luminaires and krypton tubes have also been installed.

The Chequers estate is the responsibility of the Chequers trust.

Slovenia

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions the Copenhagen EC conference held on closer links between the European Community and Slovenia; and with what result.

The Prime Minister: There was no discussion of this subject at the European Council in Copenhagen.

Cabinet Sub-Committee Decisions

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions decisions of the Cabinet Sub-Committee on London have been made known to Parliament and the public.

The Prime Minister: I do not propose to give details of topics considered by individual ministerial committees, the timing of their meetings or their discussions.

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister if he will seek to ensure that the question of the present division of Cyprus is included on the agenda of the Commonwealth conference to take place in Cyprus later this year; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The inter-communal dispute in Cyprus is the subject of intensive negotiations under the auspices of the UN Secretary-General. This process has our full support. It is important not to start new initiatives that may confuse or cut across the UN effort.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has (a) to visit northern Cyprus and (b) to meet representatives from northern Cyprus during the Commonwealth conference in Cyprus in October; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: There are no such plans; the programme for my visit to the commonwealth heads of Government meeting has not yet been finalised.

RECHAR

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Prime Minister which department provides the cover for capital costs for three RECHAR schemes in east Durham.

The Prime Minister: Departmental responsibility will depend on the nature of the projects concerned.

Doctors' and Dentists' Pay

Ms Lynne: To ask the Prime Minister if the Doctors and Dentists Review Body will be invited to make recommendations for pay appropriate to 1 April 1994.

The Prime Minister: Yes.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he will take to enable the Doctors and Dentists Review Body to propose measures to eliminate differentials between the earnings of doctors and dentists and comparable professions.

The Prime Minister: The Government do not consider it appropriate to determine pay rates for doctors and dentists by comparison with the earnings of other professional groups. Each case for remuneration should be considered on its merit, taking account of the terms and conditions of service enjoyed, the labour market in which the profession operates and what is affordable.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Prime Minister if he will include in his discussions with the Japanese Government in September the issue of the storage in Britain of nuclear waste resulting from the reprocessing of Japanese nuclear fuel at Sellafield.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 25 June 1993]: This matter is already dealt with in the contracts between British Nuclear Fuels plc and its Japanese customers and in the existing inter-governmental letters between the United Kingdom and Japan. Since 1976, BNFL's contracts for the reprocessing of overseas spent fuel have contained options for the return of wastes. The Government intend that these options will be exercised and wastes returned.

HEALTH

GP Fund Holders

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many fund holders have had their recognition reviewed by region in 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94 to date.

Dr. Mawhinney: Regional health authorities are responsible for ensuring that all fundholders continue to meet the requirements of the scheme.

Isobutyl Nitrite

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths were attributable to isobutyl nitrite in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: In England and Wales during the period 1988 to 1992 there were no deaths where isobutyl nitrite was attributable, on death registrations, to be the cause.

Information from St. George's medical school, which monitors all deaths in the United Kingdom associated with abuse of volatile substances, however, shows that during the period 1988 to 1991—the latest year for which information is available—there are known to have been five deaths in England and Wales that were associated with alkyl nitrites[1].

[1] All the nitrite compounds involved are of commercial quality, not pure, and may contain several isomers. For this reason, the St. George's report "Trends in Deaths Associated with Abuse of Volatile Substances 1971–1991: Report No. 6", copies of which are available in the Library, refer to them generically as alkyl nitrites.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultation she has had with ME Action and other myalgic encephalomyelitis associations about future areas of research.

Mr. Sackville: Officials from the Department met representatives of the main myalgic encephalomyelitis organisations last year. As a result, a task force is now preparing a report to assist consideration of a structured approach to myalgic encephalomyelitis research.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent on research into myalgic encephalomyelitis in each of the past three years.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. A number of research projects into aspects of the physical origins and treatment of myalgic encephalomyelitis are proceeding within the national health service, some of them funded by voluntary organisations and one by the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

London Amublance Service

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 9 March, Official Report, column 498-99, on emergency calls to the London ambulance service, if she will now make it her policy to require detailed records to be kept of incidents where response times of emergency ambulances in London exceed 25 minutes and for information concerning the number and nature of such incidents and the reasons for them to be placed in the Library each month.

Mr. Sackville: No. The London ambulance service is answerable to South West Thames regional health authority. The policy on requiring detailed records of response times is a matter for it.

Quarry House

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to move staff from Quarry house to London in each of the next five years; and in what grades.

Mr. Sackville: The Department has only recently completed the relocation of the national health service management executive to Leeds. There are no plans to move work back to London.

Dentists

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many salaried dentists are employed by each family health services authority in England.

Dr. Mawhinney: A total of 17 English family health services authorities currently employ 77 salaried dentists. Details are shown in the table.

Number of salaried dentists employed by FHSAs at 18 June 1993

| FHSA | Number of salaried dentists |
|---|---|
| Derbyshire | 1 |
| Cambridgeshire | 2 |
| Kensington, Westminster and Chelsea | 9 |
| Essex | 3 |
| City and East London | 8 |
| Kent | 4 |
| Greenwich and Bexley | 6 |
| Lambeth, Southwark and Lewisham | 30 |
| West Sussex | 1 |
| Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth | 1 |
| Wiltshire | 2 |
| Buckinghamshire | 2 |
| Cornwall and Isles of Scilly | 3 |
| Gloucestershire | 1 |
| Liverpool | 2 |
| Lancashire | 1 |
| Salford | 1 |
| Total—England | 77 |

Psychiatric Services

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on her policy towards the long-term development on psychiatric services and care.

Mr. Bowis: Our policy for the long-term development of mental health services is set out in the report to Parliament "Development of Services for People with Learning Disabilities (Mental Handicap) or Mental Illness in England" No. 342 printed on 16 December 1992 and the "Mental Illness Key Area Handbook" published in January this year. Both documents are available in the Library.

Community Care

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received about community care for the mentally and physically handicapped in the north-west; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: We have received a number of representations. The Government are monitoring the implementation and practice of the community care reforms which were implemented on 1 April this year. This monitoring is being undertaken by the social services inspectorate and regional health authorities.

Eye Consultants

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has regarding the number of referrals by opticians to eye consultants in each year since 1990.

Dr. Mawhinney: Ophthalmic opticians do not, except in an emergency, refer patients directly to consultant ophthalmologists, but do so through general practitioners. In 1990-91 there were 599,520 referral attendances at consultant ophthalmologists' out-patient clinics in England, of which 478,141 were written referral requests from GPs. In 1991-92—the last date for which figures are available—there were 663,192 referral attendances, of which 529,243 were written referrals from GPs. We do not collect information about the proportion of referrals initiated by ophthalmic opticians.

Dental Treatment

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many courses of dental treatment in each category under the national health service were performed by dentists for the periods from October to December 1991 and October to December 1992; and what was the percentage increase or decrease in the number of treatments provided;

(2) how many courses of dental treatment in each category under the national health service were performed by dentists for the periods from January to March 1992 and January to March 1993; and what was the percentage increase or decrease of treatments provided.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is shown in the table.

General dental service—England
Number of courses of dental treatment

| | Adults | Children |
|---|---|---|
| October 1991 to December 1991 | 6,169,678 | 721,014 |
| October 1992 to December 1992 | 6,216,373 | 673,528 |
| Percentage Change | 0·76 | −6·59 |
| January 1992 to March 1992 | 6,440,445 | 712,001 |
| January 1993 to March 1993 | 6,452,325 | 702,232 |
| Percentage Change | 0·18 | −1·37 |

Notes:
1. Under the new dental contract introduced on 1 October 1990, most child treatment is undertaken under capitation where no separate course of treatment is identified. The figures for adults and children are not therefore comparable.
2. The reduction in the number of child courses of treatment is due to the inclusion in the figures of "entry payments". These are paid to a dentist on accepting for capitation a child whose teeth require active clinical intervention. The number of such payments is now declining sharply.

Emergency Hospital Admissions

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of emergency admissions to hospitals in each health authority in England in 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Sackville: The number of non-elective admissions in the general and acute specialties provided by national health service hospitals in each regional health authority are shown in the table. Information for individual districts is not available centrally.

NHS Treatment Abroad

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is collected centrally on the number of national health service personnel who go abroad to treat national health service patients.

Dr. Mawhinney: No such information is available centrally because there is no general facility for national health service personnel to provide services under the NHS outside the United Kingdom.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Aid and Trade Provision

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library the findings of the Government's review of aid and trade provision.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The findings of the Government's review of the aid and trade provision were reflected in the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, South (Mr. Ottaway) on 17 June at column 679-80.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence the review on aid and trade provision received to substantiate the need and opportunities to improve effectiveness and value for money; and what steps are being taken to achieve such improvements.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In the course of the aid and trade provision review, evidence was considered from a wide variety of sources. Important sources on the scheme's effectiveness were evaluation studies of past aid and trade provision projects including the "ATP Evaluation Synthesis Study", a copy of which is already in the Library of the House, and discussions with companies which had implemented contracts funded by ATP.

In future, the Overseas Development Administration's appraisal, approval and monitoring procedures for ATP projects will be brought in line with those for other bilateral aid projects. In addition, the Department of Trade and Industry is introducing more systematic appraisal of the likely commercial and industrial benefits to the United Kingdom economy, consistent with other schemes which pursue United Kingdom economic objectives.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Croydon, South, (Mr. Ottaway), on 17 June, Official Report, column 679, what date the new low-income criteria in respect of aid and trade provision will operate from;

(2) further to his answer to the hon. Member for Croydon, South, (Mr. Ottaway), on 17 June, Official Report, column 679, what exceptions there will be to the new regime for aid and trade provision during the transitional period; and when this period will end.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The new criteria became effective on the date of my answer—17 June 1993. Exceptions have been agreed only for projects on which companies have expended considerable time and effort, where expectation built up that ATP would be available if such projects satisfied the previously existing criteria. The projects in question are the Kuala Lumpur airport project in Malaysia, a water supply project in Thailand, and a few small technical co-operation projects.

Human Rights

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) which developing countries have a human rights record which adversely affects their eligibility for development aid under his Department's policy;

(2) if he will list the developing countries which he treats as having good human rights records when they are considered for development aid assistance.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The human rights record of a recipient country is one of several factors we consider when deciding overseas aid allocations. Amongst other factors we take into account the needs of the country concerned and how effectively our aid will be used. Where a country's human rights record is poor, we have a number of ways of urging improvement. We take every opportunity, often with our EC and other partners, to make our views clear to Governments which are abusing human rights.

We are ready to help countries which show an intention to move to better standards of government with well targeted development assistance. In cases of persistent human rights abuse we are also prepared to restrict or withdraw development aid. Recent examples include Burma, Malawi and Sudan. Announcements are made when this is done.

EDUCATION

Additional Educational Needs

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what representations he has received from local authorities on the disparity in standard spending assessments generated by the additional educational needs factor as it is currently applied; and what plans he has to change the present arrangements for AEN methodology arrangements and the common funding formula for grant-maintained schools;

(2) what assessment he has made of the extent to which application of a common funding formula for grant-maintained schools based upon the current educational standard spending assessment methodology would generate unacceptable differences in per capita funding in schools serving very similar districts; and what plans he has to improve the present arrangements in regard to the additional educational needs factor to ensure equitable allocations to schools of comparable site.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has received various local authority representations about the additional educational needs—AEN—allowance within standard spending assessments. These will be taken into account in the review of the AEN allowance which is currently taking place as part of a wider-ranging review of standard spending assessments for 1994-95.

We are also consulting widely on the common funding formula for grant-maintained schools. This will be based on the education element of standard spending assessments, as calculated in future. It will be introduced gradually with due regard to schools' needs for stability in funding and for additional resources to reflect additional responsibilities, as well as to the relative levels of additional educational needs among pupils attending particular schools.

Local Management of Schools

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish the letter sent to Cumbria county council by his Department's LMS unit dated 7 May bearing reference S/P/6/131/587; and to which recipients similar letters were sent.

Mr. Forth: The text of the Department's letter to Cumbria county council was as follows:

"I am writing to acknowledge receipt of the information sent under cover of the Authority's letter dated 30 Mareh 1993, Part 4 having been received earlier.

Whilst I have not yet had the opportunity of looking in any detail at the information provided, I thought you might nevertheless appreciate knowing that it had arrived within the Department.

I really must apologise for the very long time it has taken me to write to you."

The information in question was the LEA's LMS budget statement made under section 42 of the Education Reform Act 1988. The Department uses these statements for two main purposes. First, to monitor performance against the key delegation and pupil-led funding requirements under the national LMS framework. The second paragraph in the late acknowledgement letter from the LMS unit to Cumbria was intended to indicate that this particular analysis had not yet started.

The second use to which section 42 statements are put is to help the Department's schools 4 branch calculate annual maintenance grant—AMG—for grant-maintained schools in each LEA area. This process begins as soon as the statements are received. In the case of Cumbria a letter was sent on 19 April indicating that the budget statement had been examined and appeared to form a satisfactory basis for the calculation of AMG for the GM schools in the authority's area. Those schools are now being consulted on their budgets for the current financial year.

Grant-maintained Schools (Budgets)

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 22 June, Official Report, column 123, which of the grant-maintained schools with proposed final annual maintenance grant budgets listed received their final AMG budgets by fax on the morning of 23 June.

Mr. Robin Squire: None.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 22 June, Official Report, column 123, if he will list, by local education authority area, and for each grant-maintained school, the proposed final AMG and the final AMG where this has been determined.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information is given in the table.

WALES

Training

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being taken to ensure that Wales meets the training targets set by the Confederation of British Industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Staffordshire, Moorlands (Sir D. Knox) on 17 May 1993 at column 8 by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Wales.

West Glamorgan Health Authority

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if it remains his policy to announce his conclusion on the west Glamorgan health authority east unit review before the summer recess.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Yes.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money in (a) cash terms and (b) 1979-80 prices Wales has received in each year under the European regional development fund.

Mr. Redwood: Since 1979, the amounts allocated from the European regional development fund are given in the following tables:

| | Cash Prices £ millions | 1979-80 Prices £ millions |
|---|---|---|
| 1979 | 37·1 | 37·1 |
| 1980 | 21·5 | 18·2 |
| 1981 | 25·8 | 19·9 |
| 1982 | 46·7 | 33·6 |
| 1983 | 48·9 | 33·6 |
| 1984 | 63·0 | 41·2 |
| 1985 | 54·9 | 34·1 |
| 1986 | 49·7 | 29·9 |
| 1987 | 57·8 | 32·9 |
| 1988 | 63·3 | 33·6 |
| 1989 | 38·8 | 19·3 |
| 1990 | 27·4 | 12·6 |
| 1991 | 89·0 | 38·5 |
| 1992 | 54·9 | 22·9 |
| 1993 | 61·9 | 25·2 |

EC Meetings

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, together with respective dates, the EC meetings held in Brussels which were attended by senior officials from the Welsh Office in the last 12 months.

Mr. Redwood: In addition to a wide range of ad hoc meetings with European Commission officials on specific policy issues, senior officials from the Welsh Office were present at meetings of the Agriculture Council held in Brussels in July, September, November and December 1992 and in January, February, March and May 1993. They also attended meetings of the Agriculture Council held in Luxembourg in October 1992 and April and June 1993, as well as the informal regional policy council held in June 1992 in Lisbon.

Officials have also been regular attendees at the meetings of the Objective 1/2 advisory committee, the structural actions working group, which is taking forward the work on the reform of the EC structural funds, and have attended, where necessary, meetings of the trans-European road network motorway working group, the DRIVE programme working groups, the STAR Advisory Committee on Rural Structures and Agricultural Development, and the VALUE II Management Committee.

They were present at the conference on the LEADER programme for rural areas held in October 1992, the conference on inter-regional co-operation held in December 1992, the seminar on article 10 initiatives held in April 1993 and the conference on objective 5b regions held in June 1993.

They accompanied the then Secretary of State to Brussels in December 1992 when he addressed the EC Economic and Social Committee's regional policy section, and again in April 1993 when he visited Brussels for meetings with key commissioners. They also accompanied the permanent secretary to Brussels in September 1992 when he met the director general of DG XVI as well as the head of the human resources task force and officials with responsibility for rural development policies.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Printing and Publishing

Mr. Fisher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last met representatives of the printing and publishing industries.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade lunched with the newspaper conference on 9 November 1992. Ministers and officials in the Department frequently meet representatives of the printing and publishing industries.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the contribution of the publishing industry to the United Kingdom economy.

Mr. Sainsbury: Printing and publishing make an important contribution to the United Kingdom economy, accounting for 1·8 per cent. of gross domestic product (GDP) and 8·1 per cent. of manufacturing industry's share of GDP. Figures for the publishing industry alone are not available.

Auditing Practices Board

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has for legislation under which the recognised supervisory bodies in the Auditing Practices Board can be sued by individual shareholders for promulgating passive auditing standards.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I do not accept the premise on which the hon. Member's question is based.

THORP

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information has been received by his Department from British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. regarding problems with the installation of wiring at the thermal oxide reprocessing plant.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc. Any safety implications are for the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate.

Nuclear Safety Research

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what contribution is being made by the Atomic Energy Authority to the European Community's nuclear safety research project, the PHEBUS programme, at the Cadarache nuclear research centre in France; and how this involvement will assist in evaluating potential safety problems with the Sizewell B nuclear plant.

Mr. Eggar: The PHEBUS programme comprises a series of experiments being carried out by the Commissariat à l'Energie Atomique—CEA—the French nuclear safety R and D organisation. The programme is part funded by the European Community with additional funding from other countries. The Atomic Energy Authority is participating as part of the nuclear safety R and D programme sponsored by the Health and Safety Executive. The PHEBUS programme is not expected to produce results which can be used in the production of the safety case for Sizewell B.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the contribution made to nuclear safety by research conducted at the Falcon facility at Winfrith by the Atomic Energy Authority.

Mr. Eggar: The FALCON experimental facility at the Atomic Energy Authority's Winfrith site has been used to produce data to validate computer codes employed in the modelling of some aspects of the behaviour of a nuclear reactor in the unlikely event of a nuclear accident causing severe damage to the fuel.

Atomic Energy Authority Police

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what dates the police committee of the Atomic Energy Authority met representatives of the Atomic Energy Police Federation, and the representative organisations of other ranks, to discuss matters of common interest over the past years.

Mr. Eggar: There are no meetings between the Atomic Energy Authority Constabulary—AEAC—Police Committee, which is a management advisory body, and representatives of the AEAC Federation. However, management—chief constable, deputy chief constable and a representative from the AEA's corporate personnel service—meets Federation representatives to discuss matters affecting the force at the AEAC joint consultative committee, which meets twice a year—most recently on 12 May 1993. There are also numerous other formal and ad hoc opportunities for Federation representatives to discuss matters affecting their members with the chief constable, other senior AEA managers and senior AEAC officers.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will detail the numbers, by rank and location, of the Atomic Energy Authority police since 1979.

Mr. Eggar: The current strength of the Atomic Energy Authority Constabulary (AEC) is 505 compared with 516 in 1979. More detailed information on the strength, structure and location of the AEAC is published in the AEAC chief constable's annual report and the "Constabulary Almanac Official Register 1993". Copies of the 1991 annual report are in the Library of the House and I am arranging for copies of the 1992 annual report to be placed there when it is published in July. The precise operational deployment of constabulary at British Nuclear Fuels plc and Atomic Energy Authority sites is restricted information.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what dates Ministers in his Department or the Department of Energy held a formal meeting with the Atomic Energy Police Federation during the past five years.

Mr. Eggar: There have been no meetings between Atomic Energy Authority Constabulary Federation representatives and DTI or Department of Energy Ministers during the past five years.

Internal Market

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what additional help is being given to businesses to help them take advantage of the internal market.

Mr. Needham: The "Business in Europe" initiative was launched on 25 January 1993 to encourage United Kingdom companies to take advantage of the single market. Consultations were held with businesses and multiplier organisations to identify the most common problems faced by exporters. "Business in Europe" aims to provide a service which supplies only relevant information. It focuses on practical advice for exporters, information on the rules and opportunities in the single market and help in fighting barriers to trade. Access to the service is by a single 24-hour, seven-day-week, hotline number 0272 444 888, giving access to all of the DTI's overseas trade services. A range of promotional literature is available through the hotline, examples of which are available in the House of Commons Library. In addition, 20 export promoters, seconded from senior posts in industry, will be working in western Europe.

Manufactured Imports

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the level of imports in manufactured goods from European Community countries (a) in 1987 and (b) in 1992.

Mr. Needham: In 1987, the value of United Kingdom imports of manufactured goods from the European Community was £39·8 billion. In 1992 it was £53·3 billion.

Japan

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current trade deficit with Japan; and how much of the deficit is accounted for by manufactured goods.

Mr. Needham: In 1992, the United Kingdom had a crude deficit in visible trade with Japan of £5·22 billion. The deficit in manufactured goods was £5·45 billion.

US-Germany Telecommunications Treaty

Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking or proposing to take to make representations to the German Government in respect of the US-Germany telecommunications treaty; if he will challenge the legality of the same in the European Court; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 25 June 1993]: Like all other member states, Germany is bound by European Community law. The European Commission has indicated that it is considering the legality of the action of the German Government in refusing to apply either article 29 of the Utilities Directive or the recent Council regulation implementing retaliatory sanctions against the United States in the field of Government procurement.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the Government's policy on whether return of waste agreements between British Nuclear Fuels plc and overseas customers should entail substitution of equivalent amounts of radiocativity.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 23 June 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 7 June 1993, Official Report, column 161.

Coal Imports

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the recent trend in coal imports and on the prospects for the remainder of 1993.

Mr. Eggar: The level of coal imports has been declining since the middle of last year. Imports figures for 1993 are still subject to revision, but are estimated to be about 10 per cent. down on the comparable period of 1992.

Oil and Gas

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 12 May, Official Report, column 475, what arrangements have been made to obtain authorisation for access to information in oil and gas archives by the successful bidder.

Mr. Eggar: My Department has already received the necessary written authorisations.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Departmental Speeches

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library copies of the speeches given by Mr. Leonard Beighton of the Board of the Inland Revenue and Mrs. Valerie Strachan of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise to the Financial Times conference on international tax on 14 and 15 June.

Mr. Dorrell: Copies of the speeches given by Mr. Beighton and Mrs. Strachan are being placed in the Library.

Corporation Tax

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much corporation tax was repaid in each year since 1986-87.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is as follows:

Corporation Tax Repayments

| Year | Amount (£ million) |
|---|---|
| 1986-87 | 619 |
| 1987-88 | 627 |
| 1988-89 | 733 |
| 1989-90 | 1,217 |
| 1990-91 | 1,762 |
| 1991-92 | 2,609 |
| 1992-93 | 3,226 |

Civil Service Unions

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent meetings he has held with civil service trade unions to discuss industrial relations.

Mr. Dorrell: I, and other Treasury Ministers, meet civil service trade unions to discuss a variety of issues, where appropriate. I last met representatives from the civil service trade unions in January to discuss pay.

Income Tax

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the revenue change in a full year at 1993-94 income levels and assuming existing levels of personal allowances of replacing the present rates of income tax with a structure in which (a) the first £2,500 incurred tax at 20 per cent., (b) £2,500 to £30,000 at 25 per cent., (c) £30,000 to £40,000 at 30 per cent., (d) £40,000 to £50,000 at 35 per cent., (e) £50,000 to £60,000 at 40 per cent., (f) £60,000 to £75,000 at 45 per cent., (g) £75,000 to £100,000 at 50 per cent. and (h) over £100,000 at 60 per cent.

Mr. Dorrell: The estimated revenue cost in a full year at 1993-94 income levels from imposition of the specified regime is £420 million. This does not allow for any behavioural effect that might result from such changes to the tax system and does not include capital gains tax.

Contingencies Fund

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the occasions since 1979 in which use of the contingencies fund has been allowed in connection with expenditure over £200,000 on the establishment of a new statutory body before the relevant legislation has received Royal Assent.

Mr. Portillo: It appears from readily available information that there has been one advance from the contingencies fund since 1979 of more than £200,000 in connection with the establishment of a new statutory body before the relevant legislation has received Royal Assent: this was to the Department for Education in March 1993 in respect of the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority (SCAA). The use of the fund was fully consistent with the criteria concerning expenditure on new services set out in "Government Accounting".

Corporation Tax

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 9 June, Official Report, column 258, what was the total turnover, profits and corporation tax liability of the largest 100 United Kingdom companies in each year since 1987 measured in (a) current prices and (b) 1987 prices.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 22 June 1993]: Latest readily available figures covering five years for turnover, profit before tax, and corporation tax liability of the 100 largest United Kingdom companies and company groups, based on turnover in their latest accounts, are as follows:

At current prices

£ billion

| | Turnover | Profit before tax[1] | Corporation tax liability[2] |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1987 | [3]— | [3]— | 5·2 |
| 1988 | 360 | 34 | 5·2 |
| 1989 | 420 | 41 | 6·2 |
| 1990 | 490 | 36 | 5·8 |
| 1991 | 500 | 32 | 5·4 |
| 1992 | 510 | 30 | [4]— |

At constant 1987 prices

£ billion

| | Turnover | Profit before tax[1] | Corporation tax liability[2] |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1987 | [3]— | [3]— | 5·2 |
| 1988 | 340 | 33 | 4·9 |
| 1989 | 370 | 37 | 5·5 |
| 1990 | 390 | 29 | 4·7 |
| 1991 | 380 | 25 | 4·1 |
| 1992 | 370 | 22 | [4]— |

[1] Worldwide activity reported in published accounts.

[3] Not readily available.
[4] Not yet available.

Tax Exemptions (Overseas Governments)

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide an estimate of the gain to the Exchequer in each of the years 1991-92 and 1992-93 of tax exemption granted by overseas Governments to the income, profits and gains of the United Kingdom Government and United Kingdom Government bodies arising within the jurisdiction of those overseas Governments.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 25 June 1993]: The United Kingdom Government are exempted from tax in all of the jurisdictions in which it invests. The amount of this exemption is of the order of some £300 million per annum.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide an estimate of the cost to the Exchequer in each of the years 1991-92 and 1992-93 of granting tax exemption to the income, profits and gains of Governments, foreign states and integral bodies of foreign Governments arising in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 25 June 1993]: Figures are not available of the total amount of tax which is not brought into charge because of sovereign immunity from taxation. However, income tax on investment income repaid on sovereign immunity grounds amounted to approximately £164 million in 1991-92 and £116 million in 1992-93. In addition relief was allowed at source of up to £5 million each year.

Exchange Gains and Losses

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the direct effect on revenue in the years 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96 of the introduction of the clauses in chapter II part II of the Finance (No. 2) Bill had they come into effect from 6 April.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 25 June 1993]: The Exchequer effects would be highly uncertain and would depend on movements in exchange rates and the location and volume of borrowing.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Government Documents

41. Ms Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the work of HMSO and the system of making Government documents available to the general public.

Mr. David Davis: In its role of Government publisher, HMSO maintains a distribution network comprising its own retail bookshops in six major cities, some 40 appointed agents throughout the United Kingdom, and a mail order service from its publications centre in London.

Citizens Charter

42. Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he next intends to visit Birmingham to discuss citizens charter issues.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall be visiting Birmingham on 5 July to take part in the second citizens charter forum. The first forum, one of a series of eight to be held thoroughout the country to discuss local implementation of the charter, was held in Manchester on 21 June and was attended by 230 managers of local public service organisations.

44. Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what principal conclusions he has drawn from experience of the citizens charter programme to date; and how the lessons are being applied for future charters.

Mr. David Davis: Implementing charter principles is bringing about real improvements in public services. The principles will continue to be applied to all public services in the future.

Market Testing

43. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many Departments have introduced market testing of their activities; and what assessment his office has made of the annual savings from this policy.

Mr. Waldegrave: In November 1992, I announced that market-testing programmes of 36 departments, covering all the main Departments and most small ones. These programmes, for the period up to September 1993, amount to £1·5 billion, employing 44,000 staff.

I shall report on the results of these programmes after the end of the period; but returns from departments indicate that in previous years savings from market testing have typically been around 25 per cent. of the original cost, even when the activity has remained in-house.

Public Appointments

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the names, occupations and current employers of those who currently hold positions in each public body to which he makes appointments; if he will make a statement on the considerations taken into account when making such appointments; and if he will list details of the posts and salaries of allowances payable which have changed since the publication of "Public Bodies 1992".

Mr. David Davis [holding answer 25 June 1993]: The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster makes appointments to the following non-departmental public bodies:

The Civil Service Appeal Board; Agricultural and Food Research Council; Economic and Social Research Council; Medical Research Council; Natural Environment Research Council; Science and Engineering Research Council; and the Advisory Board for the Research Councils.

The members of the Civil Service Appeal Board are as follows:

Mr. P. Adams, OBE; Mr. A. Bennett, MBE; Mr. M. S. Buckley; Mrs. C. Coltman; Mr. K. Crowley; Miss P. Downs (Chairman); Mr. F. W. Edmunds, BEM; Miss B. Findlay; Mr. M. T. Foulkes; Mr. W. M. Francis, BEM; Mr. J. H. Gracey, CB; Mr. T. W. Hall; Mr. G. Harpin; Mr. R. M. Hastie-Smith, CB; Mr. P. D. Jones (Deputy Chairman); Miss J. Kelley, CB; Mr. R. W. King, BEM; Mr. N. F. Ledsome, CB; Mrs. S. P. Maunsell; Mr. N. E. A. Moore; Mr. R. W. Morgan, MBE; Mrs. M. Morrison, BEM; Mr. J. Nicholson; Mr. P. Palmer; Mr. J. Pennington; Mr. J. Renton, MBE; Mr. K. Richards; Mr. M. Ridout; Mr. J. Roberts, CB; Ms S. Scott-Anderson; Mrs. A. B. Sloman; Mr. A. Smith; Mr. A. Stem; Mr. J. W. Stevens, CB, (Deputy Chairman); Mr. N. Tout, BEM.

The members of the Research Councils are as follows:

Agricultural and Food Research Council:
Professor T. L. Blundell (Secretary and Deputy Chairman); Dr. P. J. Bunyan; Mr. C. R. Cann; Professor E. C. D. Cocking; Professor J. R. Coggins; Sir Sam Edwards; Professor W. P. T. James, CBE; Mr. D. F. R. George, OBE; Sir M. Alastair Grant (Chairman); Mr. E. Gill; Professor R. M. Hicks, OBE; Professor G. Horn; Mr. R. Knapman; Professor J. R. Krebs; Professor C. J. Leaver; Dr. T. Little; Mr. K. J. MacKenzie; Professor T. A. Mansfield; Mr. J. L. C. Provan; Mr. G. T. Pryce; Dr. D. W. F. Shannon; Professor W. V. Shaw.

Economic and Social Research Council:

It is not our practice to provide details about occupations and current employers. Such information is a personal matter for individual members. However, when making appointments, my right hon. Friend follows the standard guidance that a part-time member of a public board should not hold any outside appointments which would be incompatible with devoting due time and attention to public duties. Risk of conflict between a member's private interests and the requirements of the public service are required to be minimised and seen to be so.

Members of the Civil Service Appeal Board are appointed on the basis of their past experience of civil service personnel matters. The daily fee changed on 1 April 1993 to £221 for the chairman and £113 for others.

Members of the research councils are appointed on the basis of their expertise and experience in the field to which the research council relates. The current position regarding the remuneration of members of the research councils is as follows:

Agricultural and food research council
Chairman: £12,270
Deputy: £67,482
Members: £4,600

Economic and social research council
Chairman: £62,504
Members: £4,600

Medical research council
Chairman: £6,140
Deputy: £98,328
Members: £4,600

Natural environment research council
Chairman: £64,787
Members: £4,600

Science and engineering research council
Chairman: £82,925
Members: £4,600-£6,140

Advisory board for the research councils
Chairman: £69,470
Members: £4,600

DEFENCE

Gulf War (Illness)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what complaints his Department has received from service men who participated in Operation Granby in the Gulf in 1991 in regard to illness arising from exposure to (a) toxic chemicals from oil well fires and oil slicks and (b) uranium inhaled or ingested from uranium tipped shells fired in battle.

Mr. Hanley: No complaints of this nature have been reported by unit medical officers. Additionally, the armed forces medical services are not aware of any incidence of illness among service personnel, which could be attributed to either oil-well fires and oil slicks, or the inhalation or ingestion of depleted uranium from uranium tipped shells fired in battle.

Deregulation

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contribution his Department is making towards the Government's deregulation initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 18 May 1993 at column 148.

Countryside Stewardship Scheme

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many hectares are currently under agreement with the countryside stewardship scheme; how many hectares involve additional payments for public access in (a) England and (b) each county; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: None of my Department's land is currently entered in the countryside stewardship scheme.

Land Training

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he is making into the needs of land for training by the armed forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Work is in hand to assess the Army's training needs which will enable us to establish whether there is sufficient training land to meet their requirements. We do, of course, keep the size of the defence estate under continual review to ensure that it is no larger than is essential for military purposes.

Nimrod (RAF St. Mawgan)

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to change the role of RAF St. Mawgan in acting as the operating base for Nimrod maritime patrol aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: There are no such plans.

Joint Maritime Communications Centre

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the (a) construction costs and (b) operation costs of the Joint Maritime Communications Centre at St. Mawgan for (i) 1991-92, (ii) 1992-93, (iii) 1993-94, (iv) 1994-95 and (v) 1995-96; what proportion of these costs are paid for the United States and United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The construction costs for the Joint Maritime Communications Centre at St Mawgan are:

| Years | £ million |
|---|---|
| 1991-92 | 4·1 |
| 1992-93 | 22·0 |
| 1993-94 | 35·7 |
| 1994-95 | 14·0 |
| 1995-96 | 1·9 |

Total operational costs have not yet been fully defined. The division of overall costs is the subject of a confidential arrangement between the two Governments.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the construction of the Joint Maritime Communications Centre to be completed; when he expects it to be operational; what changes have been made to its functions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Construction of the Joint Maritime Communications Centre is scheduled for completion on 30 September 1994. Equipment installation will follow and the system is expected to be operational during April 1995. There have been no changes to its function.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he has had with local authorities and other statutory bodies concerned about the development of the Joint Maritime Communications Centre at RAF St. Mawgan; what arrangements have been made to conduct an environmental impact assessment of the development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: A notice of proposed development (NOPD) relating to the development of the Joint Maritime Communications Centre at RAF St. Mawgan was submitted to the local planning authority, borough of Restormel, on 8 February 1991. The NOPD was supported by an independent environmental impact assessment commissioned by my Department. Following a period of consultation with other statutory bodies and interested parties, the proposal was considered by the borough of Restormel on 26 March 1991 when no objections were raised.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the arrangements with the United States Government concerning the use and staffing of the Joint Maritime Communications Centre based at RAF St. Mawgan.

Mr. Hanley: My predecessor, my right hon. Friend the Member for Epsom and Ewell (Mr. Hamilton) explained in an answer to the then Member for Cornwall, North (Sir Gerry Neale) on 25 July 1990—Official Report, columns 301-2—that RAF Mawgan is a main operating base for Nimrod maritime patrol aircraft and that in addition my Department was planning to develop a joint maritime communications centre (JMCC) in co-operation with the United States. The unit will provide an important link between United Kingdom and United States maritime forces and headquarters.

As my right hon. Friend further explained the JMCC comprises a buried, hardened communications building approximately 70 m square within the existing perimeter of RAF St. Mawgan. It will be integrated with the existing RAF fixed communications system and will include two additional satellite ground terminals each approximately 3 m in diameter, also sited within the station boundary. It has been agreed with the United States that the United Kingdom will finance and construct the JMCC building and that the United States will provide the operational equipment. Once fully operational some 400 personnel will be associated with the JMCC including both operational and support staff. Approximately half of the operational staff will be provided by the Royal Navy and the Royal Air Force and the remainder will be from the United States Navy.

Since my right hon. Friend's answer, planning permission has been obtained and work on the construction commenced in 1991. It is expected that the JMCC will become operational in 1995.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many sites of special scientific interest are located on land owned or leased by his Ministry in each region of England, Scotland and Wales; if he will give the hectarage in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The total number of sites of special scientific interest—SSSIs—on land owned or leased by the Ministry of Defence is 224, broken down as 171 in England, 37 in Scotland and 16 in Wales. This includes SSSIs owned by Territorial Auxiliary and Volunteer Reserve Associations. Some of the larger SSSIs are owned by more than one organisation. Furthermore, the status and boundaries of SSSIs are constantly changing, as is the size of the defence estate. For these reasons the hectarage of the SSSIs on land owned or leased by my Department could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Lumsden Road Estate, Portsmouth

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 16 June, Official Report, column 651, what was the percentage difference in value between the successful bid submitted by European Developments and the bid submitted by Swaythling and Portsmouth housing associations.

Mr. Hanley: This information is commercial-in-confidence.

Swan Hunter (Type 23)

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his time scale for the decisions as to whether Swan Hunter Shipbuilders will be allowed to complete the contract on the type 23 frigates.

Mr. Aitken: This depends on the outcome of negotiations with the receiver, but I hope a decision will be possible shortly.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Foodstuffs in Store

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the type and quantity of foodstuffs stored by the European Economic Community in each of the member states as of 1 June.

Mr. Jack: A table showing current levels of all produce held in intervention within the European Community is deposited in the Library of the House at monthly intervals, most recently on 7 June. Figures for individual member states are not available.

Intervention Stocks

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what quantity of intervention stocks by commodity is held in England; and what the figures were (a) 12 months ago, (b) 24 months ago, (c) 36 months ago and (d) 48 months ago;

(2) what quantity of intervention stocks, by commodity, is held in Northern Ireland; and what the figures were (a) 12 months ago, (b) 24 months ago (c) 36 months ago and (d) 48 months ago;

(3) what quantity of intervention stocks, by commodity, is held in Scotland; and what the figures were (a) 12 months ago, (b) 24 months ago, (c) 36 months ago and (d) 48 months ago;

(4) what quantity of intervention stocks, by commodity, is held in Wales; and what the figures were (a) 12 months ago, (b) 24 months ago, (c) 36 months ago and (d) 48 months ago.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Responsibility for this matter is delegated to the Intervention Board Executive Agency and I have asked the chief executive to reply to the hon. Gentleman direct.

Letter from Guy Stapleton to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 28 June 1993:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply to your written Parliamentary Question (1836) tabled for answer on 25 June 1993:—

"To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, what quantity of intervention stocks by commodity is held in England; and what the figures were (a) 12 months ago, (b) 24 months ago, (c) 36 months ago and (d) 48 months ago".

I have been asked to answer the questions which you tabled in respect of stocks held in Scotland (1854), Wales (1855) and Northern Ireland (1853) over the same time periods.

The information is set out in the attached table. Current stocks are shown at 31 March 1993 and in earlier years, for all commodities except beef, at 30 June. Earlier year figures for beef are at 31 December, the only date which they are available, because at the other times of the year they are collated only by intervention regions, Great Britain and Northern Ireland. You should be aware that intervention stocks are not always stored in the area in which they are produced.

I am sending a copy of this letter, together with a copy of the table to the House of Commons Library and the Public Information Office.

Environmental Policy

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is her Department's policy on the purchase and use of (a) recycled paper, (b) low-energy light bulbs, (c) tropical hardwoods, (d) peat and (e) cars with catalytic converters.

Mr. Jack: It is the Department's general policy to give preference to the use of renewable natural resources, subject only to value for money and practical considerations. Non-renewable natural resources are used with care and economy when the use of natural renewable resources is not possible.

With regard to the specific items listed, the Ministry:

(a) currently purchases recycled paper and paper products, provided they are fit for the purpose;
(b) has already converted many of its sites to low energy or reflector-lights as part of an ongoing energy efficiency programme;
(c) aims to purchase and use hardwoods which are from renewable sources only;
(d) uses peat alternatives wherever possible, the sole exception being for experimental purposes where peat is a comparative treatment;
(e) has a policy of purchasing cars fitted with catalytic converters.

Somerset Levels

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement on the current and future organisation and responsibility for flood prevention on the Somerset Levels.

Mr. Jack: Under the Water Resources Act 1991, the National Rivers Authority exercises a general supervision over all matters relating to flood defence in England and Wales and is empowered to carry out works on designated main rivers. It discharges its flood defence functions through regional and, in some areas, local flood defence committees. In the case of the Somerset Levels, the relevant committees are the Wessex Regional Flood Defence Committee and the Somerset Local Flood Defence Committee.

Under the Land Drainage Act 1991 internal drainage boards are empowered to carry out flood defence works in designated districts of special drainage need, while local authorities are empowered to carry out works outside these districts on watercourses which are not designated main rivers. There are 20 internal drainage districts in Somerset.

The Government have announced that the NRA's functions, including flood defence, are to form part of the proposed environment agency. The Government have no plans for other changes to flood defence responsibilities at the present itme. Under current legislation it is open to the NRA to make proposals to Ministers affecting the structure of regional and local flood defence committees and internal drainage districts but at present there are no such NRA proposals affecting the Somerset Levels.

Organophosphorous Sheep Dip

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 1 April to the hon. Member for Dorset, West (Sir J. Spicer) Official Report, column 330, what further papers and evidence on organophosphorous sheep dips have been received and considered by her Department and its advisory bodies; and what conclusions have been drawn.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: A number of representations on the question of organophosphorus sheep dips have been received. These include a report from Friends of the Earth, which is being sent to members of the independent Veterinary Products Committee for consideration as part of its current review of these sheep dip products. The committee has already indicated that it wishes to conclude the review at its October meeting on the basis of the further data currently being generated. I look forward to receiving its advice on the future licensing of these products, which I will wish to consider carefully before announcing my decision.

Fisheries Council

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Fisheries Council held in Luxembourg on 24 June.

Mr. Jack: I represented the United Kingdom at the Council of EC Fisheries Ministers on 24 and 25 June, together with My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Scotland.

The main decision taken at this meeting was on an improved system of control and enforcement of the common fisheries policy. I was determined to encourage the development of a Community-wide control regime that would address British fishing industry concerns to ensure that the control of the CFP was being undertaken uniformly and rigorously across the Community. This measure will open the way to greater transparency of control measures and give the industry more access to information on how the enforcement of the CFP is being managed throughout the Community.

The regulation will require member states to have monitoring and control systems for ensuring compliance with quota, conservation, structural and market measures. It will give greater powers to the Commission to supervise member states' application of the rules through their own inspectorates, and remove the previous bar on unannounced visits by Commission inspectors. Member states will be obliged to demonstrate that they have systems for penalising those found to be in breach of the rules. There is provision for future decisions to be taken on the introduction of continuous monitoring systems, including satellite surveillance, for fishing vessels. The regulation will come into force on 1 January 1994. While welcoming these developments, I made my agreement subject to seeing the text of the regulation, which is now being finalised for early adoption.

The Commission is required to make proposals, for decision by the Council before the end of 1993, on the application of the Act of Accession of Spain and Portugal. The Council considered a report on the way the rules applying to Spain and Portugal have functioned to date. I set out forcefully the interests of Britain's fishermen in this matter and secured agreement that the Commission would make its proposals in a way which fully respects the reform of the CFP agreed last December, the improved Community control system approved at the present Council, and the principle of relative stability. The Council agreed that any increase in fishing effort must be avoided.

The Council debated the present situation in the Community market for fishery products. The Commission and a majority of member states argued that the weakness of the market necessitated retention of the minimum import price and safeguard mechanisms which have been in force since February. I pointed out that the fundamental problem was one of over supply, and called for fuller analysis. The Commission will now provide a report for the next meeting of the Council in October. Meanwhile the Council decided that the current arrangements to protect the market should be kept in place until October.

The Council discussed proposed fishing agreements with Canada and Argentina and the possibility of negotiating an agreement with the Russian Federation. it was not possible at this Council to reach final agreement on any of these matters.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Living Allowance

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of those who have applied for disability living allowance and who have undergone medical examinations are awarded disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mrs. Anne Campbell, dated 25 June 1993.

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what percentage of those who have applied for disability living allowance and who have undergone medical examinations are awarded disability living allowance.

From 1 February 1992 to 31 May 1993 a total of 115,783 Disability Living Allowance (DLA) customers underwent medical examinations. Of these some 68,561 (59%) subsequently received DLA.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Environmental Policy

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his Department's policy on the purchase and use of (a) recycled paper, (b) low-energy light bulbs, (c) tropical hardwoods, (d) peat and (e) cars with catalytic converters.

Mr. Burt: The Department of Social Security's policy on the purchase and use of these items are as follows:

(a) Recycled Paper

We already use a considerable quantity of recycled material and items made from recycled paper. As a matter of policy we already use recycled products where all of the factors including cost are equal.

(b) Low Energy Lightbulbs

We actively encourage the use of low energy lighting in the Department's buildings. When buildings are being refurbished or lighting is being replaced the provision of high frequency low energy fluorescent lighting is always considered.

(c) Tropical Hardwoods

The Department has deliberately phased out the use of topical hardwoods in its furniture.

(d) Peat

Peat is purchased for use in the gardens at two buildings managed by the resettlement unit. Peat is not purchased for fuel by the Department.

Since January 1991, the Department has only acquired diesel vehicles or cars propelled by petrol and fitted with catalytic converters. Over 80 per cent. of the petrol cars in the current fleet have catalytic converters fitted.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what discussions he has had with the BMA concerning possible changes to the rules governing eligibility for invalidity benefit.

Mr. Scott: No discussions have taken place. We will consult fully on proposals for changing invalidity benefit if and when such proposals are developed.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in receipt of invalidity benefit prior to April 1992 have since been disqualified on medical grounds.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consultation with clients and social services is undertaken before any invalidity payment is stopped.

Mr. Scott: Decisions about entitlement to benefit are made by independent adjudication officers. It is for them to decide what consultation may be necessary in reaching a decision.

National Insurance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress has been made by his department working party to date on consideration of differences in tax and national insurance definitions of earnings and expenses.

Mr. Hague: The working group has already met four times and has a programme of weekly meetings through the summer. I look forward to receiving its report at the end of September.

Quarry House

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many civil servants from his Department have been transferred from London to the Benefits Agency headquarters at Leeds.

Mr. Hague: A total of 324 civil servants have moved from London to the Benefits Agency headquarters at Leeds.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the total number of people provided with relocation expenses in connection with the move to Quarry house.

Mr. Hague: A total of 513 staff have been given help with relocation expenses as a result of moving home to the Leeds area to take up posts in Quarry house.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library (a) a copy of the contract and budget for Quarry house between his Department and Norwest Holst and (b) copies of the original and final costings of Quarry house.

Mr. Hague: It is not possible to place a copy of the Norwest Holst contract and budget for Quarry house in the Library as the document is classified as being commercial-in-confidence.

Following the signing of the contract with Norwest Holst it was estimated that it would cost the Department £57·3 million to build Quarry house but it will actually cost in the region of £55·5 million.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the estimated costs for the relocation expenses of his Department's move to Quarry house.

Mr. Hague: The move to Quarry house will cost approximately £12,900,000 in relocation expenses.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much was spent in the construction and decoration of Quarry house in Leeds on (a) the heated swimming pool, (b) squash courts, (c) sports hall and gym and (d) hand-woven carpets.

Mr. Hague: These costs are included within the main building contract for Quarry house. It is not therefore possible to provide a precise figure.

A hand-woven carpet, costing £14,410 excluding VAT, has been laid on a section of the ground floor of Quarry house as part of the Quarry house project's contribution to the "Percent For Art" initiative.

Medical Assessments

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will ensure that medical assessments at DSS instigation are made accessible to the client.

Mr. Scott: Copies are made available to the claimant on request and are always included in the papers sent to the claimant if there is an appeal.

Benefits (Voluntary Assistants)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has had from charitable bodies in respect of disqualification of voluntary assistants from unemployment, sickness and invalidity benefit.

Mr. Scott: We have received a number of written representations from charitable and other bodies representing voluntary workers. In addition, on 24 November last year my noble friend the Lord Henley met representatives of the National Association of Citizens' Advice Bureaux and the Volunteer Centre UK when their concerns were discussed. On 28 April, I announced proposals to extend from 24 to 48 hours, the period during which people registered as unemployed are allowed to rearrange their voluntary activities should a job opportunity arise.

ENVIRONMENT

THORP

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a copy of the report submitted towards the end of 1992 by the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee on waste issues arising out of the proposed thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) pursuant to his answer of 7 June Official Report, column 108, when he expects to reply to the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee's proposals on nuclear waste management from reprocessing at Sellafield;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 27 January, Official Report, column 769, if he will publish the letter sent to him in October by the chairman of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee about radioactive waste arising from the reprocessing of foreign spent nuclear fuel at Sellafield.

Mr. Yeo: Since 1976, contracts by British Nuclear Fuels plc—BNFL—to reprocess overseas spent fuel have contained return of waste options. In 1986, the Government confirmed that it was their intention that the options should be exercised and waste returned. However, they indicated that the option of substituting an equivalent quantity, in radiological terms, of more highly radioactive wastes in place of wastes of lower radioactivity was worthy of study.

British Nuclear Fuels plc has made proposals to implement the waste return options. These involve returning to each customer their allocation of vitrified high-level waste arisings, plus an additional quantity of vitrified HLW radiologically equivalent to the arisings of intermediate and low-level wastes which would be retained in the United Kingdom. British Nuclear Fuels plc has also made clear that its plans to operate the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield are not dependent on these proposals for substitution being agreed; nor would it wish to proceed with substitution if there were environmental detriment to the United Kingdom.

The Government consider it important that the basis on which substitution might proceed is sound. Accordingly, the views of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee were sought on the technical basis of BNFL's proposals, and in particular on their likely radiological and environmental impact for the United Kingdom.

The committee has produced a first report on substitution, and I am placing a copy in the Library. However, there remain a number of technical points on which we require further information before the Government can draw any conclusions and the committee will be asked to carry out further work and submit further advice. The technical advice of the Committee will be taken into account by the Government in deciding whether BNFL should be allowed to proceed with waste substitution.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he made of the corporate plan of BNFL in considering the authorisation of radioactive discharge from THORP.

Mr. Yeo: None.

Sewage Sludge Incinerators

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many sewage sludge incinerators have been approved for construction; and what proportion of the funding of these incinerators will be borne by (a) the Exchequer and (b) the water companies.

Mr. Baldry: The construction of sewage sludge incinerators is not approved centrally. However, I understand from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution that 11 applications from water companies for authorisation of sewage sludge incinerators under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 have been, or are being, considered for approval.

None of the funding of any of these incinerators is borne by the Exchequer.

Litter

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what current steps he is taking to ensure that local authorities keep the streets free from litter.

Mr. Yeo: A cleanliness survey carried out by the Tidy Britain Group last year, to measure the impact of the litter control measures introduced in the Environmental Protection Act 1990, showed an average 13 per cent. improvement in cleanliness in the sites surveyed. Most local authorities and other public bodies have responded positively to these new powers and duties with evident improvements to the local environment.

However, there are still too many places with serious litter problems and much work still needs to be done. We are committed to reviewing the operation of the litter provisions of the Environmental Protection Act and as part of this process my Department has recently announced its intention to reconvene the litter code of practice advisory group to examine proposals for improvements in this area.

Packaging

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to encourage a nationwide system for used packaging to be taken back by industry for reprocessing.

Mr. Yeo: The Government take the view that companies involved in placing packaging on the market should take a share of the responsibility for dealing with it after it has served its original purpose. We have therefore been conducting intensive discussions with a range of industries on how they might contribute to improved recycling rates. We are still considering how best to achieve this.

Ministerial Correspondence

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the basis for the forecast in part 3 of the report of the private office directorate in his departmental report MINIS 14, that in 1992-93 it is expected ministerial correspondence will reduce from 35,000 to 30,000; and what assessment he has made of the reasons for his Department's failure to meet its target to reply to 65 per cent. of letters within three weeks of receipt.

Mr. Gummer: The forecast fall in correspondence was for the calendar year 1992 in comparison with 1991 and was expected mainly as a result of the calling of a general election, which normally significantly reduces the period during which hon. Members forward correspondence to departmental Ministers. The final correspondence total for 1992 was just over 29,500.

The target of 65 per cent. reply within three weeks was an ambitious one as it represented a 20 per cent. improvement on 1991. In the event some 56 per cent. of my Department's Ministers' correspondence with hon. Members in 1992 was answered within three weeks of receipt. This represents an improvement of 4 per cent. over 1991, and I remain determined to continue progress towards the target of 65 per cent. in future years.

Natural Resource Accounting

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on work carried out by his Department in preparing its report on natural resource accounting.

Mr. Yeo: My Department are not preparing any such report.

Environmental Evaluation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been achieved in his review of the application of the guide to the use of economic instruments and the reform of the system for environmental evaluation across Government Departments.

Mr. Baldry: We are still preparing our guide to the use of economic instruments, and hope to publish it soon. We issued our guide to environmental appraisal at the end of 1991, and are currently looking at its effectiveness.

Council Tax

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in which European languages his Department's booklet on the council tax is available; and what consideration was given to making it available in further such languages.

Mr. Tony Baldry: The information leaflets about the council tax produced by my Department are published in three European languages other than English—Welsh, Greek and Turkish—and nine other languages.

My Department's main aim in producing these leaflets has been to make the council tax easily understood. The final choice of languages was made in the light of consultation with the Central Office of Information.

Waste Management Papers

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the reasons for the postponement of publication of revisions of waste management papers.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean) to my hon. Friend the Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans) on 29 April at column 470. The delay to the regulations under part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 has meant the postponement of a revised edition of waste management paper No. 4 which will give advice on licensing of waste management facilities under the Act and the postponement of waste management paper No. 26A which will give advice related to section 39 of the Act.

Water Metering

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the results of the national water metering trials.

Mr. Yeo: Two interim reports covering the installation phase of the national water metering trials were published by the water industry in 1989 and 1990. A final report covering other aspects of the trials will be published by the industry shortly. Copies will be placed in the Library.

Architects

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the responses he has received to (a) the consultation paper on the issues paper of the review of the Architects (Registration) Acts 1931-1969 and (b) the Warne report; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The responses to the issues paper for the review of the Acts are available for inspection by appointment in the library of my Department. We have received many comments on the Warne report, but it is for those making the comments to decide whether to publish. I also refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson) on 2 February, at column 89.

Homeless People (Lincoln's Inn Fields)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people sleeping out were removed from Lincoln's Inn Fields in March; how many of these people have been found (a) hostel accommodation and (b) permanent accommodation; how many are still living in their allocated accommodation; and how many are receiving follow-up support.

Sir George Young: In November 1992, as a part of independent research into the Government's £96 million rough sleepers initiative—RSI—a count was made of people sleeping rough in central London. Around 100 people were found sleeping in Lincoln's Inn Fields. The Department provided almost £100,000 under the RSI to fund a team of outreach and resettlement workers to assess the housing and care needs of people sleeping rough in the fields, and to ensure so far as was possible that both were met. The Department also provided funding for extra hostel places, to help people sleeping rough in the fields to have the greatest chance of starting a new life away from the streets.

The outreach and resettlement team contacted all those known to sleep in the fields and all were offered accommodation. They rehoused 91 people before the fields were fenced off by the London borough of Camden in March this year. Of those 91 people, 37 are currently in hostel or other temporary accommodation; 34 are in permanent housing, provided either by LB Camden or through the RSI; and 20 people have voluntarily left their accommodation, of whom eight are known to have returned to the streets. Resettlement support is availabe to all people who, in the opinion of the resettlement team, require it.

Sellafield

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he received the inspector's report following public consultation on the draft revised authorisations for the Sellafield site; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I received the inspectorates' report on 21 May. My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and I have been giving careful consideration to the report.

The inspectorates, in discharging their responsibilities under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960, have addressed in their report the issues raised during the consultation process which relate to the environmental acceptability of radioactive discharges from the Sellafield site. Having carefully considered all the comments made by the respondents to this consultation, the inspectorates have concluded that no points of substance have been raised that should cause them to reconsider the terms of the draft authorisations, save for some minor amendments/corrections. In their judgment, the provisions of the draft authorisations would effectively protect human health, the safety of the food chain, and the environment generally.

However a substantial number of the responses raised questions as to the justification for the operation of the thermal oxide reprocessing plant—THORP—and therefore whether that part of the site's total discharges arising from this plant should be allowed. Other respondents expressed their support for THORP. These questions were not dealt with by the inspectorates because of the wider issues raised.

In these circumstances, my right hon. Friend and I propose that there should be a further round of consultation in which these questions can be considered. My officials are writing to British Nuclear Fuels plc seeking further information. I shall make their reply available for public comment, together with other material. My right hon. Friend and I do not propose to take final decisions on the exercise of our functions under the Act until after this further consultation.

Carbon Dioxide Conference

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish the report of the carbon dioxide conference held at the Queen Elizabeth II conference centre on 7 May.

Mr. Yeo: I have today placed copies of the report in the Library.

Public Appointments

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the names, occupations and current employers of those who currently hold positions in each public body to which he makes appointments; if he will make a statement on the considerations taken into account when making such appointments; and if he will list details of the posts and salaries or allowances payable which have changed since the publication of "Public Bodies 1992".

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 25 June 1993]: No central record is maintained of all the names, or of the occupations and current employers of members currently holding positions in the public bodies for which I am responsible.

Appointments are to a wide range of bodies and widely different qualities and experience may be required for different tasks. Some appointments call for relevant experience or expert knowledge of a specific subject or sector. Others require no particular specialist knowledge or experience. Interests, location and time commitments may also be relevant.

Information on salaries or allowances payable which have changed since the publication of "Public Bodies 1992" has yet to be collated by my Department and could be provided now only at disproportionate cost.

PA Management Consultants

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the projects undertaken by PA Management Consultants for his Department in the last three years.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 15 June 1993]: The consultancy contracts awarded by my Department to PA Management Consultants over the last three years are as follows:

List of projects undertaken by PA management consultants for the DOE in the last three years

Provision of PSA (IT) Projects Board director
Systems development for the PSA IT operational system (CONQUEST)
IT support for the PSA PROMIS 1 and 2 systems
Support in developing PSA Projects' marketing function and to marketing unit pre-sale
PSA—IT and marketing support
Performance of firms in rural areas
Improving links between MINIS, line management systems and job descriptions
Recruitment of inspectors for the Pollution Inspectorate
Pollution control for pesticide production processes
Microbiological treatment of low level waste
Project management support to the RIMNET national radiological and nuclear emergency response system
Extension of contract competitive tendering in local government
Computerising the assessment of future need for subsidised housing
Future needs for subsidised housing
High technology factory case study
Environmental management systems and the Building Research Establishment assessment method
Scientific staff recruitment in the Building Research Establishment
A review of computer security in the Building Research Establishment
Recruitment of casual statisticians
Studies of dishwashers and washing machines to provide information required to establish ECO-labelling criteria
Treatment of programme expenditure in departmental resource accounts

SCOTLAND

Timex

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what dates discussions were held between Timex and his Department with regard to the future of the plant in Dundee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: There were numerous contacts in recent months between the Department and Timex management both here and in the United States of America, the latest of which was on the eve of the company's announcement on 15 June 1993 that its Dundee operation was to close.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial assistance was (a) sought and (b) offered to Timex in recent discussions on the future of the plant in Dundee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: I can confirm that the recent discussions between the Department and senior Timex management covered the scope which might have existed to assist in the continued development of the Dundee plant, had the company decided to retain its operation there. These discussions were wide-ranging, but as is the case with all such contacts with companies, subject to the constraints of commercial confidentiality.

Environmental Policy

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his Department's policy on the purchase and use of (a) recycled paper, (b) low-energy light bulbs, (c) tropical hardwoods, (d) peat and (e) cars with catalytic converters.

Mr. Lang: The Scottish Office currently uses recycled paper for headed notepaper, office notices, envelopes and high-volume litho work. My staff monitor progress by manufacturers in this field and seek to extend the use of recycled paper when practicable. Low-energy light bulbs are used whenever that is feasible, and new energy-efficient fittings are installed as resources permit. Contracts for furniture and fittings specify that only woods from sustainable forests may be used in their manufacture. My Department does not purchase or use peat. Our policy is to replace petrol-burning engines with diesel across the full range of transport operations. All new vehicles are ordered with diesel engines wherever possible. Remaining petrol units operate on unleaded fuel and have catalytic converters fitted as standard equipment.

Woodlands

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assistance he is giving to develop the second wood of Caledon; and if he will make a statement on progress to date.

Sir Hector Monro: [holding answer 18 June 1993:] Special grants are available under the Forestry Commission's woodland grant scheme to encourage the creation of new native pinewoods and the regeneration and management of existing ones. Some 4,200 hectares of native pinewoods have been established under the scheme since 1989.

The Forestry Commission also has a programme to restore and extend native pinewoods on its own estate. By the end of the decade it aims to have protected the 3,000 hectares of existing native pinewoods and extended them by creating regeneration zones of a further 3,000 hectares.

A Caledonian pinewood register is being compiled by the commission. When completed at the end of the year this will record details of all genetically sustainable pinewoods recognised as genuinely native and will provide the basis for future conservation work. Other recent developments by the commission in this area include the setting up of a native woodlands advisory panel to advise on ways of stimulating and encouraging initiatives intended to promote the establishment and management of native woodlands in the Highlands; the appointment of two full-time advisers on native woodland silviculture; and the launch of a Highland birchwoods initiative to restore and extend the birchwoods and to promote their sustainable management for timber production and conservation.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people are directly employed by the Forestry Commission in each region and in total.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 22 June 1993]: The Forestry Commission does not maintain records of its staff numbers by local authority regions, and this information could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The commission directly employs 2,095 staff in Scotland, of whom 364 work in its headquarters office in Edinburgh.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current value of the assets of the Forestry Commission.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 22 June 1993]: The latest valuation of the Forestry Commission's assets, as published in its annual report for the year ended 31 March 1992, was £2,949·5 million.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the accounted value of the assets of the Forestry Commission; and what advice he has received as to the current price obtainable on the market for these assets.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 23 June 1993]: The latest valuation of the Forestry Commission's assets, as published in its annual report for the year ended 31 March 1992, was £2,949·5 million. This included plantations—£2,787·9 million—and other assets—net value £161·6 million. The value of the plantations was calculated from the expected future value of the wood production at the time of felling, less the management costs, discounted at the commission's target rate of return of 3 per cent. The market value of the plantations was estimated to be £1,700 million.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the various objections which can prevent public access to land sold by the Forestry Commission under the arrangements made in October 1991.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 22 June 1993]: The arrangements under which the Forestry Commission offers to enter into access agreements with local authorities in respect of woodlands to be sold cannot apply in the following circumstances:

sales arising from the exercise of reserved powers in the commission's title, such as a landlord's right to resume possession of a leased area;
sales to former owners under the Government's offer-back (Crichel Down) procedures;
sales for public purposes such as highway improvements;
sales involving a change in land use for which planning permission has been granted; and boundary adjustments which have no impact on public access.

Some Forestry Commission woodlands are also subject to rights and interests held by third parties which could affect public access. In such cases, the completion of an access agreement with the local authority would be subject to the third party's acceptance. In addition, where the title to a woodland being sold contains reserved rights—to the working of minerals, for example—any agreement would be made subject to the exercise of those rights.

Drugs and Alcohol

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many health education professionals are advising on drugs and alcohol who are in touch with Scottish schools (a) currently and (b) for each year since 1988.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 24 June 1993]: The information requested is not held centrally.

Forestry

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were employed in forestry and forest nursery woodlands activities in each year between 1987-88 and 1991-92 in the United Kingdom.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 24 June 1993]: The estimated numbers of people employed in forestry in Great Britain are as follows. These include people working for the Forestry Commission, private estates, forest management companies, harvesting companies, forest nurseries and wood processing companies. Employment in Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

|---|---|
| 1988 | 39,850 |
| 1989 | 41,055 |
| 1990 | 40,245 |
| 1991 | 42,213 |
| 1992 | 42,040 |

Assisted Areas

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many meetings he had with the European Commission prior to the submission of the assisted areas map on 15 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 23 June 1993]: My officials, in concert with officials from the Department of Trade and Industry and the Welsh Office, held informal meetings with the European Commission prior to the submission being sent.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the criteria submitted by his Department to the European Commission in connection with the submission of the assisted areas map to the European Commission on 15 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 23 June 1993]: In order not to prejudice negotiation with the European Commission no information on the proposed assisted areas map will be released until approval has been received.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he had with regional and district councils prior to the submission of the assisted areas map to the European Commission on 15 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 23 June 1993]: Discussions took place with a number of local authorities about the review of the assisted areas map. I had meetings specifically to discuss the review with delegations from Central region—including representatives from Central regional council, Clackmannan district council, Falkirk district council and Stirling district council—East Lothian district council and Midlothian district council. The views expressed at these meetings were noted and together with the written responses to our consultation paper, were taken fully into account in the review.

Non-departmental Organisations

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the operating costs for non-departmental bodies in Scotland individually and cumulatively for each year since 1978.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 24 June 1993]: Information is not centrally available in the precise form requested. However details of staff numbers employed by each executive non-departmental public body are published annually in "Public Bodies" copies of which are available in the Library. This publication also contains the total expenditure of each executive non-departmental public body; and details of numbers and remuneration of the chairman, deputy chairman and members of each non-departmental public body. Most such bodies also publish annual reports and accounts, again available in the Library.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to introduce new mechanisms within the Scottish Office to ensure that non-departmental public bodies in Scotland are properly financially accountable, in terms both of their operating costs and their expenditure.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 24 June 1993]: The arrangements for ensuring the financial accountability of non-departmental public bodies and that they comply with the requirements of "Government Accounting" are kept under constant review. In particular both the internal controls operated by each executive body and the relationships with the department are examined in depth in formal financial management reviews. These reviews are on a rolling programme, with each body being dealt with every five years. Advisory bodies do not undertake expenditure on their own account.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sums of money non-departmental public bodies have spent in Scotland in each year since 1978.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 24 June 1993]: Details of expenditure by executive non-departmental public bodies, that part of it funded by government, and other departmental expenditure on such bodies are published annually in "Public Bodies" copies of which are available in the Library. That publication also contains details of departmental expenditure on advisory bodies; such bodies do not undertake expenditure on their own account.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many appointments he has made each year since 1990 to non-departmental public bodies in Scotland; and what were the financial consequences of these appointments.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 24 June 1993]: In 1990 I made 308 appointments to non-departmental public bodies, of which 48 were salaried and 73 fee paid. The total salary cost is £462,361. In 1991 I made 248 appointments of which 40 were salaries and 43 fee paid with a total salary cost of £421,218. Between 1 January and 1 September 1992 I made 267 appointments, 50 salaried and seven fee paid. The total salary cost is £289,998.

It is not possible to give the total amount paid in fees. The rates of fee for fee paid appointments is published in "Public Bodies", which is available in the Library. The remaining appointments were unpaid.

The information held on the central database in my Department is as at 1 September 1992, and that is the date of the information I have just given. Because of the way in which the information is held, appointments made in 1990 and 1991 which had expired before 1 September 1992 are not shown and neither are appointments to children's panels, other than chairmen or deputy chairmen, or as justices of the peace, neither of which are held on the central database. Information on salaries and fees are also at 1 September 1992. Information on allowances and travel and subsistence costs are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what mechanisms exist within the Scottish Office to ensure that non-departmental public bodies in Scotland are financially accountable, in terms both of their operating costs and their expenditure.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 24 June 1993]: The financial accountability of non-departmental public bodies is assured by the provision of their governing statutes and the conditions set out for individual bodies in accounts directions, financial memoranda, and management statements under which they receive grants and other funding from my Department. These conditions apply the rules of "Government Accounting" and the provisions of "Non Departmental Public Bodies: a Guide for Departments" to the activities of such bodies. My Department also undertakes detailed monitoring of the activities of such bodies, the detailed arrangements depending on the individual circumstances of each body.

Kingsmeadow School, Haddington

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the circumstances in which Kingsmeadow primary school in Haddington has been destroyed by fire; and what arrangements he will make to help Lothian regional council to safeguard the education of pupils in Haddington and to rebuild the school.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 24 June 1993]: Both my right hon. Friend and I were saddened to hear of the destruction caused by the recent fire at Kings Meadow primary school and understand the distress which the loss of the building will cause to everyone associated with the school. We understand that the preliminary assessment is that the fire was malicious and is subject to further police investigation. Lothian regional council, as education authority, is responsible for alternative arrangements for the pupils and for decisions about the future rebuilding of the school.

TRANSPORT

Rail Freight

11. Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what initiatives he is taking to increase the volume of freight carried by rail.

Mr. Macgregor: We have authorised British Rail investment of over £400 million in preparation for channel tunnel freight services and have asked British Rail to explore opportunities for involving the private sector to develop them further. Open access for freight will break

British Rail's monopoly and allow new operators to provide the services the customer wants. I have also announced three important new measures to boost the prospects for rail freight—improvements to the existing freight facilities grant scheme; the introduction of a new grant scheme to assist with Railtrack's charges; and consultation on a proposal for a lorry weight incentive of 44 tonnes for vehicles delivering to railheads.

Bus Accidents

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) fatalities and (b) injuries have occurred involving buses and (i) other buses, (ii) other road vehicles and (iii) pedestrians in each year since 1986.

Mr. Key [holding answer 24 June 1993]: Casualties in accidents involving buses are not readily available for the accident groupings requested. The table shows pedestrian casualties, and casualties in other vehicles and in buses, in those accidents involving at least one bus for the years requested.

Casualties in accidents involving at least one bus with other road user groups, by casualty type and severity: Great Britain 1986-1991

Casualties

| | Road user group | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| | Pedestrian[1] | Other road vehicles[2] | Bus[3] |

[1] Excludes bus user and driver casualties and casualties from other road vehicles which may be involved in the accident.
[2] Excludes bus user and driver casualties and pedestrian casualties involved in the accident.
[3] Casualties in accidents involving at least two buses. Excludes casualties in other vehicles and pedestrians which may also be involved in multi-bus accidents.

British Rail Pension Fund

12. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to provide that the British Rail pension fund will be used for no other purpose than the provision of pensions.

Mr. MacGregor: Yes. BR pension funds will be used for no other purpose than the provision of pensions.

Bicycles (Rail Journeys)

13. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what future plans he has for regulating the charging of the conveyance of bicycles on short rail journeys.

Mr. Freeman: We have no plans for regulation of charges but where there is a reasonable level of demand, we expect privatisation franchisees to encourage cyclists to use the Railways.

Trains (Leasing)

14. Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects orders to be placed for rolling stock using the £150 million leasing fund made available in the 1992 autumn statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the member for Ryedale (Mr. Greenway) earlier today.

Wild Flowers (Highways)

15. Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy on wild flowers along highways.

Mr. Key: We carry out and encourage the planting of native species of wildflowers wherever appropriate. Last Thursday I launched the wild flower handbook. This will act as a welcome stimulus to road planners and designers in carrying out work which I regard as very important.

A13 (Improvements)

17. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by what date he expects the three road improvement schemes for the A13 in the London borough of Newham to be completed.

Mr. Norris: The Canning Town flyover and Ironbridge improvement schemes are expected to be completed by 1998. The junction improvements A13/A112 and A13/A117 are expected to be completed in 1997.

The progress on all these schemes is subject to satisfactory completion of statutory procedures and to the necessary funds being available.

West Coast Main Line

18. Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of British Rail to discuss services on the west coast main line.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend regularly meets the chairman of British Rail to discuss a variety of railway issues.

26. Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what support his Department has given to British Rail's request to improve the rolling stock on the west coast main line.

Mr. Freeman: An order for new InterCity 225 trains for the west coast main line is one of two options currently being considered to utilise the £150 million leasing facility made available to British Rail in last year's autumn statement. The choice between the two options is entirely a matter for British Rail in the light of their negotiation with the suppliers and their lessors.

22. Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the need for replacement of the rolling stock on the west coast main line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: It is for British Rail to decide when rolling stock should be replaced. New trains for the west coast main line are one of the options they are pursuing for the £150 million leasing facility announced in last year's autumn statement.

M5 Widening

19. Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the widening of the M5 between junctions 6 and 8.

Mr. Key: Widening will relieve congestion on this important link and holiday route between the midlands, south Wales and the south west. Use of the parallel widening technique has avoided the need for contraflows and caused minimal disruption to traffic with the work being substantially complete within two years of the start of construction. I visited the site last week to unveil a commemorative plaque and was pleased to see that both three-lane carriageways will be open to traffic within three to four weeks.

Jubilee Line Extension

20. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects work to start on the Jubilee line extension; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend, the Member for Castle Point (Dr. Spink).

Coastal Waters (Safety)

21. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress he has made in the European Transport Council regarding safety in British coastal waters.

Mr. Norris: At the June Transport Council, a resolution was adopted with the strong support of my right hon. Friend, which sets out an action programme of priority measures to improve the safety of shipping throughout the community, including our own coastal waters. We shall seek speedy implementation of the measures proposed. At the same council, my right hon. Friend announced that the United Kingdom will unilaterally pursue higher safety standards for ferries serving United Kingdom ports.

Railways (Service)

23. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many stations or railway lines won a cup from British Rail for service to customers last year.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail, in consultation with user groups and others, organises several categories of award to stations in recognition of quality and service to customers. In addition to the British Railways best station competition, there is the Glasdon award for environmental excellence, the Geoffrey Farr award for community involvement, the London Regional Passengers Committee award for best London termini, the Anglo-Irish best station award, and the Lord Mountevans trophy. A total of 24 such awards were made in 1992.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

24. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will visit Thurrock to meet householders and representatives of industry affected by the alteration in the proposed line of route for the channel tunnel link which he announced in March.

Mr. Freeman: Union Railways is taking the lead in a full public consultation process on the channel tunnel rail link, including in Thurrock. A report will be prepared when consultation has been completed and so the Government will be properly informed on local opinion in reaching final decisions on the route.

Ms Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the next Union Railways report on the channel tunnel rail link consultation will be published; and if he proposes to publish it in full.

Mr. Freeman: At the end of October Union Railways will submit a report to the Government on the options for refining the rail link identified during public consultation. Decisions will then be reached and most of the report will be published, but excluding commercially confidential material.

Ms Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the railway inspectorate started work in examining the possible safety risks concerning the channel tunnel rail link running at high speeds through residential areas of the London borough of Barking and Dagenham.

Mr. Freeman: Discussions have already taken place between British Rail and the Health and Safety Executive's HM railway inspectorate about the various safety issues relating to the channel tunnel rail link. The assessment of safety risks for the route proposed by Union Railways is being carried out in a structured fashion. Union Railways intends to maintain a programme of discussions with the inspectorate and other authorities and is expected to present a safety case at key stages of the development of the project.

Ms Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria were applied to the compensation and purchase schemes in respect of the channel tunnel rail link in (a) Kent and (b) the London borough of Barking and Dagenham; and what reasons underlie the differences in the criteria in (a) and (b).

Mr. Freeman: The proposed arrangements for the route of the rail link as a whole are set out in the paper "DOT—Paper for the High Level Forum: Property Purchase and Compensation Policy". Copies have been placed in the Library and I also sent one to the hon. Member. Earlier purchase schemes, which covered broader zones, were applied to Kent and the then affected part of London—mainly Peckham. The reasons for the proposed change in coverage are explained in the paper.

Ms Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if a full environmental impact assessment has been carried out on the proposed channel tunnel rail link; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Environmental appraisal is a continuing process throughout the development of the project. The results of the most recent stage in the process are described in the appendix "The Union Railway and the Environment" to the Union Railways' March 1993 report. Additonal appraisal is being undertaken which will enable the environmental statement to be produced, in accordance with standing orders, when statutory approval for the project is sought.

Concessionary Fares (London)

25. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current cost of the statutory London concessionary fare scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: This year the cost of the London boroughs' scheme is £116 million.

Franchised Passenger Services

27. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what response he has had from British Rail management and staff to running franchised passenger services.

Mr. MacGregor: There has been a very positive response. Management-employee buy-out teams have expressed interest in bidding for most of the 25 franchises we have announced.

Signposting (Isle of Wight)

28. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about signposting on the Isle of Wight.

Mr. Key: My predecessor saw a deputation from the county council in March and I have received representations from my hon. Friend which I am looking forward to discussing with him shortly.

Channel Tunnel (Rail Freight)

29. Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on the construction of rail freight depots to take advantage of the opening of the channel tunnel.

Mr. Freeman: The Government welcome the new opportunities presented by the channel tunnel for rail freight. Decisions about the number and location of terminals are commercial matters for British Rail and the private sector. British Rail has selected nine sites for intermodal terminals in the light of independent market research.

Traffic Congestion

30. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the pollutant effects of stationary and slow-moving traffic; and what plans he has to relieve congestion in urban areas.

Mr. Key: The quality of urban air review group—QUARG—a group of independent experts, issued its first report in January of this year, and copies have been placed in the Library.

The Government are considering a number of initiatives which could have the effect in the longer term of reducing the rate of traffic growth.

Pensioners' Travel Passes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to ensure pensioners using London Transport continue to have a free travel pass when London's public transport is deregulated.

Mr. Norris: When we bring forward legislation to deregulate London bus services we shall include provisions to ensure the continuation of a London-wide concessionary fares scheme after deregulation. The level of concessions offered will, as now, be for the London boroughs to determine.

Environmental Policy

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's policy on the purchase and use of (a) recycled paper, (b) low-energy light bulbs, (c) tropical hardwoods, (d) peat and (e) cars with catalytic converters.

Mr. Norris: Subject to securing best value for money, the Department's procurement policy is to promote the use of recycled paper, low energy light bulbs, sustainable alternatives to tropical hardwoods, peat free compost and cars with catalytic converters.

Rail Services (Portsmouth)

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what improvements are in his Department's present plans for rail services between Portsmouth and London.

Mr. Freeman: Rail services between Portsmouth and London are at present operated by Network SouthEast's south western division. We announced in February of this year that the south western division is to be one of the first franchises to be offered to the private sector. We expect the franchise to start some time in 1995. We believe that giving the private sector the opportunity to operate existing services and introduce new ones is the best way to bring about the improvements to services which passengers want.

Blackwall Crossing

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what considerations underlay his decision to publish only section 12 of the cost-benefit analysis used in selecting his Department's preferred option of a bridge, rather than a tunnel, for the A102 Blackwall third crossing; if he intends to publish this analysis in full before the end of the consultation phase; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Copies of the full technical appraisal report for the A102 Blackwall third crossing river bridge are available for inspection at the Department's London docklands division, South Quay Plaza II, 183 Marsh wall, London, E14 9SH. As he requested, I sent the hon.

Member an advance copy of section 12 which deals solely with the cost benefit analysis. He is now being sent a copy of the full report.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 17 May, Official Report, column 4, at what stage of a scheme a formal environmental assessment is prepared; when he expects to have one completed on the preferred option of a bridge for the A102 Blackwall third crossing; if he intends to make public this assessment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Environmental assessments are carried out throughout the development of highway schemes. The formal environmental impact assessment is prepared and published with the draft orders for the chosen scheme. In the case of the proposed third river crossing at Blackwall, this is expected to be in about two years time.

Road Signs

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy on keeping road signs clear of foliage; and how it is enforced.

Mr. Key: The trunk roads and motorways for which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is the highway authority are regularly inspected. We have issued instructions to our maintenance agents on the need to cut back vegetation where this obscures sight lines for drivers or their view of traffic signs. We have strongly advised local highway authorities to follow the Department's guidance and standards for maintenance of signs on other roads, and similar standards have been incorporated into the Local Authority Associations' "Code of Good Practice on Highways Maintenance", but we do not have powers to force local highway authorities to comply with them.

Motor Insurance

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State of Transport what consideration he is giving to the introduction of a legislative requirement that motorists display proof of insurance on windscreens.

Mr. Key: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 23 June 1993 at column 171 to my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Duncan).

East-west Trunk Route

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration his Department is giving to an alternative east-west trunk route to the A418 in Buckinghamshire.

Mr. Key: I expect to make an announcement this summer about alternative corridors for the east-west route to the west of Aylesbury. Elsewhere in Buckinghamshire a planning inquiry has just been completed into the county council proposals for an A418 bypass of Wing and we expect to consult the public about the A418 west of Aylesbury to Wing bypass section of the east-west route later this summer.

Rail Travel Costs

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has made of the likely change in the cost of travelling to work in London under rail privatisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The franchising director will be able to control fares through franchise agreements, and we have announced our intention to bring forward amendments to the Railways Bill to place a statutory duty on him to care for the interests of passengers using his judgment of what is a reasonable level of fares.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has made of the comparative cost of travelling to work in London and other European capitals.

Mr. Norris: The Department has not made comparative estimates of travel-to-work costs for London and other European capitals. Such a comparison would need to take into account a wide range of factors which vary from country to country.

British Rail (Lease Finance)

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions his Department is having with British Rail about further tranches of lease finance for replacement rolling stock.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on Friday 25 June 1993 at column 283.

Petrol Facilities

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the distance on the A414 between the A414/A12 junction and Sandon service station.

Mr. Key: Approximately 1.3 km—0·8 miles.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will reconsider the decision given to the hon. Member for Chelmsford in his letter of 11 June not to allow fuel pump flash signs on the junction of the A414/A12; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: No. I am satisfied that the decision taken is the right one. The facilities provided at Sandon service station do not meet the criteria laid down by the Department. The Department's policy on such signing guards against a proliferation of signs to services at some distance from the trunk road.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport under what criteria emergency roadsigns have been installed on the M40 drawing to motorists' attention the availability of petrol for sale at distances of greater than a mile from the M40.

Mr. Key: Apart from a reduction in the minimum permitted spacing of motorway services announced August 1992, the longstanding criteria governing the location of services to be signed on a motorway remain unchanged. The 1991 decision to sign temporarily off-motorway fuel and lavatory facilities from the M40 in Oxfordshire and Warwickshire was taken to meet exceptional circumstances. The signs will be removed when permanent motorway service areas are available.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has made of the level of traffic using the A414 from the A414/A12 junction to Sandon service station; and what evidence underlies his conclusion that the installation of fuel pump flash signs at that junction would cause problems at the turn-off and in the local road network.

Mr. Key: Encouraging long distance through traffic to divert from the trunk road to Sandon service station would inevitably lead to extra pressure on the A12/A414 junction and adjoining local roads. When the A12 Chelmsford bypass was opened, temporary service signs were agreed only until such time as services with direct or easy access to the A12 were available. As other suitable facilities now exist adjacent to A12 there are neither overriding grounds nor need to divert traffic from the main route.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what petrol facilities are available to motorists on the A12 between the M25 and the A414/A12 junction; and what is the distance between the M25 and the A414/A12 junction.

Mr. Key: There are services adjacent to Brook street interchange on the old A12 and also at Brentwood North, A12/A1023 junction. It is approximately 24 km—15 miles—between M25 and A414/A12 junction and only a further 5 km—three miles—to Boreham interchange.

Fares

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the annual percentage change in fares for (a) British Rail Network SouthEast, (b) London Underground and (c) London Buses for each of the years since 1979; and what was the annual rate of inflation for each of those years.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is given in the table.

Annual percentage change

| | Fares | | | Retail Price Index |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | London Bus | London Underground | NSE | |
| 1979 | 13·7 | 14·7 | 9·6 | 13·4 |
| 1980 | 38·1 | 35·3 | 22·3 | 18·0 |
| 1981 | 6·6 | 2·9 | 18·3 | 11·9 |
| 1982 | 24·1 | 26·0 | 8·5 | 8·6 |
| 1983 | 1·9 | 4·4 | 7·4 | 4·6 |
| 1984 | −8·4 | −13·4 | 6·7 | 5·0 |
| 1985 | 9·1 | 7·7 | 7·2 | 6·1 |
| 1986 | 7·0 | 5·9 | 7·5 | 3·4 |
| 1987 | 3·0 | 5·3 | 5·0 | 4·1 |
| 1988 | 10·5 | 9·5 | 6·2 | 4·9 |
| 1989 | 11·8 | 12·6 | 9·2 | 7·8 |
| 1990 | 8·5 | 9·6 | 8·6 | 9·5 |
| 1991 | 10·9 | 11·2 | 10·8 | 5·9 |
| 1992 | 7·6 | 7·8 | 7·6 | 3·7 |

Public Appointments

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the names, occupations and current employers of those who currently hold positions in each public body to which he makes appointments; if he will make a statement on the considerations taken into account when making such appointments; and if he will list details of the posts and salaries or allowances payable which have changed since the publication of "Public Bodies 1992".

Mr. Norris [holding answer 25 June 1993]: Lists of names, occupations and current employers of persons appointed to public bodies by my right hon. Friend are not held centrally and up-to-date lists could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The considerations taken into account by him when making appointments will vary according to the needs of the body concerned and any statutory requirements relevant to it.

The main changes in data on posts, salaries and allowances, since it was provided for "Public Bodies 1992", is as follows:

British Railways Board. All salaries were increased by 1·5 per cent. for 1992-93, giving a salary of £216,195 for the chairman; the person listed in the deputy chairman column has left the board and a new part-time vice-chairman has been appointed at a salary of £120,000; one of the members in the £65,001-£70,000 salary band has left the board; and there are now eight members—six male and two female—in the £5,001-£10,000 band.

Civil Aviation Authority. There are now no members in the £25,000-£30,000 salary band; one instead of two in the £20,001-£25,000 band; one instead of nil in the £15,001-£20,000 band; and five members, one of whom is female, instead of four male members in the £10,001-£15,000 band.

London Regional Transport. The salary of the chairman is now £111,030; the part-time deputy chairman has retired and the salary of his successor, a full-time member who is also chief executive, is £100,000. Following changes to board membership and a reallocation of responsibilities, changes in distribution between salary bands are:

|---|---|
| 3M | £30,001-40,000 |
| 1M | £20,001-30,000 |
| 3M, 1F | £10,001-20,000 |
| 1F | £ 5,001-10,000 |

Executive Bodies. The remuneration of the three part-time members of Trinity House lighthouse service nominated by my right hon. Friend is now £6,325; and the salary of the traffic director for London is £61,530.

Advisory Bodies. Fee rates shown have been increased from £126 to £153 and from £96 to £117.

Traffic Commissioners Licensing Authorities. Six traffic commissioners now come within the £40,001-£45,000 salary band and one in the £45,001-£50,000 band. The fee rate for deputy commissioners—now 15 male and one female—is £177.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Solicitors to the Police

Ms Walley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to require the Law Society immediately to report known cases of dishonest practice by solicitors to the police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Law Society is an independent body, regulated by statute. Section 32(4) of the Solicitors Act 1974 gives the Law Society the power to report dishonest practice, where there is prima facie evidence of it, to the Director of Public Prosecutions and it is a matter for it to decide when it should do so.

Debtors' Addresses

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to give powers to county courts to obtain debtors' current addresses when the courts have made an order in favour of a creditor, and to pass that information on to creditors or their representatives.

Mr. John M. Taylor: There are currently no plans to give county courts powers to obtain debtors' current addresses when the courts have made an order in favour of a creditor.

Market Testing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much his Department spent on legal advice regarding the implications of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 for the market-testing programme.

Mr. John M. Taylor: From April 1992 to May 1993 inclusive, the Lord Chancellor's Department has spent £1,850 on legal advice regarding the implications of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 for the market-testing programme. All advice was provided in-house.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Sexual Abuse Cases

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Attorney-General how many sexual abuse cases were referred to the Crown Prosecution Service in 1992-93; how many were not proceeded with (a) due to staleness and (b) in total; and how many cases where the Crown Prosecution Service was satisfied as to the sufficiency of the evidence were not proceeded with.

The Attorney-General: The information sought by the hon. Member is not centrally recorded, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Market Testing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much his Department spent on legal advice regarding the implications of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 for the market-testing programme.

Mr. Jack: Since November 1991 the Department has spent no money on the provision of external legal advice regarding the implications of the TUPE Regulations 1981.

Over the period November 1991 to June 1993 the matter has been looked at by the Department's own legal staff as part of their continuing duties.

Cattle Disease

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations she has received regarding imported disease in live cattle; how many incidents of diseased live imported cattle have been found by her inspectors since 1 January; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The Department has received a number of representations seeking reassurance that the single market will not increase the risk of disease entering the country through imported livestock. Since 1 January warble fly has been found in animals imported from Poland, Belgium and France, some of which were imported before that date. A case of enzootic bovine leucosis in an animal that may have been imported is also under investigation.

Forests (Sales)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list, by county, those forest areas in England currently available for sale to the private sector.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 22 June 1993]: The areas of forest land in England currently being offered for sale by the Forestry Commission on the open market are as follows:

| County and Name | Area (hectares) |
|---|---|
| Avon | |

ENVIRONMENT

Homelessness

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new proposals he has to combat homelessness.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my reply to his question of 25 June 1993 at column 330.

In addition, we have made available a further £86 million over the next three years—1993-94 to 1995-96, to continue our rough sleepers initiative in central London. A strategy document, inviting bids for funding, was issued on 16 June. Emphasis will continue to be on funding permanent accommodation in houses and flats. Resources will be targeted more tightly, to make the initiative more effective, and some of the resources will be focused on "zones", starting with the Strand. Copies of the strategy document are in the Library.

The latest quarterly homelessness statistics show an encouraging downward trend in the number of households accepted by local authorities as homeless: the number of acceptances during the first quarter of 1993 was 5 per cent. lower than in the same quarter last year. The number of households in bed-and-breakfast accommodation fell by 37 per cent.

Green Belt

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many acres of green belt have been used for urban development in the last five years; and if he will make a statement on Government policy.

Mr. Curry: Information is not available centrally in the form requested, but individual local authorities may be able to provide information about green belt decisions in their areas. Government policy is set out in "Planning Policy Guidance note 2" published by HMSO in January 1988.

Property Services Agency

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the asset value of the Property Services Agency.

Mr. Curry: The value at 31 March 1993 of PSA Services fixed assets, excluding land and buildings, is estimated as £8 million.

EC Correspondence

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress made in achieving the target of responding to all correspondence from the European Commission within agreed time limits.

Mr. Baldry: Since the beginning of the year, we have received nine formal letters from the Commission on environmental issues, requiring a reply within two months. So far we have had to send interim replies in only two cases, but we were able to follow both of them up with full responses shortly afterwards.

Statistics User Group

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made by his Department in establishing a statistics user group.

Mr. Baldry: There are well-established liaison groups covering local authority statistics. In addition, a consultative committee on construction industry statistics was set up last year. We are also considering how best to take user interests into account for statistics in other areas.

Gas Suppliers

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will conduct a survey of the savings which have been achieved by those local authorities which have switched to independent suppliers of gas.

Mr. Baldry: I have no plans to conduct such a survey. Local authorities have a duty to their taxpayers to secure value for money in their finanical affairs, including in the procurement of goods and services. It is for each local authority to decide whether value for money could be achieved by switching to an independent gas supplier.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will use the 1991 census data in compiling SSAs for 1994; and what safeguards there will be for those local education authorities whose grant is thereby reduced.

Mr. Baldry: It is our policy to use the most up-to-date information available within SSAs. For 1993-94 SSAs, population estimates based on the 1991 census were incorporated and it is intended to make use of the remaining information now available from the 1991 census for 1994-95 SSAs. We will need to consider the effect of this and the outcome of the wider review of SSAs now in progress, before finally deciding whether it will be necessary to mitigate these effects, and if so what means and to what extent.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to compensate those local education authorities which have lost revenue as a result of the use of the 1981 census data and not the 1991 census data in compiling the education SSAs for 1993-94.

Mr. Baldry: None. The SSAs for 1993-94 were compiled using the best posible information available at the time. For 1994-95 it is the intention that the information now available from the 1991 census will be incorporated.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from local authorities on the adequacy of standard spending assessments mechanisms for the tasks now being demanded of them; what account he has taken of the specific criticisms levelled by the recent Audit Commission review; and what action he proposes to take to restore confidence in the revenue support methodology.

Mr. Curry [holding answer 28 June 1993]: As part of the current review of standard spending assessments—SSAs—we have received representations from more than 140 local authorities on all aspects of the SSA system.

We welcome what the Audit Commission report "Passing the Bucks" has to say about SSAs and will consider the commission's conclusions carefully as part of our current review. The commission's finding that the system of SSAs is a more sophisticated mechanism for equalising needs than any overseas system examined in their study and that it is an improvement on its predecessor in many respects, is particularly welcome.

The current review of SSAs which is being carried out in consultation with local authority representatives shows our continuing commitment to improve the system of SSAs used to distribute revenue support grant wherever possible.

Council Tax

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements have been made for dealing with proposals to alter council tax valuations.

Mr. Curry: The Valuation Office agency (VOA) had received some 525,000 proposals to alter valuation lists in England by 25 June, the great majority in the first month of the initial appeal period. The rate at which new proposals have been received, however, has subsequently fallen significantly. While the initial appeal period does not end until 30 November 1993, the final number is likely to be substantially below earlier estimates. The overwhelming majority of appeals should therefore be settled by the end of 1994, and a high proportion well before then.

We expect the agency and valuation tribunals to have settled some 560,000 council tax banding appeals in England by 31 December 1994, just 13 months after the initial appeal period ends on 30 November 1993. Any remaining appeals will be decided as rapidly as possible in 1995.

In keeping with citizens charter principles, the agency has set standards for service for handling appeals. On receipt of a proposal the Valuation Office agency's objective will be:

- to acknowledge receipt of proposals within 14 days (against a statutory deadline of 28 days);
- to make the taxpayer an offer, within 60 days, to reband the property if the initial banding is clearly wrong;
- to let taxpayers know within 90 days if the agency believes the original banding is correct and that they intend to defend that decision; and
- in any other case, to make contact with taxpayers within 120 days and give them a named contact within the VOA for further discussion.

Council taxpayers should have their appeals settled as quickly and efficiently as possible, giving appropriate priority to identified cases of hardship. We shall monitor progress to ensure that this is so and keep our plans under review in light of developments.

Additional Educational Needs

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from local education authorities on the range of support funding now generated by the additional educational needs factor in the standard spending assessments methodology; and if he will make it his policy to look afresh at the validity of the small number of proxy indicators employed and the very heavy weighting then given to this AEN factor in determining overall assessments.

Mr. Curry [holding answer 28 June 1993]: As part of the current review of standard spending assessments—SSAs—we have received representations from more than 140 local authorities, including 57 local education authorities, on all aspects of the SSA system.

We made clear at the start of the review that we would take this opportunity to consider the range of social factors used within SSAs including the additional educational needs index and the weight placed upon them.

Building and Construction (Finance)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what survey his Department has carried out of banks' lending policies towards building and construction companies; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what steps he is taking to ensure that the building and constuction industry is given sufficient financial support to enable it to expand; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will meet representatives of the Chartered Institute of Building to discuss the institute's Bank Watch Campaign.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 28 June 1993]: Banks' lending policies are a commercial matter for the banks themselves to determine; however, I am aware of the construction industry's concern, and of the Chartered Institute of Building's Bank Watch Campaign. I regularly meet representatives of the construction industry and would expect to discuss this and other issues with them at such meetings.

HEALTH

Environmental Policy

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her Department's policy on the purchase and use of (a) recycled paper, (b) low-energy light bulbs, (c) tropical hardwoods, (d) peat and (e) cars with catalytic converters.

Mr. Sackville: The Department's aim in purchasing goods and services is to obtain the best possible value for money for the taxpayer. Where environmentally friendly products are available which fully meet our specifications and provide value for money then these are preferred. In respect of the specific products our policy is as follows:

recycled paper—we are exploring with potential suppliers as part of a competitive tendering process, the feasibility of substantially increasing the use of environmentally friendly stationery supplies.

low-energy light bulbs—a programme for changing all lighting on our departmental estate to low-energy tubes is well advanced; this also offers demonstrable long-term savings and an improved working environment.

tropical hardwoods—are not purchased.

peat—is not purchased.

cars with catalytic converters—since January 1991 we have acquired only diesel vehicles or cars propelled by petrol and fitted with catalytic converters.

Handicapped Children

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children were born either mentally or physically handicapped in each year since 1990.

Mr. Sackville: The exact information requested is not available centrally. Such information as is available centrally for 1990 is given in the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys publication "Congenital malformation statistics" series MB3 no. 6; copies of which are available in the Library. Information for 1991 and 1992 is not yet available.

Hepatitis and Dysentery

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of (a) viral hepatitis and (b) dysentery have been reported in each district health authority in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: Notifications of viral hepatitis and dysentery are not collected for district health authorities. Notifications are available for county districts and are published in the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys publication "Communicable disease statistics" series MB2; and are available in the Library. Information for 1992 has not yet been published.

Emergency Admissions

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of emergency admissions to (a) the Doncaster Royal and Montagu trust, (b) the Tickhill Road hospital in Doncaster and (c) to hospitals in the Trent regional health authority in 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Sackville: The number of non-elective admissions in the general and acute specialties provided by national health service hospitals in Trent region and by Doncaster Royal infirmary and Montagu NHS trust and Doncaster Healthcare NHS trust—of which Tickhill Road hospital is a part—for 1991-92 and 1992-93 are shown in the table.

| Year | Doncaster Royal Infirmary and Montague Trust | Doncaster Healthcare Trust | Trent Region |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1991-92 | 22,308 | 1,948 | 333,311 |
| 1992-93 | 23,097 | 1,821 | 348,327 |

Source:
Quarterly Monitoring of Provider Activity.

Acute Beds

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many acute beds would be closed or created on current trends by the year 2001 based on (a) growth in patient activity of 1 per cent. per annum, (b) decline in length of hospital stay of 4 per cent. per annum and (c) an increase in day care surgery of 25 per cent.

Mr. Sackville: All the information required to make the proposed calculation is set out in the "Statisical Bulletin" for 1991-92, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Market Testing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much her Department spent on legal advice regarding the implications of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 for the market-testing programme.

Mr. Sackville: All legal advice on these regulations has been provided by the Department's in-house solicitors office. It is not possible to identify separately the costs.

Wessex Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place in the Library a copy of each letter sent to the chairman of the Wessex regional health authority by the Secretary of State following each annual review meeting in the years from 1986 to 1989.

Dr. Mawhinney: Copies of the letters will be placed in the Library. From 1989 annual reviews have been conducted by the chief executive of the national health service management executive with the regional general managers.

Research

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 25 May, Official Report, columns 507-8, if the funding which her Department will provide for the multidisciplinary research centre will come wholly from her existing research and development budget.

Dr. Mawhinney: Yes.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list each research project her Department currently funds in the field of primary health care, with (a) the institution in which it is based, (b) the funds provided by her Department, (c) the numbers of staff involved and (d) the start and end date.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department's research and development division currently funds and manages the following primary health care related research projects:

Project: Child Health Surveillance, including general practitioners' involvement
Institution: University of Kent
Total estimated cost: £330,815
Number of staff involved: 3
Start date: 1 October 1990
End date: 30 September 1994

Project: Ambulatory Care Research Programme
Institution: University of Newcastle
Total estimated cost: £728,938
Number of staff involved: 10
Start date: 1 January 1991
End date: 31 March 1994

Project: Randomised Controlled Trial of Coronary Risk Factor Intervention
Institution: Royal South Hampshire Hospital
Total estimated cost: £232,559
Number of staff involved: 6
Start date: 1 July 1992
End date: 30 June 1993

Project: The Health Benefits of Routine Histological Examination of GP Excision Specimens
Institution: University of Leicester
Total estimated cost: £42,609
Number of staff involved: 2
Start date: 1 June 1992
End date: 31 May 1994

Project: Evaluation of Collaborative Clinical Guidelines in Hackney General Practices
Institution: The Medical College of St. Bartholomew's
Total estimated cost: £59,794
Number of staff involved: 1
Start date: 1 October 1992
End date: 13 October 1994

Project: Breast Cancer in Remission: Follow up by GPs
Institution: University of Oxford
Total estimated cost: £74,567
Number of staff involved: 5
Start date: 1 December 1992
End date: 30 November 1994

Project: Process and Outcomes of Consultation in Primary Care
Institution: University of Wales
Total estimated cost: £37,296
Number of staff involved: 3
Start date: 1 January 1993
End date: 31 December 1994

Project: Doctor Variability
Institution: RCGP Research Unit, Birmingham
Total estimated cost: £110,780
Number of staff involved: 4
Start date: 1 January 1988
End date: 31 December 1995

Project: Retrieval of Patients from Long-Term Follow-up in Hospital Outpatient Departments
Institution: University of Manchester
Total estimated cost: £163,500
Number of staff involved: 4
Start date: 1 April 1992
End date: 31 March 1994

Project: Cross Referrals in Hospitals
Institution: University of Manchester
Total estimated cost: £70,000
Number of staff involved: 3
Start date: 1 January 1993
End date: 30 June 1994

Project: Specialist Outreach in General Practice
Institution: University of Manchester
Total estimated cost: £51,193
Number of staff involved: 3
Start date: 1 January 1993
End date: 31 December 1993

Project: Out of Hours Care in General Practice
Institution: University of Manchester
Total estimated cost: £33,000
Number of staff involved: 2
Start date: 1 January 1993
End date: 28 February 1994

Project: Death Registers and Audit of Death in General Practice
Institution: University of Newcastle
Total estimated cost: £121,157
Number of staff involved: 3
Start date: 1 October 1991
End date: 31 March 1994

Project: Evaluating the Outcomes of Treatment for Menorrhagia
Institution: University of Oxford
Total estimated cost: £56,503
Number of staff involved: 1
Start date: 3 September 1990
End date: 31 August 1993

Project: Feedback of Patient Specific Morbidity Data in Asthma: a Randomised Controlled Trial in General Practice
Institution: King's College Hospital
Total estimated cost: £198,999
Number of staff involved: 4
Start date: 1 January 1991
End date: 31 March 1994

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 25 May, Official Report, columns 507-8, what will be the prime consideration in judging tenders for the multidisciplinary research centre.

Dr. Mawhinney: The prime consideration will be the extent to which the universities concerned can provide high-quality, scientific, research-based information for the Department, in the key strategic field of primary care. Of particular importance will be intentions as to leadership, clarity of management arrangements and the commitment of the university to the centre, its funding and staff. Proposals will be expected to specify how collaboration with other funders is to be achieved. A copy of the statement of requirements for the centre for research and development in primary health care will be placed in the Library. This has been sent to all vice-chancellors, a wide range of researchers and all those inquiring.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 23 April, Official Report, column 233, if she will list for each of the 13 research units currently subject to peer review (a) the date of the site visit, (b) the end date of the unit's current contract and (c) the timetable for making decisions about the future of each unit.

Dr. Mawhinney: Site visits to two of the units have already taken place. For the remaining 11 units, five site visits are taking place over the next four months. Dates for the final six site visits are to be arranged soon and are expected to be completed in March 1994.

Current contract end dates for units are on the last day of month

| Contract | Date |
|---|---|
| Childhood Cancer Research Group | August 1994 |
| Medical Care Research Unit | March 1995 |
| Cancer Screening Evaluation Unit | May 1995 |
| National Perinatal Epidemiology Unit | June 1995 |
| Centre for Primary Care Research | June 1995 |
| Social Medicine and Health Services Research Unit | July 1995 |
| Clinical Operational Research Unit | September 1995 |
| National Institute for Social Work | October 1995 |
| Personal Social Services Research Unit | October 1995 |
| Social Policy Research Unit | December 1995 |
| Centre for Health Economics | January 1996 |
| Dartington Social Research Unit | February 1996 |
| Thomas Coram Research Unit | March 1996 |

Decisions about the future of units will be announced once the series of site visits has been completed and following due discussion and full consideration. Earlier decisions may be required, depending on the particular circumstances of the unit.

"The Health of the Nation"

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost to public funds of (a) publication, (b) conferences, (c) staff and (d) press liaison costs in connection with the paper, "The Health of the Nation".

Mr. Sackville: Total costs of publicity and communications in connection with "The Health of the Nation" Green and White Papers are shown in the table:

| Year | £'000s |
|---|---|
| 1991-92 | 1,005 |
| 1992-93 | 2,680 |
| 1993-94 | [1]1,710 |

[1] budget estimate.

This includes conference costs of £230,641 for 1991-92 and £568,885 for 1992-93.

"The Health of the Nation" is an integral part of the work of the Department and the national health service. For this reason, it is not possible to separately identify staff and press liaison costs.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the assessed accuracy, expressed in percentage terms, of census figures relating to the size of the ethnic minority communities settled in the United Kingdom; and to what extent the census figures are believed to reflect the numbers of immigrants living illegally in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sackville: The 1991 census is estimated to have counted 98·1 per cent. of the resident population of Great Britain.

No estimates are yet available of the coverage of particular ethnic groups in the census. Such estimates as are possible when the "Census Report for Great Britain on Ethnic Group and Country of Birth" is published in late summer will be included in that volume. A copy will be placed in the Library.

The census validation survey for Great Britain, carried out soon after the census to help assess coverage and quality of census statistics, will provide some information on the accuracy of answers to the ethnic group question. Preliminary results on accuracy of answers will be published in an Office of Population Censuses and Surveys monitor in the autumn. A full report will be published in 1994.

As the census contained no questions relating to nationality or immigration status, no information on these topics is available from the census.

The 1991 census in Northern Ireland did not contain a question on ethnic group.

Nurses and Midwives

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish details of the distribution of average gross weekly earnings per person for each of the NHS clinical nursing and midwifery grades, listing the percentages of each grade earning under (a) £140, (b) £150, (c) £160, (d) £170, (e) £180, (f) £190, (g) £200, (h) £210, (i) £220, (j) £230, (k) £240, (l) £250, (m) £275, (n) £300 and (o) those earning £300 and over in 1991 and 1992.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 23 June 1993]: The information is in the tables.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

HMSO

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish the terms of reference of the imminent consultancy study of HMSO.

Mr. David Davis: I am arranging for a copy to be placed in the Library.

Market Testing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much his Department spent on legal advice regarding the implications of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 for the market-testing programme.

Mr. Waldegrave: All such legal advice to my Department—including its agencies, HMSO and COI—has come from the Treasury Solicitor's Department at an estimated cost to date of £16,500.

TRANSPORT

Road Freight

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the maximum road freight movements which the existing road system can accommodate; and if he will set targets for reducing such movements.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend has made no estimates of the maximum road freight movement that can be accommodated on the existing road system, which would depend on assumptions about vehicles used, other traffic and many other variables.

He has no intention of setting targets for a reduction in such movements. It is to the advantage of the economy if generators of freight movement can choose the most appropriate mode for their purposes.

Traffic Volume

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will consider setting targets for traffic flow reductions (a) within urban areas and (b) on inter-urban roads; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the initiatives he is assessing to reduce traffic flows and the use of private vehicles; and if he will set targets for each initiative.

Mr. Key: The Government set no targets for reducing traffic flows: it is for individuals and businesses to decide where and how to travel. Nevertheless, the Government do have a responsibility to ensure that, collectively, individual decisions do not have unacceptable consequences for the environment.

Policies aimed at reducing congestion and the environmental impacts of traffic include:

—measures to reduce harmful emissions from vehicles (particularly through requiring 3-way catalytic converters to be fitted to new cars);
—the annual increases in fuel duty announced in the March budget;
—the programme of research into road pricing in London;
—high levels of investment in public transport;
—assistance for local authorities in introducing traffic calming measures;
—assistance for local authorities in developing strategies for urban areas, supported by investment in all forms of transport;
—the recently issued draft planning policy guidance note (PPG 13) on reducing the need to travel;
—investment in bypasses, included in the current roads programme.

Traffic Growth

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what traffic growth forecasts have been made for (a) each region of England, (b) Wales and (c) Scotland, for (i) the period 1993 to 2000 and (ii) periods beyond 2000.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend does not make forecasts for traffic growth for the regions of England. Forecasts are made for particular roads and areas as necessary when considering road schemes. The method used, which is described in the Department's "Traffic Appraisal Manual"—a copy of which is available in the Library—ensures that these scheme specific forecasts are consistent with the national road traffic forecasts. My right hon. Friend's responsibilities do not extend to Scotland and Wales.

Rail Track (European Gauges)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the route mileage, listing the actual sections, of British Rail track capable of operating to western European or Berne loading gauges; and what studies of the extension of such mileage are under consideration; and along which routes.

Mr. Freeman: There are no railways cleared to such loading gauges in the United Kingdom at present. Although there are no plans to upgrade existing British Rail track to European gauges, it is proposed that the channel tunnel rail link—68 route miles—should be built to the UIC B+ loading gauge. The merits of upgrading certain freight routes to an intermediate gauge are being discussed by British Rail and other interested parties.

Driver Training

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what proposals he has to improve driver training and testing; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what proposals he has to introduce compulsory or voluntary motorway training as part of a programme to improve driving standards; and if he will make a statement;

(3) when he will issue a consultation paper on issuing a probationary driving licence after taking the driving test.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend is considering possible measures to reduce accidents involving new drivers and to improve their training and testing, and hopes to issue a consultation paper shortly.

Market Testing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much his Department spent on legal advice regarding the implications of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 for the market-testing programme.

Mr. Norris: Approximately £15,000 has been spent on external legal advice on the implications of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations in the past year. Costs of in-house legal advice by activity is not separately recorded.

Ships (Pollution Control)

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of his Department's programme of port inspection of ships, targeted on pollution control compliance; how many prosecutions the port inspection of ships has led to; and if he will give details of the offences which have been committed.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 24 June 1993]: The United Kingdom has inspection programmes for both United Kingdom and foreign-registered ships which include the targeting of ships which may present a special hazard such as tankers. All ship types may be inspected for pollution control compliance as part of such an inspection. Port inspections have led to two successful prosecutions of ships in the last 12 months, both for deficiencies in safety equipment. However, detention has been found to be generally more effective than prosecution in securing early remedial action and can result in the shipowner incurring considerable financial penalties. Non-compliance with international safety and pollution prevention standards led to the detention in United Kingdom ports of 188 United Kingdom and foreign-registered ships during 1992.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of prosecutions that have taken place under the United Kingdom Merchant Shipping (Prevention of Pollution by Garbage) Orders since 1988; and if he will give details of the fines imposed and the policing that enforces the regulations.

Mr. Norris [holding reply 24 June 1993]: Since the regulations entered into force, one prosecution has been instigated by my Department's marine pollution control unit. The vessel concerned was found guilty of the offence, fined £750 and ordered to pay £515 in costs. Further cases may have been brought by other authorities but records are not held centrally.

My Department investigates reports of contravention of the regulations and recommends prosecution where it is considered there is adequate evidence.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Inspection

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if Her Majesty's inspector of constabulary met (a) the Atomic Energy Police Federation, (b) the British Transport Police Federation and (c) the Ministry of Defence Police Federation and the representative organisation of other ranks, without their management representatives being present on the occasion of his last inspection of the respective forces.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The British Transport police has its own inspector, separate from Her Majesty's inspector of constabulary. The Atomic Energy police force and the Ministry of Defence police are inspected by Her Majesty's inspector of constabulary by invitation. The conduct of the inspection is a matter for the HMI concerned.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether copies of reports of Her Majesty's inspector of constabulary are made available to the respective local police federation and representative organisations of other ranks.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Yes.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what powers Her Majesty's inspector of constabulary has with respect to (a) the Royal Parks constabulary and (b) the Northern Ireland Airport police.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Her Majesty's inspector of constabulary may inspect non-Home Office forces only by invitation.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to request Her Majesty's inspector of constabulary to meet local police federation and representatives of other ranks, without their management representatives being present, when he makes an inspection of a police force.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is the existing policy and practice to do so.

Young Offenders

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new methods his Department is proposing to deal more effectively into persistent juvenile offenders.

Mr. Maclean: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement made by my right hon. and learned Friend, the Member for Rushcliffe (Mr. Clarke) on 2 March at columns 139-42, in which he announced the Government's intention to provide courts with a new sentence, provisionally entitled a secure training order, to assist them in dealing with persistent juvenile offenders aged 12 to 15. We will bring the necessary legislation before the House as soon as possible.

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made in enabling young people who have committed serious offences and represent a danger to the community to be named at an early stage.

Mr. Maclean: We are examining the current legislation closely to determine the extent of the present restrictions on publication in order to see what precise changes are necessary. We are determined to come forward with proposals as soon as possible with a view to introducing the necessary legislation in the next Session.

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how often, over the most recent period for which figures are available, courts have bound over the parents of (a) children under 16 years who have committed criminal offences and (b) 16 and 17-year-olds who have committed criminal offences.

Mr. Maclean: Information for 1991 is given in the table. Data for 1992 will not be available until the autumn.

Number of parents or guardians ordered to enter into a recognisance if juvenile found guilty of a criminal offence by age of juvenile, 1991 England and Wales

| Age of offender | Number of parents or guardians |
|---|---|
| 10 to under 16 years | 3 |
| 16 to under 18 years | 1 |
| Total under 18 years | 4 |

Drug Offences

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the value of the assets seized from people convicted of drug offences in the United Kingdom in each of the last three years.

Mr. Maclean: For information relating to England and Wales only, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) on 27 May at column 722.

Similar information is not readily available for Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Entry Clearance

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of (a) men and (b) women waiting for entry clearance visas for entry into the United Kingdom at high commission offices in Pakistan, India and Sri Lanka as at 1 June.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The latest available information for posts in Pakistan and India relates to 31 March 1993 and is given in the table. No information is available centrally on the gender of applicants.

Number of applicants for Entry Clearance Visas waiting for first interview at 31 March 1993

| Total | 840 | 636 | 2,222 | [1]26 |

[1] Madras does not operate a separate queuing system.

In Calcutta and Colombo, there are no applicants awaiting first interview. Information on the number of applicants in Karachi is not available centrally but all applicants are expected to receive a first interview within three weeks.

Crime Prevention, Portsmouth

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what specific help his Department is giving to assist action against theft and vandalism through the use of video cameras to assist in crime prevention in Portsmouth.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No specific assistance has been given to Portsmouth. But the Home Office crime prevention centre gives practical advice to all police forces on the use of closed circuit television as a crime prevention measure and the police research group has published an evaluation of the effectiveness of CCTV in car parks which has been sent to all police forces.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the Government's response to the third report of Session 1992-93 from the Home Affairs Committee on domestic violence (HC 245).

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the Government's reply to this report which is being published today as Command Paper 2269. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Chinese Refugees

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Chinese nationals are now political refugees in the United Kingdom arising from the Tiananmen square demonstrations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The available information is that in the period 4 June 1989 to 31 December 1992 a total of 115 Chinese nationals—excluding dependants—who had applied for asylum in the United Kingdom were recognised as refugees and granted asylum here. In addition, 95 Chinese nationals—excluding dependants—who had applied for asylum were not recognised as refugees but were granted exceptional leave. At 31 December 1992, about 600 applications for asylum by Chinese nationals—excluding dependants—were awaiting a decision.

Also, as at end January 1993, an estimated 900 Chinese nationals—excluding dependants—had been allowed to remain in the United Kingdom on an exceptional basis without applying for asylum, under the arrangements announced in June 1989 for those in the United Kingdom on 4 June 1989 and who were unwilling to return to China for the time being.

Market Testing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much his Department spent on legal advice regarding the implications of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 for the market-testing programme.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Since November 1991 all legal advice regarding the implications of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1988 for the Home Office market-testing programme has been obtained from Home Office legal advisers. It is not possible to isolate the cost of this advice.

Sheehy Report

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many copies of the Sheehy report he proposes to supply free of charge to the Superintendents Association of England and Wales, on publication of the report.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Sixty.

Immigration Statistics

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many dependants have been admitted for settlement in each of the past 25 years from (a) Africa, (b) the Indian sub-continent, (c) the rest of Asia, (d) the Caribbean and (f) the rest of the world.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on the total numbers of spouses and dependants for settlement in the United Kingdom in the years of 1974 to 1992 is given in table 14 of Home Office Command Paper "Control of Immigration: Statistics United Kingdom 1984", table 9 of "Control of Immigration: Statistics United Kingdom 1991" and table 3 of Home Office statistical bulletin issue 14/93 "Control of Immigration Statistics-Third and Fourth Quarters and Year 1992". Copies of these publications are in the Library.

A breakdown by the nationality regions requested of acceptances of spouses and children in the years 1981 to 1992 is given in the table. Breakdowns are by region of acceptances of other dependants, and of spouses and children.

The numbers of spouses and dependants accepted in the years 1968 to 1973 are not separately identifiable in the statistics.

[2] Barbados, Guyana, Jamaica, Trinidad and Tobago and (for 1982 and 1983 only) West Indian Associated States. Information for other Caribbean countries is not separately identifiable in the statistics and is contained in the figures for "Rest of the world".

[3] The fall in acceptances after 1985 and 1988, and part of the increase in 1990 and 1991 reflects the temporary effect, and subsequent unwinding, of the introduction in 1985 and extension in 1988 of the requirement that wives serve a probationary year prior to settlement. Acceptances from 1986 were also reduced by an estimated 1,200-3,000 a year as a result of a determination by the Immigration Appeal Tribunal that those who apply for settlement but have the right of abode should be given a certificate or confirmation of that right instead of an entry clearance.

Hong Kong

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements he has made to allow applicants for British national (overseas) status in Hong Kong to continue to hold a British dependent territories citizen passport when they are registered as British national (overseas) status.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We have agreed with the Hong Kong Government that the following arrangements will come into effect on 1 July:

(i) A person registered as a British national (Overseas) (BN(O)) who has a British dependent territories citizen (BDTC) passport which is valid until 30 June 1997 may retain it when issued with his BN(O) passport.

(ii) A BN(O) applicant who wishes to have a new BDTC passport as well as a BN(O) passport must pay the prescribed fees for both the BDTC and BN(O) passports.

(iii) The fee for a BDTC passport will be the same for all applicants regardless of when the passport is issued.

(iv) An existing BN(O) who gave up his BDTC passport when registering as a BN(O) and who wishes to re-acquire a BDTC passport may do so on payment of the appropriate BDTC passport fee.

All BDTC passports will, of course, expire on 30 June 1997.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Hepatitis and Dysentery

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases of (a) viral hepatitis and (b) dysentery have been reported in each regional health authority in each of the last five years.

Mr. Ancram: The information is as follows:

| | Viral Hepatitis | Dysentery |
|---|---|---|
| 1988 | 527 | 58 |
| 1989 | 402 | 375 |
| 1990 | 313 | 51 |
| 1991 | 440 | 66 |
| 1992 | 304 | 174 |

11-plus Examination

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what dates the 11-plus examination will be held this year; what provision has been made for trial examination papers to be available; what guidelines primary school teachers have received for this examination; how parents of children for this examination have been kept advised; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The transfer procedure tests will be held on 15 October and 26 November 1993. Practice tests will not be issued to schools. A specimen paper was issued to all schools on 27 April to give an indication of the variety and type of questions which may appear in the main tests; a further batch of sample questions will be issued to schools at the beginning of September. The tests will be based on the programmes of study for English, mathematics and science which schools have been required to follow since 1990.

Schools were notified of the test arrangements by circular on 17 February 1993; further details were given in a circular on 27 April which accompanied the specimen paper and in a further circular on 22 June. Copies of an information leaflet about the new tests have been sent to all primary schools for distribution to the parents of all pupils eligible to take the tests in the autumn. I am satisfied that schools have sufficient information to enable them to prepare pupils adequately for the tests.

Market Testing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much his Department spent on legal advice regarding the implications of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 for the market-testing programme.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: During the period of the market-testing programme identified in the citizens charter White Paper last November, some £400 has been spent on legal advice from the private sector on the implications of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations for the market-testing programme. It is not possible to identify separately the cost advice provided by in-house legal advisers during the same period.

Disabled People

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were registered as disabled in Northern Ireland on the most recent date for which this information is available.

Mr. Atkins: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. J. S. Crozier. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. S. Crozier to Mr. Terry Davis, dated 28 June 1993:

You recently asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were registered disabled in Northern Ireland on the most recent date for which this information is available.

The Secretary of State has passed your question to me as Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency, for reply.

The latest date for which the information you require is available is 25 June 1993 when the number of people on the Register of Disabled Persons was 10,180.

SCOTLAND

HIV

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) whether he will review the level of funding for non-statutory providers of education about HIV risks;

(2) what information he has on the resources allocated to counselling people who are HIV positive;

(3) what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the current strategy for HIV prevention; and if he will hold discussions on the subject with relevant groups;

(4) whether he will fund research into the effectiveness of current education strategies aimed at decreasing the risk of HIV infection;

(5) whether he will review existing mainstream health education on HIV with a view to targeting gay men more effectively.

Mr. Stewart: The prevention of HIV and AIDS was identified as a priority in the national policy statement "Health Education in Scotland" published in March 1991. Later that year, a ministerial task force was set up to consider how current prevention initiatives could be further developed and enhanced. The task force report, "Prevention the Key", was published in 1992 and its wide-ranging recommendations are now being implemented.

The task force recognised the invaluable contribution made by voluntary organisations in providing educational information on the risks of HIV and in providing support to those infected and affected by HIV or AIDS. Grants are made to voluntary bodies under section 16B of the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1978 for HIV and AIDS services and/or initiatives. Planned expenditure for such purposes in 1993-94 by the Scottish Office Home and Health Department amounts to £154,000, 7 per cent. more than in 1992-93.

The task force report stressed the importance of prevention initiatives among gay men and this continues to be one of the themes of public education campaigns. The report also underlined the need for evaluation strategies and the AIDS Prevention Co-ordinating Group for Scotland (APCGS), set up in November 1992 in accordance with a recommendation of the task force, has been paying particular regard to the effectiveness of current strategies and discussing ideas for new prevention initiatives. The APCGS includes health board and local authority representation and representatives from the voluntary sector, the Health Education Board for Scotland and the police and prison services.

NHS Reforms

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of the cost to date of implementing NHS reforms.

Mr. Stewart: No details of actual expenditure by health boards on the NHS reforms are held centrally. However, an extra £121 million has been allocated to boards, in the four years since 1990-91, to help meet any additional costs incurred. This amounts to about 1 per cent. of health board expenditure over this period. The considerable benefits for patient care flowing from the reforms support the Government's investment in them.

Hepatitis and Dysentery

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of (a) viral hepatitis and (b) dysentery have been reported in each health authority in each of the last five years.

Mr. Stewart: The numbers of cases of viral hepatitis and bacillary dysentery, notified by health board area since 1988, are set out in the tables.

Market Testing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much his Department spent on legal advice regarding the implications of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 for the market-testing programme.

Mr. Lang: Legal advice on the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations in relation to market testing has been provided by my Department's own in-house legal advisers. It is not possible to disaggregate the cost of this advice from the totality of their legal advice on all market-testing matters.

Tourism

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the review of tourism support arrangements in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The tourism review shows that Scottish tourism is in good heart and eager to work at an evolving partnership. The Minister with responsibility for tourism at the Scottish Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, West (Lord James Douglas-Hamilton), will ensure that this is achieved.

Under the chairmanship of my hon. Friend, the composition of the Scottish tourism co-ordinating group will be reviewed and strengthened. It will supervise the preparation of a national strategic plan for Scottish tourism covering business development as well as marketing. The preparation of this plan will be the responsibility of the Scottish tourist board, working in close collaboration with Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise. The plan will be put into effect by all three national bodies and will provide a framework for co-operation at local level between business interests, area tourist boards, local enterprise companies and the local authorities. The preparation of effective local strategies will be facilitated. In this way the public sector will help the Scottish tourist industry to forge a strong new sense of purpose.

At the national level the arrangements for supporting Scottish tourism will be clarified. As from 1 April 1994 responsibility for tourism marketing and for area tourist board support will be consolidated in the Scottish tourist board. Also from this date business development activities will be consolidated in the Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise networks. STB's activities under the section 4 scheme of capital assistance will be phased out. As from the date of this announcement no further formal applications for assistance will be accepted. Resources will be transferred to reflect these adjusted responsibilities. In terms of public expenditure the effect will be neutral.

Collaboration among the national agencies will be underpinned by suitable appointments at board level. Arrangements for consulting the tourist industry will be improved by strengthening the Scottish Confederation of Tourism. As part of the "Scotland in the Union" initiative, the Scottish tourist board will establish, by 1 April 1995, a substantial office presence in Inverness and make compensating reductions in staffing levels in Edinburgh, which will remain the head office.

As facilitators, providers of infrastructure and operators of tourist attractions, Scottish local authorities will remain major partners in the tourist industry. The proposed legislation for restructuring local government in Scotland will contain a statutory obligation on councils to participate in the formation of area tourist boards, the number of which will be greatly reduced. It will also provide a power to make an order defining the boundaries of area tourist boards. The Scottish tourist board will be responsible for consulting local authorities and other interests and for advising me on the most suitable future area tourist board structure, which will cover the whole of Scotland.

The proposed legislation will provide a duty on local authorities, where they wish to market their areas as tourist destinations and provide services to visitors, to do so only through an area tourist board. Area tourist boards will be required to co-ordinate overseas activities with those of the Scottish tourist board. In order to encourage further evolution of industry involvement in area tourist boards, the proposed legislation will provide that on executive committees, the members representing trade interests shall be in a majority. My hon. Friend will consider ways of strengthening local authority and area tourist board involvement in the development of tourism policy at the national level.

Overall these changes build on the Scottish tourist industry's strengths, especially its understanding of the need for effective partnerships. They will eliminate the present duplication of effort identified by many who responded to the tourism review. The improved arrangements will help ensure the continued profitability and competitiveness of an industry which has a world-wide reputation for quality, friendliness and good service. My colleagues and I are grateful to all those who contributed to the tourism review with their time and ideas.

Health Service Costs

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what the total budget for the Edinburgh and south-east Scotland region blood donor centre was in each of the past 10 years;

(2) what the total budget for the protein fractionation centre in Scotland was in each of the past 10 years;

(3) what the total budget for the Edinburgh and south-east Scotland region regional centre at the Royal Infirmary was in each of the past 10 years.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

RECHAR

Mr. Cummings: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps his Department has made to extract funds from the European Commission to enable the RECHAR 2 programme to go ahead on 1 January 1994.

Mr. Sainsbury: RECHAR has been one of 14 Community initiatives under the European structural funds. The future of these Community initiatives as a whole is at present under discussion in the Council in Brussels.

Contact Lens Cleaners

Mr. Cummings: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to encourage the provision of more sales outlets for cleaning and soaking solutions for contact lenses.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: This is already the Government's policy. A recent Monopolies and Mergers Commission report recommended, among other things, that the retailing of contact lens solutions—CLS—should be opened to all retailers who wished to sell them, subject to satisfying standards for storage and product recall. As I announced on 27 May, my hon. Friend the Minister for Health has decided, following recent independent expert advice, that the existing rules restricting retail sales of CLS to opticians and pharmacies could be relaxed without any increased risk to health. Companies may now apply for appropriate changes to their product licences to permit supply of CLS via general sales outlets, such as supermarkets.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received on the competitiveness of British manufacturing industry.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade receives a wide range of representations on the competitiveness of British manufacturing industry. The competitive position of United Kingdom industry has strengthened considerably in the 12 months to April this year, during which period manufacturing productivity has increased by nearly 8 per cent.

Assisted Areas

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Stockton, South (Mr. Devlin) of 17 June, Official Report, column 715, what response he has had from the European Commission to his proposals for a new assisted areas map.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Moray (Mrs. Ewing) on 25 June, Official Report, columns 293-94.

Environmental Policy

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his Department's policy on the purchase and use of (a) recycled paper, (b) low-energy light bulbs, (c) tropical hardwoods, (d) peat and (e) cars with catalytic converters.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department is committed to purchasing recycled paper and recycling paper stationery products, wherever possible; installing energy efficient lighting wherever practicable; and reducing the use of tropical hardwoods where possible in the Department's building works and furniture, making every effort to ensure that, when tropical hardwoods are used, they come from sustainable sources. All new petrol cars purchased have catalytic converters fitted. The Department's green housekeeping strategy does not at present cover the use of peat; however, this will be kept under review.

Accounting Firms

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consideration he has given to the introduction of legislation debarring firms of accountants who have prepared a report on a business from accepting a commission for a receivership consequent upon such a report.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have considered carefully the arguments both for and against investigating accountants being debarred from taking subsequent insolvency appointments and I am not convinced that the practice should be proscribed.

House Insurance

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimates he has of the increases in insurance premiums for home (a) buildings and (b) contents policies in each of the last five years, and in the current year; what are those figures deflated by the retail prices index; and what estimates he has of the number of householders or occupiers who do not have (i) buildings and (ii) contents insurance.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Department does not collect data on premium levels. The individual components of the retail prices index relating to buildings and contents insurance are not published separately. The latest family expenditure survey figures indicate that 24·1 per cent. of households are not holders of household contents insurance policies and 37·9 per cent. are not holders of building insurance polices.

Deregulation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the outcome of his Department's consultation on deregulation opportunities conducted with seven buisness sectors; and if he will indicate the environmental areas which will be affected by deregulation.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The seven sectoral deregulation task forces are still examining the impact of regulation on business and have not yet made recommendations.

Nuclear Power Industry

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will include nuclear waste management, decommissioning of plants, financial controls and United Kingdom Government cover of future liabilities within the terms of reference of his review of the future of the United Kingdom nuclear power industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The timing and scope of the review of the future prospects for nuclear power in the United Kingdom are under consideration within Government. A further announcement will be made in due course.

Coal Industry

Mr. Churchill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he has taken to underpin the future of the 12 pits of which he announced the reprieve on 29 March; if he will make a statement about the future of each of these 12 pits; and if he will place in the Library a copy of the most recent guidelines he has given British Coal and the generators about the level of strategic reserve coal stocks and the rate at which these are being drawn down.

Mr. Eggar: Decisions about the future of individual collieries are a matter for British Coal, after consultation with the unions. However, the Government have offered a subsidy to both British Coal and private sector coal producers that can secure a genuinely additional market for United Kingdom underground coal for electricity generation at world-related prices where this is consistent with the relevant European Community provisions.

I understand British Coal is continuing to test the market for supplementary sales.

Guidance on the level of coal stocks for 1993-94 based on an analysis by the National Grid Company was given to the generators in March. It contains commercially confidential information which it would not be appropriate to make public. This guidance will remain in force pending the outcome of the Government's review of the basis for the current arrangements, which was announced in the White Paper, "The Prospects for Coal: Conclusions of the Government's Coal Review".

Exports

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of United Kingdom manufacturing exports were accounted for by internal company trading in each year since 1979.

Mr. Needham: The information is not available.

Inward Investment

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate has been made of the number of new jobs achieved through inward investment in (a) the past five years and (b) the preceding five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department's Invest in Britain Bureau has been notified of 1,411 inward investment decisions between 1982 and 1986 with 95,035 new jobs created. Similarly, between 1987 and 1991 there were 1,696 decisions, creating 129,955 new jobs. These figures are based on information provided by the companies at the time of the announcement to invest. There is no requirement to notify the Department and so the figures include only those projects where the Department's Invest in Britain Bureau and its regional partners were involved or which have come to their notice. They take no account of subsequent developments.

Plutonium 240

Mr. David Alton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps his Department takes to monitor the end-use of plutonium 240 exported overseas.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 22 June 1993]: A licence is required for the export of plutonium-240. The Government take into account end-use and destination in assessing a licence application.

Plutonium-240 is not classified as a special fissionable material. However, materials containing plutonium-240 are associated with other isotopes of plutonium which are subject to safeguards. Such materials would therefore come under the oversight of the international safeguards authorities.

National Environmental Technology Centre

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 10 June to the hon. Member for Blaby (Mr. Robathan), Official Report, columns 303-04, if he will outline the environmental research work he expects the national environmental technology centre to conduct for the Government.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 17 June 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) on 21 June, Official Report, column 23.

British Nuclear Fuels

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library a copy of the forward corporate plan from BNFL covering the next 15 years as submitted to his Department.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 22 June 1993]: No.

Assisted Areas

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many meetings he had with the European Commission prior to the submission of the assisted areas map on 15 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 23 June 1993]: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has not met the commission to discuss the assisted areas map. Officials from the DTI held informal meetings with commission officials prior to the submission of the proposed map on 15 June.

Public Appointments

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the names, occupations and current employers of those who currently hold positions in each public body to which he makes appointments; if he will make a statement on the considerations taken into account when making such appointments; and if he will list details of the posts and salaries or allowances payable which have changed since the publication of Public Bodies 1992.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 June 1993]: There would be disproportionate cost involved in providing the names, occupations and current employers of all the Department's public appointees. The key considerations taken into account in making public appointments, in addition to any statutory criteria which may relate to a particular post, are the needs of the post and the skills of the particular individual. The following table indicates the current position in relation to those bodies where posts or salaries have changed since 1 September 1992. In addition, various allowances are paid to cover travel and subsistence and other costs in some cases.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Environmental Policy

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is his Department's policy on the purchase and use of (a) recycled paper, (b) low-energy light bulbs, (c) tropical hardwoods, (d) peat and (e) cars with catalytic converters.

Mr. Sproat: The Department of National Heritage has not yet finalised the formulation of its environmental policy. None the less, where possible we are practising the policy in anticipation of its formal introduction. The majority of the Department's staff have recently moved into a new central headquarters building and we have adopted the following practices with regard to the items mentioned:

(a) Recycled paper—Recycled paper is used wherever possible. Our bulk supply of white A4 paper and our letterheaded paper are all recycled.

(b) Low-energy light bulbs—Low-energy light bulbs have been installed in the new headquarters building. Automatic presence detectors ensure that no lights are left on unnecessarily.

(c) Tropical Hardwoods—No tropical hardwoods or woods from unreplenished forests have been used in fitting out the new headquarters.

(d) Peat—Use of peat or similar substances is minimal at our headquaters building, as we have no grounds. A total volume of only 3,000 litres (approximately) of potting mixture is used for live plant displays within the offices and the compost used is a mixture containing part moss peat.

(e) Cars—The Department does not purchase any cars and relies on the Government car service for its needs.

The Department has two agencies, the Historic Royal Palaces agency and the Royal Parks, which follow environmental guidelines for making the most efficient and economic use of the resources under their control. Recycled paper and low-energy light bulbs are used wherever possible. Tropical hardwoods are not used in furniture purchased by the agencies. English oak is used wherever possible for garden furniture at the royal palaces. Both agencies are committed to reducing the use of peat by replacing it with alternative formulations wherever possible. The Historic Royal Palaces agency does not purchase any cars. From 1995 a new vehicle hire contract will require all royal parks and royal parks constabulary vehicles to be fitted with catalytic converters whenever possible.

Market Testing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much his Department spent on legal advice regarding the implications of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 for the market-testing programme.

Mr. Sproat: Nothing.

PRIME MINISTER

European Council

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral statement on the European Council in Copenhagen of 23 June, Official Report, columns 309-10, what were the main elements of the Commission paper on information disclosure and transparency discussed at the Council; and what was the policy position advanced by the United Kingdom on openness during the Council deliberations on the Commission's proposals.

The Prime Minister: The main points of the Commission's paper are:

—a positive assessment of progress since Birmingham/Edinburgh;

—suggestions for future activity, including follow-up to the Sutherland report on the single market (which addressed the need to ensure its effectiveness, for example through better explanation of the legislation and its rationale) and simplification of Community legislation to reduce burdens on business;

—the possibility of a round table meeting with regional/local authorities and NGOs;

—the need for a more responsive and effective Commission information/press service;

a request to member states to improve openness at national level about the implementation of Community policies; the idea of an inter-institutional agreement on access to information.

At Copenhagen, we welcomed the progress made since the Edinburgh European Council, in opening up the work of the Council of Ministers, had emphasised the importance of continuing work in this area, including on the Commission's proposals for granting public access to information held by the Community's institutions.

Third World Debt

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to propose at the July summit of the G7 nations steps to ensure compliance with, and full implementation of, the Trinidad terms in relation to African poverty and debt; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The summit agenda is a matter for the Japanese. But we hope debt of the poorest and most heavily indebted countries will be one of the central issues for discussion at the summit. Our position on Trinidad terms for these countries is well known. I shall certainly continue to press for full Trinidad terms, in line with my original proposal for a benchmark of two thirds immediate reduction on the whole stock of debt, with up to 80 per cent. reduction for those in the greatest need.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister if he will seek to convene a special EC Heads of Government meeting to consider emergency financial and other assistance to Croatia and Slovenia to support refugees in both countries and to review the EC refugee burden sharing arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The European Community has, since the beginning of the crisis in former Yugoslavia, made available £397 million for humanitarian relief. This includes a £119 million contribution at the end of last month. The United Kingdom has given a further £44·5 million bilaterally. Both these figures include substantial grants to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugee—UNHCR. UNHCR will hold a donor meeting in mid-July to consider future needs.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister what further financial and other assistance European Community countries are proposing to make available to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in Bosnia, Croatia and Slovenia to support refugees and displaced persons; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees will chair a meeting of donors in mid-July in Geneva. That meeting will focus on the latest detailed analysis of the needs of displaced people and others affected by the crisis in the former Yugoslavia, including Slovenia and Croatia. The acceptance of refugees and displaced people from the former Yugoslavia is the subject of frequent discussion between EC member states but at present there are no formal burden-sharing arrangements.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 29 June.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 29 June.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Environmental Policy

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the policy of his Departments on the purchase and use of (a) recycled paper, (b) low-energy light bulbs, (c) tropical hardwoods, (d) peat and (e) cars with catalytic converters.

Sir John Cope: The Chancellor of the Exchequer's Departments all pursue a policy of green housekeeping. In respect of the items referred to:

(a) where possible and cost effective, recycled paper is used;

(b) low-energy light bulbs are already in use or are being progressively installed in all Departments;

(c) where technically feasible, tropical hardwoods will not be used;

(d) peat is not used by several Departments; advice on avoiding the use of peat will be issued by others;

(e) some Departments already use cars with catalytic converters and in future all cars purchased or leased will have catalytic converters where practicable.

Departmental Speeches

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to place copies of speeches given by officials of his Department and the Inland Revenue in the Library.

Mr. Dorrell: No. Officials in the Treasury and the Inland Revenue make a large number of speeches in the course of a year, many on subjects of interest only to a small number. However if a Member expresses interest in a particular speech that is on the record, a copy can then be placed in the Library.

Unit Trusts

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate has been made of the direct revenue effect in the years 1993-94 and 1994-95 of the announcements (a) that unit trust managers will be allowed to stream income which they receive and pay to corporate unit holders as between franked and unfranked income and (b) that there will be legislation to allow unit trusts to pay interest and other unfranked income gross to non-UK residents.

Mr. Dorrell: The estimated costs of the proposals are in the table.

| | | £ million |
|---|---|---|
| | 1993-94 | 1994-95 |
| (a) Unit trust dividends received by companies to be divided into franked and unfranked components | 10 | 25 |
| (b) Distributions out of underlying interest income of unit trusts to be paid gross to certain non-UK residents | nil | negligible |

Note: The position regarding unfranked income other than interest paid to non-UK residents is not yet settled.

Finance Industry (Debt)

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the level of (a) general and (b) specific provision for debt, as classified by the Inland Revenue, in the bank, finance and insurance sector for each year since 1985-86.

Mr. Dorrell: I regret the information requested is not available.

Corporation Tax

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many staff have been employed at the Inland Revenue on tax compliance work in connection with the corporation tax liabilities of banks and the finance sector in each year since 1985.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not available.

Construction Industry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to combat tax evasion in the construction industry.

Mr. Dorrell: Improvements to the existing tax regime in the construction industry are currently under consideration, as part of our commitment to tackling tax evasion wherever it arises.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to lower the VAT registration threshold to nil turnover for businesses in the construction industry.

Sir John Cope: None.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to review the value added tax arrangements for the construction industry in order to reduce evasion; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: There are no plans to introduce special VAT arrangements in the construction industry. However, Customs and Excise seek to minimise evasion as a matter of course.

VAT

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to simplify the VAT regime.

Sir John Cope: The Government keep the VAT system under regular review, in consultation with the relevant trade and professional bodies. Improvements proposed in the last Budget include the reform of VAT penalties and default surcharge, halving the qualifying period for claiming bad debt relief, and increasing the turnover threshold for using the cash accounting scheme to £350,000.

In addition, Customs and Excise have embarked on a deregulation five-year rolling review of VAT law and administrative procedures with the aim of making VAT more user-friendly. Trade and professional bodies have been invited to identify areas in which there is scope for simplification.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is is estimate of the total official revenue that will accrue to the Exchequer in a full year by imposing VAT at the rate of 5 per cent. on the goods and services described in categories 1, 6, and 8 of annex A of directive 92/77/EEC.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 28 June 1993]: Estimates of VAT revenue that would occur in a full year from a 5 per cent. rate are as follows:

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| Food | 2,000 |
| Books, newspapers and magazines | 300 |
| Artist royalties | −50 |

These estimates are for 1992-93 and make no allowance for behavioural change.

Uncollected Tax

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest estimated level of uncollected PAYE and national insurance contributions deducted but not paid over to the Revenue, in figures and as a percentage, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Dorrell: The amounts of PAYE and NIC remitted or written off as irrecoverable since 1979 are as follows:

| Year | PAYE amount in £ thousands | As a percentage of total PAYE collected | Classes 1 and 1A NIC—amount in £ thousands | As a percentage of total NIC classes 1 and 1A collected |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1979 | n/a | n a | n a | n a |

| 1992 | 381,172 | 0·71 | 32,570 | 0·09 |

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest estimated level of uncollected capital gains tax, in figures and as a percentage, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Dorrell: The amounts of capital gains tax remitted or written off as irrecoverable since 1979 are as follows:

| Year | Amounts in thousands | As a percentage of total CGT collected |
|---|---|---|
| 1979 | 15,182 | 0·51 |
| 1980 | 3,591 | 0·71 |

| 1992 | 57,836 | 4·69 |

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest estimated level of uncollected schedule D tax, in figures and as a percentage, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Dorrell: The amounts of schedule D tax remitted or written off as irrecoverable since 1979 are as follows:

| Year | Amounts in Thousands | As a percentage of total Schedule D collected |
|---|---|---|
| 1979 | N/A | N/A |
| 1980 | 33,081 | 0·79 |

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest estimated level of uncollected corporation tax, in figures and as a percentage, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Dorrell: The amounts of corporation tax remitted or written off as irrecoverable since 1979 are as follows:

| Year | Amounts in Thousands | As a percentage of total Corporation tax collected |
|---|---|---|
| 1979 | 15,182 | 0·50 |
| 1980 | 16,214 | 0·49 |

Tax Relief (Domestic Maintenance Work)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received concerning the possibility of allowing tax relief against VAT-receipted invoices for domestic maintenance and extension work.

Mr. Dorrell: We have received no recent representations on this subject, although the idea has occasionally been put forward in the past. The Government's policy is to widen the tax base by reducing rather than extending reliefs. This has enabled us to reduce income tax rates for all taxpayers.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Romford (Sir M. Neubert) of 4 February, Official Report, column 299, if he will now make it his policy to estimate the extent of the black market in the construction industry and the annual cost to the Exchequer of lost revenue through tax evasion in that industry.

Mr. Dorrell: No. It is not possible to make an accurate estimate of the revenue effects of tax evasion.

Non-domicile Taxpayers

Mr. Byers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many individuals, for each year since 1979, enjoyed non-domicile tax status; and what estimate he has made for each year of the revenue lost to the Exchequer through the availability of this status.

Mr. Dorrell: I regret that this information is not available.

Income Tax

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many cases of evasion of payments of (a) income tax and (b) other tax evasion have been discovered in each of the last five years; and what has been the value of the revenue recovered.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is as follows:

| | Income tax investigations | Other investigations | Yield from counter-evasion work (£ million) |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1988-89 | 52,894 | 12,032 | 706 |
| 1989-90 | 57,997 | 12,551 | 933 |
| 1990-91 | 61,755 | 13,219 | 1,091 |
| 1991-92 | 59,993 | 14,421 | 1,324 |
| 1992-93 | 55,611 | 12,952 | 1,361 |

Foreign-owned Firms

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on the percentage of United Kingdom manufacturing output accounted for by foreign-owned firms in each year since 1979.

Mr. Nelson: The information on manufacturing output including that for foreign-owned businesses is contained in "Business Monitor PA 1002, Report on the Census of Production, Summary Volume". Copies of this volume up to 1990, the last year for which figures are available, can be obtained from the Library of the House.

Valuation Office

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many staff are employed in the Valuation Office and at what cost to public funds; when notices were issued requesting supply of information in respect of non-domestic rating; when these notices were issued; and at what cost.

Mr. Nelson: The average number of staff employed in the Valuation Office in the 1992-93 financial year was 5,806 at a cost of £121,558,000.

Notices requesting supply of information in respect of non-domestic rating were issued in a phased programme spread over April to June 1993. The cost of issuing the notices will amount to approximately £500,000.

Nationalised Industries

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total value of the receipts accrued from the sale of nationalised industries for each year since 1979.

Mr. Dorrell: Privatisation proceeds—including from the sale of nationalised industries—from 1979-80 to 1992-93 were about £50 billion, shown in the table by year.

Privatisation proceeds

| | £ billion |
|---|---|
| 1979-80 | 0·4 |
| 1980-81 | 0·2 |
| 1981-82 | 0·5 |

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Pugin Room (Rodents)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee what proposals he has to engage a cat for rodent control duties in the Pugin Room.

Mr. Colin Shepherd: None.

Palace of Westminster Terrace

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee on what terms the press are permitted access to the Terrace of the Palace of Westminster within the jurisdiction of the House of Commons.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: In accordance with a decision of the Catering Sub-Committee of the former Services Committee and regulations now determined by the Catering Committee, certain members of the Press Gallery may use the Terrace Pavilion and Bar. Parliamentary Lobby correspondents and sketch writers are also allowed access to the southern part of the House of Commons Terrace but are not allowed to entertain guests there.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what restrictions exist as to who may be admitted to the Terrace of the Palace of Westminster within the jurisdiction of the House of Commons; and how these are monitored and enforced.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: On sitting days throughout the year, Members and Officers of the House may take up to six guests on to the southern part of the House of Commons Terrace from 10.00 am to 6.00 pm or the rising of the House, whichever is the later.

On sitting Mondays to Thursdays between 10.00 am and 1.00 pm; on sitting Fridays from the rising of the House to 6.00 pm—except during the period from 1 May to the adjournment of the House for the summer recess—Members and Officers of the House may entertain up to 16 guests on the Terrace.

A Peer or Member may give interviews on the Terrace which may involve handheld filming equipment. On sitting days these interviews should be brought to an end by 12 noon; on non-sitting days they should be completed by 5.30 pm. Visitors may take photographs on the Terrace, but not while either House is sitting.

No guest may be left unattended for more than 15 minutes nor may they be taken to the two northern parts of the Terrace one of which is reserved for the use of Members and Officers of the House alone, and the other for the sole use of the Speaker as she decides.

Staff of the House who are Senior or Higher Executive Officers and Parliamentary Lobby correspondents on a list maintained by the Serjeant at Arms may use the southern part of the House of Commons Terrace, but may not take visitors there.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

World Service Television

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the role Mr. Li Ka Shing has played in the setting up of World Service Television.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: World service television was set up in 1991 as a commercial subsidiary of the BBC with no outside investors. It has since made commercial agreements for the provision of the service in various parts of the world, including one with Hutchvision of Hong Kong in which Mr. Li Ka Shing has an interest.

Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library all public statements made by participants at the first meeting of the preparatory committee for the 1995 non-proliferation treaty conference of which his Department has copies, including his Department's translations, where appropriate.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Copies of participants' statements at this meeting have been deposited in the Library of the House, as requested.

Sudan

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Government of Sudan about human rights in that country.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Such representations have been made on many occasions, most recently last week by a European Community Troika ministerial mission, in which the United Kingdom was represented.

Hong Kong Airport

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the latest discussions which have taken place on the future of the Hong Kong airport.

Mr. Goodlad: Meetings with the Chinese side in the airport committee resumed this month. Agreement was reached on the letting of the western harbour crossing franchise, one of the airport core projects. Some progress was also made on the overall financing arrangements for the airport, but further discussions will be required. The next meeting of the airport committee will be held on 30 June.

China

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his latest assessment of the extent of religious persecution in the people's republic of China; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: We continue to receive reports, often via non-governmental organisations, of human rights abuses in China including the persecution of religious believers. This matter is covered in chapter 4 of the report of the delegation of my right hon. noble and learned Friend Lord Howe, which is being published today. We regularly raise human rights with the Chinese authorities and urge them to adhere to international standards of behaviour.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the latest situation regarding human rights in China.

Mr. Goodlad: We remain deeply concerned by continuing reports of human rights abuses in China. Ministers have made our concerns clear to the Chinese at a high level both in public and in private on many occasions. The report of the delegation led by my right hon. noble and learned Friend, Lord Howe, which visited China last December, is being published today, and copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the report on Lord Howe's visit to China is complete; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The report on my right hon. noble and learned Friend Lord Howe's visit to China was published on 29 June. Copies have been deposited in the Library of both Houses and are available through Her Majesty's Stationery Office.

I should, on behalf of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, like to thank my right hon. noble and learned Friend and his colleagues, for all their efforts in undertaking this important visit and in producing such a comprehensive and constructive document.

Human rights abuses in China, including Tibet, are of continuing conern to Members of the House and to the public. We hope that the Chinese authorities will study the report carefully and give it positive consideration. We, for our part, will consider urgently how to follow up those recommendations which involve action by Her Majesty's Government.

Market Testing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much his Department spent on legal advice regarding the implications of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 for the market-testing programme.

Mr. Goodlad: The diplomatic wing of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office has spent £438·28 on legal advice from the Treasury Solicitors on the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 since 1 April 1992. The aid wing has spent nothing so far.

Subsidiarity

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the EC matters which it was agreed, in connection with the subsidiarity principle, should continue to be dealt with at the EC level rather than the national level, at the meeting between the British and French Governments of 15 June.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The meeting between the United Kingdom and French Governments on 15 June discussed ways to take forward implementation of the subsidiarity principle. This included work to identify existing legislation for amendment or repeal, to strengthen the Commission's report on subsidiarity which it will present at the Brussels European Council in December. There was no specific discussion between the two Governments about which European Community matters should continue to be dealt with at Community level.

Immigration

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which diplomatic posts abroad are designated to accept entry clearance applications.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The list of posts designated to accept entry clearance applications is as follows:

Consular Co-operation

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements exist in the European community for consular co-operation.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: European Community partners have agreed guidelines for the protection of unrepresented EC nationals by EC missions in third countries. This means British nationals can seek help from any EC mission in a country where there is no British mission. This is a positive development and an excellent example of practical EC co-operation which will have direct benefit for Britons overseas.

Trade Negotiations

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress of negotiations between the United States and the EC on (a) telecommunications, (b) audiovisual exports and (c) intellectual property.

Mr. Needham: I have been asked to reply.

Negotiators from the EC, the United States, Japan and Canada have been discussing a range of issues forming part of the GATT Uruguay round of trade negotiations over recent weeks, including proposals for improving market access for both goods and services. Following a meeting in Tokyo last week, Ministers involved in these discussions said that they had been able "to attain meaningful progress that would contribute to further momentum towards a positive outcome of the Uruguay round".

The Ministers will meet again on 6 July in order to finalise a report on progress to the Tokyo economic summit.

I welcome the progress that has been made. This must be sustained if the Uruguay round is to be successfully concluded by the end of this year, and a comprehensive agreement reached on all issues, including telecommunications, audiovisual exports and intellectual property.

EDUCATION

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the impact there has been of the removal of section 11 funded grants previously available in inner-city schools with significant proportions of ethnic minority background children.

Mr. Robin Squire: Section 11 funding continues to support existing projects in the 1993-94 financial year at the current grant rate of 75 per cent. Thereafter, on current planning assumptions, the grant will be available to support the same volume of posts, albeit at a reduced rate.

Secondary Transfer

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for education if he will list, by local education authority area, how many pupils gained entry to their first preference school at secondary transfer for each of the last five years.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not collected centrally.

LEA Secondary Schools

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much money in local education authority maintained secondary schools was spent in each of the last five years.

Mr. Forth: The table gives the net institutional expenditure on LEA-maintained secondary schools in cash and real terms for the years 1987-88 to 1991-92, the latest year for which figures are available. The figures for 1991-92 include estimates of expenditure for six LEAs.

Numbers of full-time equivalent secondary school pupils fell from 3·1 million in 1987-88 to 2·8 million in 1991-92. Spending per secondary pupil rose from £2,068 to £2,277—both in 1992-93 prices—over the five-year period.

Net institutional expenditure on LEA-maintained (England) secondary schools

| Year | Total expenditure £ million (cash) | (1992-93 prices) |
|---|---|---|
| 1987-88 | 4,742 | 6,477 |
| 1988-89 | 5,053 | 6,435 |
| 1989-90 | 5,353 | 6,396 |
| 1990-91 | 5,709 | 6,317 |
| 1991-92[1] | 6,173 | 6,389 |

[1] Provisional.

Note: Net institutional expenditure covers the direct costs in schools of salaries and wages, premises and certain supplies and services. It does not include the costs of school meals, home to school transport, LEA central administration, and financing costs of capital expenditure. Figures for 1990-91 and 1991-92 include unspent balances held by schools at the year end under local management of schools schemes.

Teacher:Pupil Ratios

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Ilford, South (Mr. Gapes) of 17 May, Official Report, column 232, if he will make it his policy to fund a research project into the effect of teacher:pupil ratios on individual pupils' educational achievement.

Mr. Robin Squire: Given the research in this area already carried out by other organisations, my right hon. Friend has no current plans to fund a project of this nature from the small budget he has for policy-related research projects. That budget is heavily committed at present with many competing priorities for future funding.

Special Needs

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what modifications will be made in national curriculum tests to cater for pupils with special educational needs.

Mr. Robin Squire: Teachers may adapt or modify the tests to suit the individual circumstances of pupils with special educational needs. The School Examinations and Assessment Council has given guidance to schools about ways in which this might be done in order to allow pupils to show what they can achieve, without compromising the rigour of the tests.

Future test arrangements will be decided in the light of the review which Sir Ron Dearing is undertaking. His first recommendations are expected during July. Sir Ron is paying particular attention to special needs issues.

Primary School Teachers

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what estimate he has made of the cost of his proposed one-year training scheme for primary school teachers; and what is the cost of training primary school teachers on conventional teacher training courses.

Mr. Robin Squire: There is no standard unit of resource figure for primary initial teacher training students. The cost of training any current primary student will vary according to the type and length of course, the institution attended and whether or not the student attracts grant from the Higher Education Funding Council for England. The same will be true of the proposed one-year courses.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what consultations he has had with parent-teacher associations on his proposal to introduce one-year courses for primary school teachers.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has circulated his proposals for the reform of primary initial teacher training to the National Confederation of Parent Teacher Associations.

City Technology Colleges

Mrs. Anne Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will update the table in his written answer of 12 March 1992, Official Report, columns 602-4, giving the latest available information in respect of each city technology college or proposed and planned city technology college.

Mr. Forth: The table covers announced CTCs.

Ethnic Minority Languages

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to ensure that schools with a high proportion of children with an ethnic minority background continue to be able to offer mother tongue language classes.

Mr. Robin Squire: All secondary pupils are required to study a modern foreign language as a national curriculum foundation subject. Nineteen languages qualify as a foundation subject. Schools must offer at least one of the eight working languages of the European Community and may offer 11 other languages of cultural and commercial importance—Arabic, Bengali, Gujarati, Hindi, Japanese, Mandarin or Cantonese Chinese, modern Hebrew, Panjabi, Russian, Turkish and Urdu.

To meet the national curriculum requirement, pupils choose one modern foreign language from among those offered by the school. Pupils with one of these languages as their mother tongue may therefore choose to study that language as a foundation subject if the school is able to offer it. All schools, including primary schools, are also free to provide languages outside the national curriculum if demand exists and they have the resources to meet it.

EC Students

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to the answer of 22 June, Official Report, column 123, what was the total cost of the awards covering the fees of students from other EC member states studying third level courses in the United Kingdom in 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Boswell: Expenditure on fees-only awards to students from other EC member states studying in the United Kingdom in the academic years 1990-91 and 1991-92 is set out in the table.

| Sources of Award | 1990-91 Expenditure £ million | | 1991-92 Expenditure £ million | |

[3] Estimate.

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to the answer of 22 June, Official Report, column 123, how much of the funds for the various EC student mobility programmes comes to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Boswell: In 1993-94 the United Kingdom's allocation of the funding available for student mobility grants to support EC student mobility within the ERASMUS programme is expected to be some £6·99 million or 14·2 per cent. of the total programme funding available for this purpose; and for LINGUA £0·65 million —13·4 per cent.

As leading participants and co-ordinators of inter-university co-operation programmes (ICPs) within these programmes, United Kingdom higher education institutions will also benefit from the funding available in support of the costs of establishing and running ICPs. The expected United Kingdom share of the student placement budget within the COMETT programme in 1993-94 is £2·4 million—18·3 per cent.

School Leavers

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will give the expected number of school leavers who will join the labour market in July.

Mr. Boswell: Information on intended destinations of school leavers is no longer collected centrally. In 1992, the most recent year for which information is available, the school examination survey estimated that 147,000 school leavers in England intended to enter employment or the youth training scheme.

Class Sizes

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he will announce the January class size figures for each local education authority.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information from the January 1993 schools' census will become available in the late autumn.

Market Testing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much his Department spent on legal advice regarding the implications of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 for the market-testing programme.

Mr. Boswell: The Department has incurred no expenditure on this matter additional to the normal cost of its own legal branch. It is not possible to identify separately the cost of advice provided by in-house legal advisers on particular issues such as the TUPE regulations.

Pupils (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many (a) primary and (b) secondary schools have 50 per cent. or more of their pupils drawn from the ethnic minority population; and what additional resources are made available to assist such schools, with particular reference to the teaching of English, where required.

Mr. Robin Squire: Under the ethnic monitoring survey schools collect information on the ethnic origin of pupils on admission at ages five and 11. Data relating to individual schools are not returned to the Department, except in the case of grant-maintained schools. For other schools, returns are aggregated by local education authority area.

Grant under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 is available for the employment of additional staff to meet the special needs of new Commonwealth pupils arising from language and cultural barriers. In 1993-94, section 11 grant for education will be around £120 million, the majority of which will be used to support provision for English as a second language. In addition, there is an ethnicity factor intended to take account of the needs of pupils who may not have English as a first language in the additional educational needs index which is used to weight standard spending assessments.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will monitor the education effects in individual local authorities arising from the education standard spending assessments for 1993-94 being based on the 1981 census data and not on the 1991 data.

Mr. Forth: No. In our view, the standard spending assessments set for 1993-94 are sufficient to allow authorities to maintain service provision. SSAs for 1993-94 were calculated using the latest information available for all authorities. Although it was possible to use population estimates derived from the 1991 census in the calculations, other 1991 census indicators were not available in time for the settlement.

The most appropriate method of incorporating the full 1991 census data into the education element of SSAs is still under consideration. All the relevant 1991 census data will be incorporated into the education elements of SSAs for 1994-95.

"A Common Funding Formula in Schools"

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many of the respondents to the consultative document, "A Common Funding Formula in Schools", issued on 18 December 1992 who were listed in his answer of 22 June, Official Report, columns 132-34, stated (a) that they had objections, or (b) that they had no objection, to their responses being published or made available to others; and if he will list them in each case.

Mr. Robin Squire: The consultation did not suggest that responses would be made public, although it is open to respondents to publicise their own responses.

EMPLOYMENT

Local Training Initiatives (Essex)

12. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what local training initiatives are available in Essex.

Miss Widdecombe: Essex training and enterprise council supports a wide range of training activities for young people and unemployed adults, including help for owners of new small businesses, and is taking forward the "Investors in People" initiative which encourages companies to embed good training practice throughout their organisation.

Labour Statistics

13. Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of those leaving employment training in Yorkshire and Humberside got a job in the last quarter for which figures are available.

Miss Widdecombe: The latest figures, an increase on the previous year, show that for the quarter ended June 1992, 37 per cent. were in a job three months after leaving. There will, in addition, be others who were in full-time education, on other Government training programmes or undertaking voluntary work. These figures do not, of course, reflect the outcomes of the new training for work programme and the other measures we announced in this year's Budget.

16. Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to retain and create jobs on Tyneside.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department's aim is to promote a free and flexible labour market to encourage employment on Tyneside as elsewhere. The employment service and Tyneside training and enterprise council deliver a wide range of employment, enterprise and training programmes to help unemployed people in Tyneside find the best and quickest route back to employment.

17. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are unemployed in Britain.

Mr. David Hunt: In May 1993, on the seasonally adjusted basis, there were 2,809,300 unemployed claimants in Great Britain.

24. Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest figures for long-term unemployment in the United Kingdom.

Miss Widdecombe: In April 1993 and on the unadjusted basis, the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom who had been unemployed for over a year was 1,075,067.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have been unemployed for more than one year in the London borough of Greenwich, in each of the past three years.

Miss Widdecombe: On the unadjusted basis, the number of unemployed claimants in the London borough of Greenwich who had been unemployed for over a year was 6,886 in April 1993, 5,063 in April 1992 and 2,896 in April 1991.

Agriculture and Horticulture

14. Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what initiatives he plans to provide additional employment opportunities in those rural areas particularly hard hit by reductions in the agricultural and horticultural work force.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The promotion of enterprise, economic diversity and employment in rural areas is primarily the role of the Rural Development Commission and Scottish Enterprise. But acting through the employment service and training and enterprise councils, the Department has a range of facilities and programmes available to people in rural areas, to help equip them for work and enable them to take advantage of employment opportunities as they arise.

Invalidity Benefit

15. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the number of people that have left the unemployment register during the last 12 months by having been granted invalidity benefit.

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many claimants have been transferred directly from unemployment benefit to sickness or other related benefit in the last two years in Wolverhampton, North-East.

Mr. David Hunt: No information is recorded on whether a person who subsequently claims sickness or invalidity benefit had previously claimed unemployment benefits.

Accidents (Retraining)

18. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what new proposals he has for retraining people disabled by accidents.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: People with disabilities, including those disabled by accidents, have priority for places on a wide range of employment and training programmes.

New arrangements are being introduced to make additional funding available to training and enterprise councils to help buy local specialist provision for severely disabled people.

Productivity

19. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received about the effect on employment of increasing productivity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: We have received no such representations.

Increases in productivity—of both capital and labour—increase the ability of the economy to create wealth. Our task is to combine rising productivity with higher employment, and thus fully realise this increased potential.

Industrial Relations

21. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the state of industrial relations in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The figures on industrial disputes demonstrate the healthy state of industrial relations in this country. The incidence of stoppages and working days lost in 1992 was the lowest since records began in 1891. The number of working days lost in the 12 months to the end of April 1993 was equivalent to 34 per 1,000 workers compared with an average for the 1970s of 569 per 1,000 workers. It can be no coincidence that these improvements have taken place at the same time as our step-by-step reforms of industrial relations and trade union law.

Job Clubs

22. Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to extend the job club scheme in the north-west; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Seven new job clubs opened in the north west in May 1993 and there are now 194 job clubs in total. The number of people helped through job clubs in the north west, in 1992-93 was 31,530. There will be 35,235 job club places available for 1993-94.

Training (TEC Funding)

23. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are now receiving training via funding by TECs in England and Wales.

Miss Widdecombe: As at the end of March 1993 there were 375,300 people on employment training and youth training programmes in England and Wales.

May Day Bank Holiday

25. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received about the possible abolition of the May day bank holiday.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department published a consultation document on the future of the May day bank holiday in England, Wales and Northern Ireland on 1 December. Responses to the consultation exercise were received from a wide range of individuals and organisations.

An announcement on the future of the May day bank holiday will be made in due course.

Apprentices

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 14 June, Official Report, column 452 on apprentices, what is the sector breakdown of the figures given.

Miss Widdecombe: Estimates from the labour force survey since 1983, of the number of people in Great Britain undertaking apprenticeships within each industry sector, are given in the table. Data for earlier years are not comparable.

Off-shore Oil and Gas Workers

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimates he has made of the effects of the proposed workers time directive on off-shore oil and gas workers; and what derogations have been negotiated for such workers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The proposed EC working time directive would have been wholly inappropriate to working patterns off-shore. As a result of our negotiations the Social Affairs Council agreed on 1 June that all work at sea would be excluded from the scope of the proposed directive. If and when the directive is adopted it would therefore not affect the working time of workers on off-shore installations, divers and workers in other related activities at sea.

Working Week (Manufacturing)

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average working week in manufacturing industry in the latest two years for which figures are available.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is published in table X2.1 of part A of the 1991 and 1992 "New Earnings Survey". A copy is available in the Library.

Noel Employment Ltd.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his Department's policy on the payment of redundancy to temporary contract workers employed by Noel Employment Ltd., now in liquidation; and what account his Department takes in such decisions of whether tax and national insurance contributions were deducted by the employer of temporary contract workers.

Miss Widdecombe: Under sections 106 and 122 of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978, the Secretary of State may, on application, make redundancy and other payments to employees, as defined in the Act, of insolvent businesses. Each application is considered on its own facts and in accordance with the relevant case law. In determining eligibility consideration is given to a number of factors, including whether schedule E tax and class 1 national insurance contributions were deducted. However, the employment appeals tribunal has previously ruled that such deductions are not conclusive evidence of employee status.

Decisions have yet to be taken on the majority of claims in respect of Noel Employment Ltd.

Work Permits

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what conveniently available information he has on how many Iraqi nationals benefited from the work permit scheme run by his Department's overseas labour service in each year since 1984.

Miss Widdecombe: The number of work permits issued to Iraqi nationals by the Department in each of the years since 1984 is as follows:

Number of work permits issued

| Year | Number |
|---|---|
| 1984 | 41 |
| 1985 | 52 |
| 1986 | 45 |

| Year | Number |
|---|---|
| 1987 | 44 |
| 1988 | 33 |
| 1989 | 40 |
| 1990 | 43 |
| 1991 | 53 |
| 1992 | 62 |
| [1]1993 | 31 |

[1] Up to 17 June.

Residential Care Workers

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received concerning the conditions of residential care and nursing home workers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department receives letters from individuals about pay and conditions of employment, some of which refer specifically to residential care and nursing homes. Pay and conditions of employment in the private sector are matters for employers and employees.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Malawi

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had, and with whom, in Malawi following the recent democratic referendum results; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I have given today to my hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Luff).

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the result of the recent referendum held in Malawi on whether to adopt a multi-party system of government.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have noted with satisfaction the view of the joint international observer group that the referendum vote was an accurate expression of the wishes of the Malawi people. We hope that there will now be an orderly move towards the introduction of multi-party democracy. It is for Malawians to decide upon the timetable for this change, and we hope that restraint will be exercised on all sides. In this context we welcome President Banda's acceptance of the result and his commitment to legalise political parties and review legislation to take account of human rights concerns.

WALES

Schools and Colleges (Performance)

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 15 June, Official Report, column 523, if he will make it his policy to deposit in the Library, and provide to the hon. Member for Pembroke, the costs of implementing his proposals for the publication of information on the performance of schools and colleges when they are known.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Yes.

Home Helps

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the number of home helps employed in each local authority area in the county of Dyfed in (a) 1980, (b) 1985 and (c) 1992.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The number of people employed by the social services department of Dyfed county council is not reported at district level. The total numbers of home helps—including home help organisers and assistants—employed in the county at the 30 September of each year are shown in the table:

| | Number | Whole time equivalent |
|---|---|---|
| 1980 | 846 | 323·5 |
| 1985 | 841 | 351·3 |
| 1992 | 913 | 426·8 |

Dental Services

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each family health service authority area in Wales the number of general dental practitioners that are available on call for carrying out emergency treatment outside normal surgery hours.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not available centrally. General dental practitioners are obliged by their terms and conditions of service to provide emergency cover for their registered patients. It is for family health services authorities to satisfy themselves as to the adequacy of local arrangements for providing emergency dental treatment outside normal surgery hours.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what study his Department has made of the adequacy of the community dental services in meeting the needs of all children who have difficulty in accessing general dental services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is a matter for local health authorities to determine the appropriate level of community dental service provision within their areas. Returns submitted by family health services authorities in Wales indicate that a significant majority of general dental practitioners in Wales continue to provide national health service treatment for children.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to encourage adults in west Glamorgan who remain unregistered for regular dental care to use the community dental service.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Local management responsibility for general dental service in west Glamorgan rests with the family health services authority. Returns submitted by that authority to the Welsh Office indicate that all patients who seek general dental services treatment in west Glamorgan are able to obtain it.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many salaried dentists are employed by each family health services authority in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Approval has been given for Dyfed and Gwynedd family health services authorities to employ a total of six whole-time equivalent salaried dentists. Both authorities are in the process of identifying suitable applicants and premises to accommodate them.

Hepatitis B

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being taken in Wales to ensure all health staff are immunised against hepatitis B; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Hepatitis B immunisation is recommended for a number of at-risk groups including all health care workers involved in invasive procedures. This policy is kept under review, with expert advice from the Advisory Group on Hepatitis and the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation. The health service has been asked to prepare immunisation programmes for staff exposed to occupational risk.

Road Safety

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being taken to improve road safety in Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Department and the local authorities are continually seeking ways to improve the safety of road users throughout Wales. Clwyd county council has produced a road safety plan for the county. On 8 June we commissioned the consultant, Oscar Faber TPA, to advise on a road safety strategy for Wales, including a road safety plan for trunk roads.

Hepatitis and Dysentary

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of (a) viral hepatitis and (b) dysentery have been reported in each district health authority in each of the last five years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The number of cases of (a) viral hepatitis and (b) dysentery notified in each health authority in Wales in each of the last five years are shown in the table:

| Health authority | 1988 | 1989 | 1990 | 1991 | [1]1992 |

Environmental Policy

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his Department's policy on the purchase and use of (a) recycled paper, (b) low-energy light bulbs, (c) tropical hardwoods, (d) peat and (e) cars with catalytic converters.

Mr. Redwood: My Department's strategy for green housekeeping includes specific commitments to extend the use of recycled paper in the Welsh Office and to reduce energy consumption by various means including the procurement and use of low-energy light sources where appropriate.

Our general purchasing policy also gives full weight to environmental considerations in the procurement of all goods including tropical hardwoods and we seek to use environmentally acceptable alternatives to peat and peat-based products wherever possible. We are considering a policy of operating vehicles fitted with catalytic converters.

Telephone Helplines

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to encourage all family health services authorities in Wales to introduce a dedicated telephone helpline for the community along the lines of that established in West Glamorgan.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: As part of the patients charter family health services authorities are required to be accessible to those who need their advice. All authorities have published details of a telephone number and an officer who will deal with questions and give advice about family health services. The telephone number need not be a dedicated line but there are officers ready and available to answer inquiries.

AIDS

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in Wales have died of AIDS; and if he will disaggregate the figures by health authority area.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To 31 March 1993, 78 of the AIDS cases reported by health authorities are known to have died. Of these, 34 were reported in South Glamorgan health authority and 15 in West Glamorgan health authority. The remaining 29 AIDS cases also known to have died were reported in Clwyd, East Dyfed, Pembrokeshire, Gwent, Gwynedd and Mid Glamorgan health authorities. The numbers of AIDS deaths in each of these health authorities does not exceed 10 and for reasons of confidentiality and in line with the AIDS (Control) Act 1987 are reported as "less than 10" for each health authority.

In addition, to 31 March 1993, 24 AIDS cases reported from outside Wales died while last known to be living in Welsh health authority areas.

Public Transport

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being taken to support and promote public transport in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Government's policies of deregulation and privatisation will help to promote increased choice and increased competition for the provision of public transport services in Wales. Unhypothecated revenue support grant is made available to local authorities towards the costs of services including support for local public transport. In addition local authorities have received increased resources for bus priority schemes and for supporting new rail passenger services, notably in the areas of the Cardiff valleys, Maesteg and West Glamorgan.

Wind Farms

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many wind farms are now in operation in Wales; how many are planned for completion in the next two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: There are three wind farms currently operating in Wales at Mynydd Cemaes, Llandinam and Rhyd-y-Groes. A further six projects are expected to be completed within the next two years.

Prince Philip Hospital, Llanelli

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the number of (a) days and (b) nights that the Prince Philip hospital, Llanelli was closed for the admission of accident and emergency patients in (i) 1992 and (ii) the first five months of 1993.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Prince Philip hospital was closed for accident and emergency admissions for a total of seven days and nights in 1992 and for the same period of time in the first five months of 1993 due to increased demand for admissions combined with short-term staffing problems. The hospital is taking steps to overcome these difficulties, including measures to increase bed use efficiency.

Radiographers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what review he is undertaking of the provision for the funding of postgraduate and post-diploma training for radiographers in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None. This is a matter for employers.

HIV

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many patients have been confirmed as carrying the HIV virus in each health authority area in Wales, for each month since January 1990.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Between 1 January 1990 and 31 March 1993, 164 new HIV positive individuals were reported from Wales. A monthly breakdown of the number of new HIV positives reported by each health authority would give individual figures of less than 10. For reasons of confidentiality and in line with the AIDS (Control) Act 1987, numbers between one and nine inclusive are given as "less than 10" by each health authority.

Teenage Vandalism

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new measures are being taken in Wales to tackle vandalism by teenagers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There is substantial activity across Wales which helps to reduce vandalism and the opportunities for vandalism by teenagers. Some measures, such as neighbourhood watch schemes will have a very local impact. Others, for example, Wrexham Anti Vandalism Year, cover a large area. The scheme was launched in January 1993 by Wrexham Maelor borough council with the help of local businesses, voluntary organisations and the North Wales police and involves the whole community to counter vandalism with an information campaign, education and practical events, including a schools competition.

In addition there are schemes which encourage young people towards positive activity, for example, motor projects, crime awareness projects. Others seek to develop facilities and activities for young people. Initiatives such as "Secured by Design" and programmes to improve street lighting have their effect in reducing the opportunities for vandalism and other forms of anti-social behaviour. Comprehensive records of all the measures currently being taken in Wales to tackle vandalism are not available.

The police, the probation service, local authorities, voluntary organisations, employers, teachers, parents and many individuals are all playing a part in the extensive measures that are being taken to help reduce vandalism and other crime in Wales. Wherever possible the Welsh Office supports local communities in their efforts to improve neighbourhoods and to reduce vandalism and other crime.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being taken in Clwyd further to reduce hospital waiting lists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Clwyd health authority and family health services authority plan to reduce waiting times further in the current financial year while continuing to meet patients charter guarantees. Under the waiting times initiative, Clwyd health authority has been provisionally allocated £233,400 and Clwyd family health services authority £160,850 for GP fund holders in the county to help them achieve this objective.

Clwyd health authority has also been allocated £70,045 under the 1993-94 treatment centre initiative for hip and knee replacements, cataracts, hernias and varicose veins.

Children (Injuries)

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being taken in Wales to help reduce the number of injuries to young children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: All health commissioning authorities in Wales are developing local strategies for health. In doing so they are taking into account the advice and targets included in the "Protocol for Investment in Health Gain: Injuries", published by the Welsh Health Planning Forum in June 1992. This offers guidance on how the national health service can reduce injuries to children, as measured by numbers attending accident and emergency departments, by 25 per cent. by the year 2002.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which class and vote covers the payment of salaries of national health service trust chief executives in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The salaries of chief executive officers of national health service trusts in Wales are paid from the income which trusts generate from their contracts to provide health services with health authorities, GP fund holders and the private sector. The provision which health authorities and GP fund holders in Wales receive to obtain services from health service providers is contained within class XV Wales, vote 8 of the 1993-94 supply estimates.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much regional selective assistance was given, and how many jobs were created or safeguarded as a result, for each travel-to-work area in Wales subject to assisted area status in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Redwood: It is not possible to provide information on jobs associated with individual payments of regional selective assistance. Information on RSA offers accepted in 1991-92 together with forecasts of job creation and safeguarding is as follows:

Regional Selective Assistance: Offers accepted 1991-92

| Travel to work area | Offer Value (£000) | Forecast jobs | |

| Wrexham | 8,271 | 593 | 524 |
| TOTAL | 76,855 | 8,316 | 4,931 |

Market Testing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much his Department spent on legal advice regarding the implications of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 for the market-testing programme.

Mr. Redwood: Expenditure amounting to £5,697·71 has been identified. The latter sum includes counsel's fees and charges from the Treasury Solicitor's Department.

Ancient Monuments Board for Wales

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to publish the 38th annual report of the Ancient Monuments Board for Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The 38th annual report of the Ancient Monuments Board for Wales has been published today. The report covers the financial year 1991-92 and copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Council Tax

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements have been made for dealing with proposals to alter council tax valuation lists.

Mr. Redwood: The Valuation Office agency (VOA) had received some 33,500 proposals to alter valuation lists in Wales by 24 June, the great majority in the first month of the initial appeal period. The rate at which new proposals have been received, however, has subsequently fallen significantly.

We expect the agency and valuation tribunals to have settled some 38,000 council tax banding appeals in Wales by 31 December 1994, just 13 months after the initial appeal period ends on 30 November 1993. Any remaining appeals will be decided as rapidly as possible in 1995.

In keeping with citizens charter principles, the agency has set standards of service for handling appeals. On receipt of a proposal the Valuation Office Agency's objective will be:

To acknowledge receipt of proposals within 14 days (against a statutory deadline of 28 days);

To make the taxpayer an offer, within 60 days, to reband the property if the initial banding is clearly wrong;

To let taxpayers know within 90 days if the agency believes the original banding is correct and that they intend to defend that decision; and

In any other case, to make contact with taxpayers within 120 days and give them a named contact within the VOA for further discussion.

Council tax payers should have their appeals settled as quickly and efficiently as possible, giving appropriate priority to identified cases of hardship. We shall monitor progress to ensure that this is so and keep our plans under review in light of developments.

School Meals

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average price of a school meal in (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools in cash and real terms in each year since 1979.

Sir Wyn Roberts [holding answer 16 June 1993]: The average costs of set price school meals in maintained primary and secondary schools are shown in the table.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of people in the United Kingdom over the age of 65 years are in receipt of income support.

Mr. Burt: It is estimated that 16·6 per cent. of people aged 65 or over in Great Britain are in receipt of income support. Information relating to Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Sources:
1. Income Support Statistics Annual Enquiry May 1992.
2. Office of Population Censuses and Surveys.

Child Benefit

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list those countries in the European Community which do not have a universal form of child benefit/family allowance.

Mr. Burt: All EC countries except Italy, Spain and France have a universal child benefit/family allowance scheme. The French scheme, although universal in application, pays nothing for the first child, thus effectively excluding a significant proportion of families. There are numerous differences in coverage between countries, often varying according to the ages and number of children.

European Year of the Elderly

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the actions taken by his Department in support of this year's European Year of the Elderly within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hague: We have worked closely with Department of Health which has overall co-ordinating responsibility for the year. Together we have provided funding to support the year and official representation on both the EC and United Kingdom advisory committees which oversee the varied programme of events. As part of its customer care provisions for older people, the Benefits Agency will shortly be launching a major new publication informing older pensioners and their carers of their benefit rights.

Pensioners (State Benefits)

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of pensioner units receive income from state benefits to the value of (a) 100 per cent. of income, (b) 75 per cent. of income or more and (c) 50 per cent. of income or more.

Mr. Hague: The estimates are in the table.

The proportion of pensioner units whose gross income comes mostly from state benefits

(Per cent.)

| Proportion of gross income that comes from state benefits | Proportion of pensioner units |
|---|---|
| 100 per cent. | 14 |
| 75 per cent. or more | 53 |
| 50 per cent. or more | 72 |

Notes:
1. Pensioner units are defined as single pensioners over state pension age or pensioner couples in which the husband is over state pension age.
2. Estimates are based on data from the 1989 Family Expenditure Survey.
3. Estimates are cumulative e.g. the figure for 75 per cent. or more includes those units with no income other than that from state benefits.

Benefits

Sir Rhodes Boyson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the total amount of expenditure on provision within the responsibility of his Department in (a) England, (b) Greater London and (c) the south-east, excluding Greater London, for each year from 1982-83 to 1992-93, estimated, distinguishing between current and capital expenditure, though excluding local authority credit approvals/capital allocations.

Mr. Burt: The Department's total administrative expenditure for the latest available years is in the table.

| | 1982-83 | 1983-84 | 1984-85 | 1985-86 | 1986-87 | 1987-88 | 1988-89 | 1989-90 | 1990-91 | 1991-92 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Running costs | — | — | — | — | 1,751 | 1,628 | 1,718 | 1,713 | 1,960 | 2,156 |
| Capital | — | — | — | — | 89 | 99 | 158 | 301 | 294 | 333 |
| Other | — | — | — | — | 1 | 315 | 345 | 384 | 426 | 526 |
| Total | 1,068 | 1,234 | 1,402 | 1,412 | 1,841 | 2,042 | 2,221 | 2,398 | 2,680 | 3,015 |

Notes:

Up to and including 1988-89 the figures included administrative costs for the Department of Health when the Department was the Department of Health and Social Security.

A regional breakdown could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Prior to 1986-87 no breakdown was kept between current and capital expenditure.

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consultations he has had to correlate the payment of unemployment payments with other benefits.

Mr. Burt: Regular discussions take place between this department and the Department of Employment on the administration of benefits for unemployment, with a view to improving the service provided to unemployed people.

Income Support

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of people in the United Kingdom over the age of 65 years have income support which is less than £400 per annum above the level of eligibility for income support.

Mr. Hague: The information requested is not available.

Resettlement Agency

Mr. Milligan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, if he has conducted the three-year review of the Resettlement Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: The Department recently completed a full evaluation of the Resettlement Agency, which has been in existence since 1989, in accordance with the Government's commitment to evaluate "Next Steps" agencies. This evaluation concluded that the agency successfully met its objectives in its first three years of operation and should continue for a further three years at which time another evaluation will take place. I have today placed in the Library copies of the agency's evaluation and framework documents.

Market Testing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much his Department spent on legal advice regarding the implications of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 for the market-testing programme.

Mr. Burt: No external costs have been incurred. It is not possible to identify separately the cost of work done by the Department's own lawyers.

Social Fund

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will make it his policy to ensure that, if a social fund officer requires a condemnation report when considering a social fund application for a fuel appliance, the Benefits Agency should meet the cost of a provisional report;

(2) if he will amend social fund guidelines to ensure that the Benefits Agency should bear the cost of a condemnation report for a social fund application for a fuel appliance if one is required by the agency.

Mr. Scott: Guidance currently requires social fund officers to decide each application on its merits and I have no plans to change this. Where a condemnation—or provisional—report is produced the social fund officer will usually include its cost in any award made.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to respond to the recommendations made by the Social Security Advisory Committee on its report entitled "The Social Fund: A New Structure".

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to the reply to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 22 June 1993 at column 165.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many prosecutions in Wales have been brought against people for fraudulently claiming invalidity benefit in each year since 1979.

Mr. Scott: The administration of benefit fraud is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Rod Richards, dated 28 June 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Wales asking, how many prosecutions in Wales have been brought against people for fraudulently claiming invalidity benefit in each year since 1979.

I regret that I am unable to provide all the information you requested.

The Sector Fraud Organisation has only been in existence since January 1991 and the information you asked for has only been collated in the format requested from 1 April 1992. The first full year for which figures are available is, therefore, the year ended 31 March 1993.

In that period there were twenty-one prosecutions in Wales for offences involving Invalidity Benefit. In all twenty-one cases guilty verdicts were returned.

I hope you will find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Local Offices

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list each Benefits Agency office that processes claims for invalidity benefit from persons resident in Pendle.

Mr. Scott: The administration of invalidity benefit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 28 June 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking if he will list each Benefit Agency Office within Pendle that processes claims for Invalidity Benefit from persons resident in Pendle.

The area of Pendle is dealt with by Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale District. Within the District there are two offices, Burnley District Office which processes Invalidity Benefit claims from persons resident in Pendle and Rossendale Benefit Office which is a "caller office" providing advice and information only to the public.

The District covers not just Pendle itself but all the following areas, Padiham, Hapton, Nelson, Colne, Earby, Foulridge, Barnoldswick, Trawden, Briarfield, Barrowford, Whitworth, Bacup, Stacksteads, Haslingdon, Helmshaw, Rawtenstall, Waterfoot, Edenfield and Crawshawbooth.

Statistical information is maintained for the District as a whole and is not available for individual areas.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Medical Assessments

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many medical assessments have been undertaken at the Sheffield DHSS office this year, broken down by month.

Mr. Scott: The administration of medical assessments is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mrs. Helen Jackson, dated 28 June 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many medical assessments have been undertaken at the Sheffield DHSS office this year, broken down by month.

Firstly, I should explain that I have taken your question as referring to the Medical Boarding Centre located in Queens St. Sheffield. This is the office that deals with medical assessments for the area.

The information that you have requested has only been recorded since 2 February 1993. I am therefore unable to provide you with any figures for the month of January 1993. Additionally the figure provided for the month of June 1993 represents a count of medical assessments completed up to 18 June 1993. The table below sets out, by month, the number of medical assessments that have been undertaken in 1993. The numbers quoted are in respect of Severe Disablement Allowance, Sickness Benefit and Invalidity Benefit customers.

| Month | Numbers |
|---|---|
| February | 236 |
| March | 334 |
| April | 357 |
| May | 387 |
| June | 200 |

I hope that this reply is helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Legal Aid

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what guidance is given to assessment officers in applying the discretionary provisions of the Civil Legal Aid (Assessment of Resources) Regulations 1989;

(2) what are the relevant qualifications possessed by assessment officers determining legal aid eligibility; what training and guidance are provided to assessment officers; and what monitoring and supervision of assessment officers' performance take place.

Mr. Burt: The assessment of financial eligibility for civil legal aid is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mrs. Jane Kennedy, dated 28 June 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking (i) what guidance is given to assessment officers in applying the discretionary provisions of the Civil Legal Aid (Assessment of Resources) Regulations and (ii) what are the relevant qualifications possessed by assessment officers determining legal aid eligibility; what training and guidance is provided to assessment officers; and what monitoring and supervision of assessment officers' performance takes place.

I should first of all point out that the assessment of financial eligibility for civil legal aid is performed on behalf of the Legal Aid Board by the Benefits Agency at a centralised office situated in Preston.

Assessment officers are provided with written guidance on all aspects of the financial assessment of civil legal aid cases. This includes the application of the discretionary provisions which permit an allowance against, or a disregard of, an item of income or capital to be made where reasonable.

The advice, however, only gives general guidelines. It encourages assessment officers to use their powers in a way which is consistent with the Regulations, that shows impartiality between the interests of the applicant, the opponent and the legal aid fund and for their decisions to be made taking into account all relevant information about the circumstances of each individual case. Such guidance cannot, therefore, be prescriptive although examples are given where it might be reasonable to exercise discretion.

The Secretary of State for Social Security has authorised all officers of the grade of Administrative Officer and above employed in the Benefits Agency's Legal Aid Assessment Office to be assessment officers for the purpose of determining the financial resources of persons seeking civil legal aid.

In practice most assessment work is carried out by Administrative Officers who will have the minimum qualifications applicable to the grade, unless they have been promoted from Administrative Assistant or equivalent.

The Legal Aid Assessment office provides extensive and discreet in-house technical training for assessment officers. This consists of both classroom training and operational experience followed by support from a trained mentor. Further advice and information is provided by the written guidance given to assessment officers and supported by a section within the Assessment Office responsible for considering policy and procedural matters.

The performance of assessment officers is monitored on an ongoing basis by their line managers. In addition, a random sample of assessment work is checked by a quality evaluation sections which is entirely independent of the operational section responsible for making financial assessments. Furthermore, civil legal aid assessment work is subject to scrutiny by both Benefits Agency Internal Audit and the National Audit Office.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Child Support

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to commission research on the workings of the new child support scheme; and what form such research will take.

Mr. Burt: We have consistently stressed the importance of monitoring and evaluating the effects of the new policy and there is ongoing work built in to the Department's research programme. It involves both the careful analysis of management information on the activities of the Child Support Agency and the commissioning, as necessary, of research by external experts including; a customer satisfaction survey: work on how professionals view the new system and an extension of work on lone parents, benefits and maintenance by the Policy Studies Institute.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what was the average time taken to fill in the Child Support Agency form in the Child Support Agency tests;

(2) how many pages are contained in the Child Support Agency form which is given to the absent parents to complete;

(3) how many pages are contained in the Child Support Agency form which is given to the mother or carer for completion.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Mrs. Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Barry Jones, dated 9 June 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Child Support Agency (CSA) it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your three recent Parliamentary Questions about the number of pages in the form which is given to the absent parent to complete, the number of pages in the form which is given to the mother or carer for completion, and the average time taken to fill in the form in the tests.

The CSA form given to the absent parent to complete is 36 pages long.

The CSA form given to the parent with care of the child to complete is 36 pages long or, where the client is claiming Income Support, 16 pages long.

The findings of three rounds of market research indicate that on average completion of the maintenance application form (MAF) by the parent with care of the children would take about an hour and completion of the Maintenance Enquiry Form by the absent parent would take a similar amount of time. Completion of the shortened version of the MAF (for use by clients claiming Income Support) should take less than half an hour.

DEFENCE

Ministry of Defence Police Federation

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates Ministers in his Department held formal meetings with the Ministry of Defence Police Federation during the past five years.

Mr. Hanley: Defence Ministers have met representatives of the Defence Police Federation formally on the following dates during the past five years:

10 July 1989
3 October 1989
2 October 1990
1 October 1991
20 October 1992

In addition, my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence has a policy of open access for the federation if problems occasionally arise which cannot be resolved through official channels.

RAF Boulmer

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many aircraft, of what type and of what age, are deployed at RAF Boulmer for the provision of search and rescue operations.

Mr. Hanley: Two Sea King helicopter air rescue mark 3 helicopters, in the search and rescue role, are deployed at RAF Boulmer. These aircraft first flew in March 1978.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many rescue operations have been flown from RAF Boulmer since the cessation of search and rescue flights from RAF Leuchars to incidents in Tayside, Central, Fife, Strathclyde and Lothian regions.

Mr. Hanley: It is not normally possible to provide statistical data by regional area without incurring disproportionate costs. Due to the very small number of rescues, including incidents such as transfer of sick or injured people from ship to hospital, however, details for the period 1 April to 23 June 1993 are as follows:

| Region | Number of callouts |
|---|---|
| Tayside | 1 |
| Central | — |
| Fife | 2 |
| Strathclyde | — |
| Lothian | — |

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what time RAF Boulmer received a request to provide search and rescue assistance for the rescue of Diane Robertson near Benarty woods, Fife on 20 June; and how long after the receipt of that request it was before an aircraft reached the scene of the rescue.

Mr. Hanley: RAF Boulmer recorded the request at 15.14 on 20 June. The SAR helicopter was diverted from a training sortie and, after refuelling at Boulmer, it reached the incident site at 16.13. The local fire brigade and ambulance were in attendance while the helicopter was on its way to the scene of the incident.

Mr Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions in each of the last five years for which information is available search and rescue aircraft from RAF Boulmer have engaged in rescue operations with the Anstruther lifeboat or training exercises for such operations.

Mr. Hanley: The search and rescue helicopters from RAF Boulmer have attended two incidents in the past five years which involved the Anstruther lifeboat. There are no records of the RAF Boulmer helicopters training with the Anstruther lifeboats.

Market Testing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department spent on legal advice regarding the implications of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 for the market-testing programme.

Mr. Aitken: Legal advice provided by the Treasury Solicitor to the Department includes, where appropriate, advice on the implications of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 for the market-testing programme. The costs of that element of advice are not separately identifiable.

Uranium-tipped Ammunition

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the practice of issuing British troops with uranium-tipped bullets and shells; and to what extent these weapons were used by British troops in the Gulf war.

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Barrow and Furness (Mr. Hutton) on 11 June 1993, Official Report, column 309.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 23 June, Official Report, column 194, if he will place in the Library copies of (a) the health evaluation of depleted uranium-tipped shells and (b) the advice on risk in use issued to British forces.

Mr. Hanley: No. The documents are classified because they give information about the size and composition of United Kingdom ammunition which could be of advantage to an enemy.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 23 June, Official Report, column 194, what general or informal information he has received from the United States Government regarding dangers to service men in the Gulf resulting from the use of shells tipped with depleted uranium.

Mr. Hanley: Potential risks from handling depleted uranium (DU) were well understood in the United States and United Kingdom before the Gulf conflict. Since then, my Department has monitored reports in mass media and specialist journals quoting United States officials on the subject. Most recently and authoritatively, my Department has received a copy of a United States Department of Defence fact sheet of 11 June 1993 which specifically relates to the possible health effects of DU and analyses known incidents involving exposure of United States personnel to it. These personnel continue to be monitored, but the fact sheet concludes that exposure to DU has not caused the unexplained symptoms associated with the so-called Desert Storm syndrome (DSS). The existence of DSS and its possible causes have also been a subject of discussion between United States and United Kingdom medical officers in the course of normal liaison, which supports the Department of Defence official assessment. For the convenience of the House, I am arranging to have a copy of the document placed in the Library.

Dockyards

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many Hunt class refits are to be carried out at Rosyth;

(2) how many aircraft carriers are to be (a) refitted before 2005 and (b) allocated to Rosyth;

(3) if he will list for each year until 2005, the guaranteed surface ship refits allocated to Rosyth dockyard; what is his estimate of the number of man weeks, per vessel; and how many jobs he attributes to each refit;

(4) what is the proportion of refit expenditure he expects to be paid to (a) Rosyth and (b) Devonport in 1993 and in each year until 2005;

(5) what is his estimate of the restructuring costs for (a) Rosyth and (b) Devonport under his proposals announced on 24 June;

(6) how many (a) type 42, (b) type 23 and (c) type 22 refits are (i) allocated to Rosyth and (ii) guaranteed to Rosyth between now and 2005;

(7) if he will list the job numbers for each year until 2005 in defence work he has estimated to be attributed to (a) Rosyth and (b) Devonport;

(8) what is his estimate of the costs of defence refitting each year until 2005; and what is the amount he expects will be paid to (a) Rosyth, (b) Devonport and (c) other shipyards.

Mr. Aitken: As my right hon. and learned Friend said in the House on 24 June, Official Report, column 449, further information relating to the Government's conclusions regarding future refitting arrangements for the Royal Navy will be published in a consultative document which will provide a basis for consultation with the parties concerned. This document will be issued next week.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the construction of the nuclear storage facility at Rosyth;

(2) when he will remove all nuclear waste from Rosyth.

Mr. Aitken: The nuclear storage facility at Rosyth is required to provide a temporary local integrated complex to store items and materials arising from the continuing nuclear refitting and decommissioning work at Rosyth dockyard.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) where the decommissioned Polaris submarines will now be stored; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he expects to move all decommissioned submarines from Rosyth;

(3) when he expects to move the Dreadnought submarine from Rosyth.

Mr. Aitken: Our present policy is that decommissioned nuclear submarines, including Polaris, will continue to be stored afloat at the location where they are decommissioned, pending eventual disposal. This policy is kept under review. As my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence said in the Trident refit debate on 24 June, columns 449-58, this will be the subject of further consideration.

F3 Tornado

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 10 June, Official Report, columns 339-40, if the four F3 Tornados which had undergone fatigue index modification by Airwork Services and had been returned to operational bases, have now been returned to St. Athan and classified as to the extent of damage.

Mr. Aitken: No. It will take some time before the damage assessment of Tornado F3 aircraft affected by this contract is complete.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 10 June, Official Report, columns

339-40, if he has received the report of the Royal Aeronautical Establishment, Farnborough, on the preferred method of rectification of the F3 Tornados modified by Airwork Services at RAF St. Athan, and damaged in the course of that modification; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: I do not expect to receive the recommendations of the aircraft design authority on repair schemes for several months and the Defence Research Agency will not be in a position to provide its own advice until some time after that.

Low flying

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the operation of the low-flying management system over Cumbria on 23 June; and if he will make a statement on progress towards implementing the automated low-flying flight planning inquiry and notification system.

Mr. Hanley: The management of the United Kingdom low-flying system over Cumbria was operating in accordance with normal procedures on 23 June. The automated low-flying flight inquiry and notification system will be introduced into service as quickly as possible.

MOD Police

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he has taken concerning the allegations made against MOD police officers by Ms Lindis Percy of Bradford, in a letter dated 31 May to the chief constable of MOD police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: I can confirm that the chief constable of MOD police received a letter dated 31 May concerning allegations made against MOD police officers by Ms Lindis Percy of Bradford. It has been recorded as an official complaint and is now being investigated in accordance with the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984. A report will be forwarded to the Police Complaints Authority when the investigation has been completed.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Dangerous Dogs Acts

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the role of magistrates in enforcing the Dangerous Dogs Acts.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We continue to keep under review all aspects of the working of the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991.

Truth Drugs

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration has been given to the use of the so-called truth drug in criminal investigations within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In the Government's view, it is unlikely that evidence obtained using "truth drugs" would be admissible in English or Welsh courts. There are no plans to use such drugs in criminal investigations.

Victim Support

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the outstanding grant applications in Bradford under the victim support scheme; when a decision is to be taken on each application; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I understand from the national office of Victim Support that the Bradford victim support scheme made an application to the local funding panel earlier this month for a third salary grant but that the panel has not yet considered it.

The Government greatly appreciate the excellent work done by local victim support schemes and provide substantial funding for this purpose. Home Office grant to Victim Support this year will amount to £8·4 million. This is 15 per cent. more than last year's grant to the organisation, which itself was 28 per cent. more than the previous year's.

The grant is paid to Victim Support's national office and is allocated to local schemes and branches by the Victim Support local funding panel. This is independent of both local schemes and the Home Office. The panel considers applications from local schemes in accordance with criteria agreed annually between the Home Office and Victim Support.

Sheehy Inquiry

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the report of the Sheehy inquiry will be made available.

Mr. Howard: The report of Sir Patrick Sheehy's inquiry into police responsibilities and rewards is being published today. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House. I and the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Northern Ireland are most grateful to Sir Patrick and his team for their work. Before reaching any conclusions on their recommendations, we shall want to have the views of the police and other interests. We have invited written comments on the report by the end of September, but we shall, of course, be glad to have earlier views on all or any parts of the report from all those with an interest in its contents.

Environmental Policy

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's policy on the purchase and use of (a) recycled paper, (b) low-energy light bulbs, (c) tropical hardwoods, (d) peat and (e) cars with catalytic converters.

Mr. Howard: In line with our aim of securing best value for money at the least possible cost to the environment, the Department's policy on the purchase and use of the products listed is as summarised below.

(a) Recycled paper

The Department will continue to promote effective and economic use of paper, using recycled stationery where possible and encouraging the development of new and existing paper recycling schemes.

(b) Low-energy light bulbs

The practice of replacing filament type light bulbs with low-energy bulbs where practicable, having been largely achieved in Prison Service establishments, is to be extended across the Department.

(c) Tropical hardwoods

So far as practicable, the use of tropical hardwoods is to be avoided in building projects and in the procurement of office furniture, etc.

(d) Peat

The use of peat is to be avoided where acceptable alternatives are available.

Cars with catalytic converters

The purchase and use of vehicles with diesel engines is preferred as the fuel is lead-free and more economical. Where petrol-engined vehicles are in use, they should run on unleaded petrol and be fitted with catalytic converters. Vehicles are to be checked annually to ensure that all emissions comply with statutory requirements.

Correspondence

Sir John Hunt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the hon. Member for Ravensbourne may expect a reply to his letter of 8 March, acknowledged under the reference 06624/93, on the subject of police resources in Bromley; and if he will explain the reason for the delay which has occurred in respect of this correspondence.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A reply was sent on Wednesday 23 June.

Animal Procedures Committee

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when a chairman will be appointed to the Animal Procedures Committee.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend hopes to be in a position to make an announcement shortly.

Racially Motivated Crimes

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, if he will make it his policy to keep figures for murders in which race has been a factor.

Mr. Maclean: There are no plans to record information on murder in this way.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms Ruddock) on 23 March, Official Report, column 529, if the figure for racially motivated incidents in 1992 is now available.

Mr. Maclean: The only information currently available relates to the number of reported racial incidents which are shown in the following table. These 1992 figures were provided in the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Gerrard) on 26 April, columns 266-67, except that the Kent figure for 1992 has now been corrected.

Reported racial incidents

Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what consultation he is undertaking with regard to possible changes in the criminal injuries compensation scheme; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has received regarding the criminal injuries compensation scheme this year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Government announced last November their intention to replace the present criminal injuries compensation scheme with a tariff scheme in 1994. The aim is to offer a better, more straightforward service to claimants. Details of the new scheme will be set out in a White Paper later this year.

No formal consultation exercise is being undertaken, but as my hon. Friend the Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack) explained to the House on 18 March, column 508, we will listen carefully to what people have to say about our proposals. We have already received helpful comments from the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board and the national charity, Victim Support.

We receive a steady stream of correspondence from hon. Members and members of the public about various aspects of the current scheme.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Parliamentary Counsel's Office

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the cost of the Office of Parliamentary Counsel in each of the last five years.

Mr. David Davis: The cost of the Office of the Parliamentary Counsel in each of the last five years was:

| | £ |
|---|---|
| 1988-89 | 1,898,000 |
| 1989-90 | 2,126,000 |
| 1990-91 | 2,303,000 |
| 1991-92 | 2,729,000 |
| 1992-93 | 2,763,000 |

Citizens Charters

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the total amount of compensation the state paid out on all charters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his answer, 10 May 1993, c. 307-8]: I would like to correct the figure for British Rail compensation given in my answer of 10 May, Official Report, columns 307-8. That figure—£1 million—was based on information from British Rail which it has now revised. The final amount of compensation paid out in the first year of British Rail's passengers charter is £1·9 million. All other figures quoted in my original answer are correct.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

UNHCR

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees the question of a further tranche of funding for the programme for national persecutees by the German Government.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We have requested details of this programme from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as the information is available.

Ethnic Conflicts

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which conference on security and co-operation in Europe mechanisms have been used to resolve the ethnic conflict in (a) Azerbaijan, (b) Bosnia-Herzegovina, (c) Croatia, (d) Georgia, (e) Moldavia, (f) Tajikistan and (g) Uzbekistan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The CSCE committee of senior officials (CSO) dispatched fact-finding missions to Azerbaijan in February and March 1992 to report on the situation in and around Nagorno-Karabakh. In March 1992, the CSCE council provided for negotiations among the interested parties on a ceasefire and a settlement to the conflict, which have come to be known as the "Minsk Process". The CSCE recently secured agreement from all parties to a ceasefire monitoring mission. Negotiations continue in order to secure its deployment.

In 1991, the CSCE mandated the European Community to lead the search for a solution to the problems in former Yugoslavia. The CSO has also sent rapporteur missions to investigate human rights abuses.

The CSO has had a resident mission in Georgia since December 1992 to promote negotiations between conflicting parties in south Ossetia. A similar mission went to Moldova in April 1993 to assist in negotiations on the status of the Trans-Dniester area and the withdrawal of Russian troops.

In Tajikistan a CSCE representative has been appointed to liaise with the United Nations and to recommend future action by CSCE. No special measures have been taken in respect of Uzbekistan. The chairman-in-office visited it during a tour of the five central Asian states and the CSO is now acting on several recommendations designed to achieve closer integration of these countries in the activities of CSCE.

The CSCE should continue these and other efforts to prevent conflict by monitoring human rights and undertaking preventive diplomacy. The high commissioner on national minorities also plays an important role by identifying and seeking to defuse ethnic tensions which may develop into conflict.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to appropriate authorities in Belgrade about the treatment of parliamentarians during and after the public demonstrations in Belgrade on 1 and 2 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has urged President Milosevic to release Mr. and Mrs. Draskovic and meanwhile to ensure they are given proper medical treatment and access to visitors. Her Majesty's embassy in Belgrade continues to monitor the situation closely. We welcome the intervention with the President of the upper House of the Yugoslav Federal Parliament, Mr. Radulovic, by the hon. Gentleman and my right hon. Friend the Member for Arundel (Sir M. Marshall) on 21 June. We shall continue to keep up the pressure both bilaterally and through international organisations.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals his Department has for strengthening the nuclear non-proliferation safeguards regime operated by the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are playing a full and active part in the consideration of recent proposals for the further strengthening of the international safeguards regime administered by the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). We have agreed with European Community partners to provide the IAEA with information, on a voluntary basis, on imports and exports from the Community of certain nuclear materials and equipment not covered by existing agreements. This offer was referred to in the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Energy on 24 June to a question from the hon. Member for Langbaurgh (Mr. Bates), Official Report, column 266.

Israel

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received regarding the shooting of Munir Abu-Nijmeh and Ismail Abu-Nijmeh on the Jerusalem/Ramaldah road on 31 May.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: One member of the Abu Nijmah family was shot dead and another injured, reportedly by an Israeli citizen, following a traffic dispute involving two vehicles on a main road on the outskirts of Jerusalem. It is our understanding that the matter is under investigation by the Israeli police and that there may be criminal charges.

Mr. Sheik Riaz Ahmed

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, further to his letter to the hon. Member for Bradford, West, dated 5 March, concerning Mr. Sheik Riaz Ahmed, who was refused entry into France in December 1992, when he expects to receive a reply from the French authorities; when he expects to write again to the hon. Member for Bradford, West; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The British embassy at Paris sent a formal note to the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs on 17 March to seek a satisfactory explanation as to why Mr. Ahmed was refused entry to France and raising the question of compensation. I will write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as I have a report.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received about the circumstances in which Mr. Graham Noble, of Brighton, was arrested and detained by Serbs in the Krajina; what charges have been laid against him; what access the British ambassador in Zagreb has been allowed to Mr. Noble; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Mr. Noble was detained near Otocac in Croatia on 6 June and is being held in Knin. The Serbs say they are investigating his activities; we understand that no formal charges have so far been made against him. Her Majesty's ambassador in Zagreb has visited Knin but has not been allowed access to Mr. Noble. The ambassador continues to press for access; Her Majesty's embassy in Belgrade has asked the authorities there to use their influence with the Krajina Serbs to assist in this. The International Committee of the Red Cross is in touch with Her Majesty's embassy in Zagreb about Mr. Noble. Its representative in Knin has reported that Mr. Noble is in good health and is being well treated.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to appropriate authorities about the cases of missing persons arising from the abduction of wounded patients from hospitals in Vukovar in 1991; what progress has been made in securing the names of those abducted; what undertakings have been sought about the return of those abducted and about the return of the bodies of those who have died; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 17 to 19 December 1992 an international forensic team, working for the United Nations Commission of Experts, conducted a preliminary site exploration of a mass grave 6 km south-east of Vukovar. The team's findings were consistent with eye-witness testimony which alleges that the grave contains the bodies of patients and medical staff members of Vukovar hospital who disappeared during an evacuation of 20 November 1991. The commission plans to carry out a further investigation of the site but does not intend to attempt identification, exhumation and return of all the bodies. This is a matter for the Croatian authorities.

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the nationality and description of those vessels reported to the United Nations as attempting to breach the embargo on the former Yugoslavia in the Adriatic and on the Danube.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson) on 23 April 1993, Official Report, columns 244-45. We now know that the Condor I and Mys Khnistalnyy breached sanctions in early April. Five barges have also been intercepted: Vihac, Kumanovo, Orasac, Velebit and Kaimakalan. All these vessels have been reported to the United Nations Sanctions Committee for investigation. No vessels have been reported to the United Nations for breaching the blockade since April.

Burma

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Government of Burma concerning the imprisonment of opposition leaders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: With our European Community partners we have repeatedly urged the Burmese authorities, bliaterally and in the relevant international bodies, to release unconditionally all political detainees, including Daw Aung San Suu Kyi.

Kuwait

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Government of Kuwait concerning human rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since the liberation of Kuwait, we have made repeated representations to the Kuwaitis about the need to respect human rights. There have been welcome improvements in Kuwait in this regard.

Western Sahara

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his oral answer of 16 June, Official Report, column 853, what meetings United Kingdom representatives have held with United Nations officials concerning the proposed referendum in the Western Sahara; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: British representatives are in contact regularly with United Nations officials in Western Sahara. The Secretary-General has just been to Western Sahara and we await his report to the Security Council on his visit.

Turkey

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Government of Turkey concerning the treatment of Kurdish people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by the then Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, my right hon. Friend the Member for Watford, (Mr. Garel-Jones), to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) on 28 April, Official Report, column 440.

We welcome the new Turkish Prime Minister's commitment to the free expression of different ethnic, cultural and linguistic characteristics.

We frequently make clear to the Turkish Government the importance we attach to combating terrorism within a legal framework and with full respect for human rights.

We regret the decision by the Kurdistan Workers Party to end the ceasefire and condemn the recent upsurge of violence in southeast Turkey, the attacks on hotels in Antalya and the actions against Turkish diplomatic and other premises in Western Europe.

El Salvador

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what actions are being taken by Her Majesty's Government's representative to monitor the ceasefire and preparations for elections in El Salvador; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Her Majesty's ambassador in San Salvador is in close contact with ONUSAL, the United Nations observer mission which has been monitoring implemention of all aspects of the peace agreement signed on 16 January 1992. ONUSAL's mandate has now been enlarged to include supervision of preparations for the March 1994 elections.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Overseas Visitors

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is his estimate of the numbers and financial value of overseas visitors to the United Kingdom for 1990, 1991 and 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sproat: Information on this topic is regularly published in Business Monitor MQ6 "Overseas Travel and Tourism," which is available in the Library of the House.

Football Safety

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of 14 June, Official Report, column 460, what is the relationship between local authorities, police authorities and the Football Licensing Authority in determining the safe capacity of standing terraces in the second and third divisions of the Football League.

Mr. Sproat: The vast majority of second and third division football grounds are designated under the Safety of Sports Grounds Act 1975. It is the responsibility of the local authority to issue a safety certificate for such grounds, in consultation with the police and fire authorities. This sets out how many spectators may safely be admitted to each part of the ground. The terms and conditions of safety certificates are for local authorities to determine, although they are expected to take account of the advice contained in the Government's "Guide to Safety at Sports Grounds". The guide covers all aspects of sports ground safety, including the calculation of the safe capacity of terracing.

The Football Licensing Authority was established under the Football Spectators Act 1989. Under section 13 of the 1989 Act, the FLA is charged with keeping under review the discharge by local authorities of their safety certification functions under the Safety of Sports Grounds Act 1975 in relation to sports grounds at which designated football matches are played. Specifically, the authority may, after due consultation, require a certifying authority to include in any safety certificate such terms and conditions as the FLA may specify in writing.

Following the review of the Government's all-seater policy last summer, football clubs in the second and third divisions of the Football League were permitted to retain some standing accommodation, provided it was safe. The FLA subsequently commissioned a report on safe terracing by the Football Stadia Advisory Design Council. This document, which was published at the end of March, augments the advice already available to clubs in the "Guide to Safety at Sports Grounds". The FLA will, if necessary, use its powers under the Football Spectators Act to ensure that retained terracing meets the necessary safety standard and that the permitted capacities are set at a safe level.

We are consulting the FLA about the extent to which clubs will be required to upgrade their terracing in line with the recommendations of the Football Stadia Advisory Design Council's report. My right hon. Friend expects to make an announcement shortly.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Construction Industry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met representatives of the Federation of Master Builders to discuss ways of assisting the construction industry.

Mr. Nelson: My right hon. and learned Friend intends to meet regularly representatives from all sectors of industry. He has no plans at present to meet the Federation of Master Builders.

Contribution Holidays

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total amount of pension fund surplus represented by (a) employer/employee contribution holidays, (b) improved benefits and (c) taxable refunds to the employer in each year since 1986; and what proportion of surplus reduction is represented by each method.

Mr. Dorrell: Information is not available in the form requested. The tables below give information on large self-administered pension funds reporting to the Inland Revenue on proposed action to remove surpluses following the provisions in the Finance Act 1986, and on total refunds to employers from occupational pension schemes.

Large Self Administered Schemes, by method of reduction of Surplus, 1987-88 to 1992-93[1]

£ million

| Method of reduction | Amount of reduction | Proportion of surplus reduction Per cent. |
|---|---|---|
| Contributions holiday (employer) | 7,932 | 38 |
| Contributions holiday (employee) | 155 | 1 |
| Contributions reduction (employer) | 3,169 | 15 |
| Contributions reduction (employee) | 566 | 3 |
| Refund to employer[2] | 1,174 | 6 |
| Increase in benefits | 7,471 | 36 |
| New benefits | 106 | 1 |
| Total | 20,574 | |

[1]The figures shown represent the total to be eliminated by each method. Some of the planned reductions are timed to fall in years subsequent to 1992-93. Amounts are based on the actuary's estimated reduction for each category.

[2]The figures for refunds to employers exclude amounts paid over by schemes reported to be wound up in each year.

Refunds to the employer from all occupational pension schemes Schemes reporting in refunds

Inland Revenue Special Office 2

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the former head of Inland Revenue special office 2; and on what date he was last performing his official duties.

Mr. Dorrell: The officer concerned was suspended from duty on 11 September 1992. Investigations were commenced by the Metropolitan and City police company fraud department and these investigations are continuing.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will identify the functions and purposes of Inland Revenue special office 2, together with its staff establishment and annual cost in 1992-93.

Mr. Dorrell: Special office 2 is one of 10 offices in the Inland Revenue which specialise in the investigation of difficult or complex cases which are outside the scope of other parts of the Department, involving mainly avoidance and non-compliance where large amounts of tax are at stake. Special office 2 is based in London.

For 1992-93, there were 15 staff and the cost of running the office was £685,000.

Value Added Tax

Ms Lynne: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the rules governing VAT charges when a Government agency bids successfully to provide a commercial service to a Government Department.

Sir John Cope: Commercial services supplied by executive agencies to Government Departments are liable to VAT according to the normal rules.

Market Testing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much his Departments spent on legal advice regarding the implications of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 for the market-testing programme.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 29 June 1993]: The Chancellor's Departments have spent approximately £8,000 on such advice in connection with their 1992-93 market-testing programmes.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Environmental Policy

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his Department's policy on the purchase and use of (a) recycled paper, b) low-energy light bulbs, (c) tropical hardwoods, (d) peat and (e) cars with catalytic converters.

Mr. Atkins: The Northern Ireland position was set out in the Secretary of State's policy statement on green housekeeping, a copy of which has been placed in the Library. This has been circulated to all staff in the Northern Ireland civil service and in the Northern Ireland Office.

The policy statement specifically refers to recycled paper, hardwoods and peat. Although not specifically mentioned, the use of low-energy light bulbs has been part of the energy conservation programme managed by the Department of the Environment and the Department of Economic Development. The position on cars is that for some years we have been specifying vehicles which are either diesel-powered or use lead-free petrol. Replacement cars are now specified with catalytic converters.

Airport Police

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what dates Ministers in his Department held a formal meeting with the Northern Ireland Airports Police Association during the past five years.

Mr. Atkins: No such meetings of this nature have taken place during the period in question.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he proposes to meet representatives of the Northern Ireland Airport Police Association to discuss the changes in their force's management, control and duties consequent to the proposed privatisation of Belfast international airport.

Mr. Atkins: I plan to meet representatives of the Northern Ireland Airports Police Association to discuss such issues in the near future.

Market Testing

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much the market-testing programme has cost his Department since November 1992.

Sir John Wheeler: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

EMPLOYMENT

Health and Safety

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has to improve health protection and safety conditions in the workplace.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 7 June 1993, Official Report, column 98. The Health and Safety Commission's plan of work for 1993-94 and beyond, to which I referred, will be published on 6 July and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Market Testing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much his Department spent on legal advice regarding the implications of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 for the market-testing programme.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 29 June 1993]: Over the period of the market-testing programme announced in the White Paper, "Citizen's Charter: First Report 1992" (Cm 2102), advice on the implications of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 has been sought from in-house legal advisers. It is not possible to identify these costs separately.

Disabled Employees

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what consideration has been given by his Department to the provision of communication support in the workplace for deaf employees;

(2) what action has been taken by his Department as a follow up to the "Evaluation of Special Schemes to Employment" report in October 1990.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 29 June 1993]: As a follow-up to the evaluation of special schemes report, which was published in October 1990, we have asked the Employment Service to introduce in April 1994 a new major programme called "Access to Work". This will offer people with disabilities a wider range of assistance than is currently available, including communication support for deaf people in the workplace. I believe "Access to Work" will provide more people with disabilities with the help to take up opportunities of employment. In addition, from 5 July 1993, unemployed deaf people will be able to get help towards the cost of communicators at job interviews. Trials of other forms of communicator support will be taking place in four locations in 1993 and lessons learned will be taken into account in "Access to Work". Further details on "Access to Work" were provided in the reply from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Clwyd, North-West (Mr. Richards) on 22 June, Official Report, columns 102-103.

PRIME MINISTER

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 16 June, Official Report, column 583, how many representations on THORP he has received this year; and what proportion were (a) in favour of and (b) opposed to the plant.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the reply I gave the hon. Member on 16 June, Official Report, column 583.

Civil List

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister what account is taken in drawing up the Civil List of contributions to the cost of the royal household received from (a) the Isle of Man, (b) the Channel Islands and (c) other countries where the Queen is Head of State.

The Prime Minister: None, as no such contributions are received for Her Majesty's Civil List.

Treaties

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister further to his answer of 5 May, Official Report, column 922, how many treaties, since 1 January 1979, have been debated by the House in advance of their ratification by Her Majesty's Government, and what is this figure as a percentage of total treaties ratified.

The Prime Minister: Her Majesty's Government have ratified 243 treaties since 1 January 1979. These have been laid before both Houses in the normal way. They cover a wide variety of subjects and fall to the appropriate Government Department to administer. The information sought is not centrally recorded and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Murder Trials

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what arrangements are made during the period in which notes, tapes or transcripts of murder trials are held, for their safe storage and preservation.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor's Department is responsible for ensuring that a verbatim record is taken of all trials in the Crown court, as required by rule 18 of the Criminal Appeal Rules 1968. The record is taken by shorthand and/or mechanical means. Under open tender contracts with the private sector which came into effect on 1 April 1993, the responsibility for the safe storage and preservation of such records is that of the contractor whose staff took the record. The contractor is bound by the contract to ensure that the record is kept for not less than five years and to provide transcripts requested during that period. Transcripts are not automatically produced for cost reasons in any category of cases, but these may be purchased by the Department or the public from the contractor concerned.

Child Abduction

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the number of requests made to each EC country in each of the last three years for the return of British children believed to have been abducted to the EC country in question.

Mr. John M. Taylor [holding answer 17 June 1993]: The figures requested are as follows:

| Country | Requests for return | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| | 1991 | 1992 | [1]1993 |
| Belgium | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Denmark | 0 | 0 | 1 |
| France | 7 | 9 | 5 |
| Germany | 8 | 13 | 1 |
| Greece | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Ireland | 0 | 13 | 5 |
| Italy | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Luxembourg | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Netherlands | 8 | 7 | 2 |
| Portugal | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Spain | 7 | 12 | 5 |

[1] January-June.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the number of British children (a) abducted from Britain who are currently believed to be in each EC country and (b) abducted from Britain who have been returned from each EC country over the last three years.

Mr. John M. Taylor [holding answer 17 June 1993]: The figures requested are as follows:

June 1990 to June 1993

| Country | (a) Number of children abducted | (b) Number of children returned |
|---|---|---|
| Belgium | 3 | 1 |
| Denmark | 1 | 0 |
| France | 35 | 1 |
| Germany | 26 | 4 |
| Greece | [1]— | [1]— |
| Ireland | 26 | 3 |
| Italy | [1]— | [1]— |
| Luxembourg | [1]— | [1]— |
| Netherlands | 26 | 4 |
| Portugal | 7 | 1 |
| Spain | 47 | 7 |

EDUCATION

Grant-maintained Status

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what annual capital sums have been made available to St. Francis Xavier's college in Liverpool since it acquired grant-maintained status; what additional capital allocations have been made in each year; and for what reasons and purpose.

Mr. Robin Squire: The following capital grants have been made:

| Year and project description | Formula capital allocation £ | Named capital allocation £ |
|---|---|---|
| 1990-91 | | |
| Flat roof repairs | 19,000 | 32,000 |
| Furnish and equip Design and technology block | | 80,427 |
| Removal of asbestos | | [1]88,724 |
| 1991-92 | | |
| Laboratory refurbishments | 28,100 | 201,372 |
| 1992-93 | 30,280 | nil |
| 1993-94 | | |
| New general and technical rooms | Not yet claimed | 750,000 |

[1] Emergency capital grant.

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he expects to respond to the application for grant-maintained status for St. Peter's Roman Catholic school, Bournemouth.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend expects shortly to announce his decision on this application.

Market Testing

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much the market-testing programme has cost his Department since November 1992.

Mr. Boswell: The cost of the programme—in direct staff costs and consultancy costs—has been some £188,000 since November 1992.

Student Incomes

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the annual income available to a student in higher education receiving a full student grant and making full use of the student loan facility in each year since 1990.

Mr. Boswell: The following resources have been available through the mandatory award and student loan to students studying away from the parental home:

| Academic year | Grant £ | Full-year loan £ | Total £ |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1990-91 | 2,265 | 420 | 2,685 |
| 1991-92 | 2,265 | 580 | 2,845 |
| 1992-93 | 2,265 | 715 | 2,980 |
| 1993-94 | 2,265 | 800 | 3,065 |

Different rates of grant and loan apply to students living in the parental home or studying in London, and different rates of loan apply to the final year of most courses. The grants are means-tested, and additional allowances are available in certain circumstances.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Light Rail Projects

Mr. Spellar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 14 June, Official Report, column 405, when he expects to make an announcement regarding the light rail projects currently being considered by his Department.

Mr. McLoughlin: The four light rail projects referred to in the reply of my right hon. Friend the Minister for Industry on 14 June are still being considered by my Department. For commercial reasons, I cannot disclose any information on individual projects supported, or being considered for support, by my Department. It is for the companies concerned to disseminate information as they see fit.

Steel Imports

Mr. Spellar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 22 June, Official Report, column 138, what inquiries he has made regarding imports into the United Kingdom of allegedly subsidised structural steel from other EC member states.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have no evidence at present to suggest that structural steel producers in other EC member states are directly subsidised. Where we have evidence of illegal subsidisation we do not hesitate to press the European Commission to take action against those concerned, as we have done in the case of the Italian steel company, ILVA.

Gathering the necessary evidence is difficult and we rely to a large extent on commercial sources. My officials have discussed this matter with the British Constructional Steelwork Association. If the association, its members or any other party can produce evidence to suggest that illegal subsidies are being paid to structural steel producers we will pursue the matter vigorously with the European Commission.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Morley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will take into account the level of public money invested in new and unoccupied industrial estates in current assisted areas when considering any change in status.

Mr. Sainsbury: The criteria that have been used in the assisted areas map review were set out in the public consultation document issued last year. As we made clear, unemployment levels have been the main determinant, though a number of other relevant factors have also been taken into account. The availability of presently unoccupied, publicly funded industrial or commercial premises is not judged to be relevant in determining areas for inclusion in the assisted areas map.

Coal Subsidies

Mr. Cummings: To ask the President of the Board of Trade to what extent the subsidies to be made available to coal producers are available for extra sales to the non-electricity supply industry market.

Mr. Eggar: As indicated in the White Paper "The Prospects for Coal", the subsidy is to be made available on genuinely additional sales for electricity generation. It is not available for coal sold into other markets.

Companies Acts (Inspectors)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what considerations were taken into account in deciding whether to appoint DTI inspectors under the Companies Acts in the cases of Maxwell Communications Corporation and Polly Peck International.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Inspectors have not been appointed into either Maxwell Communications Corporation or Polly Peck International. However, inspectors were appointed last June to investigate and report on the affairs and membership of Mirror Group Newspapers plc. The inspectors have been asked to look in particular at the offer for sale of the company shares.

In deciding whether or not to appoint inspectors, consideration is given to the criteria laid down by statute —principally sections 432 and 442 of the Companies Act 1985—and to whether the appointment of inspectors would be in the public interest.

Sellafield

Mr. Trimble: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a further statement on nuclear reprocessing at Sellafield.

Mr. Eggar: Nuclear reprocessing is a proven and safe technology for which there is a continuing demand. It is a commercial matter for the owners of the spent fuel to decide whether to reprocess or to seek alternative management options.

Telecommunications Council

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Telecommunications Council on 16 June.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Council reached unanimous agreement on the framework of an action plan to help launch widescreen television services. The four-year plan will be for Community funds, together with funds from othere sources, to be used to partially offset the additional costs to broadcasters and programme producers of broadcasting TV services, including high definition TV services, in the widescreen format. The settlement represents a considerable negotiating success for the United Kingdom. The 850 mecu Community subsidy originally proposed has been reduced to 228 mecu—£160 million; broadcasters and programme makers may use technologies other than the analogue MAC standards, such as PALPlus or fully digital technologies; and the United Kingdom secured a valuable commitment that United Kingdom-based companies contributing to the action plan will be given due recognition of this in future European collaborative research and development and standardisation activities into digital TV.

The Council agreed a resolution on the Commission's review of the Community telecoms market. This states that voice telephony services will be liberalised by 1 January 1998, with an additional derogation period of no more than five years for Spain, Portugal, Greece and Ireland and, if justified, no more than two years for Luxembourg. The Commission will produce, by 1995, a green paper on liberalisation of network infrastructure. The United Kingdom and three other member states urged them also to carry out studies by the end of 1993 on network provision for corporate users. A common position was agreed in principle on the Council directive on the approximation of the laws of the member states concerning satellite earth station equipment modifying the scope of Council directive 91/263/EEC, establishing harmonised procedures for type approval. There was also a short debate on the Green Paper on Postal Services during which the Commission set out a timetable for future work in preparing draft directives. The Commission also briefly reported progress in preparing a Community programme for support of trans-European networks in the tele-communications field.

Patent Office

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the future of the Patent Office.

Mr. McLoughlin: Since its establishment as an executive agency of the DTI in 1990, and its subsequent move to trading fund status in 1991, the Patent Office has become a more commercially oriented organisation. I am now undertaking a review of its role to consider how best to build on this progress. Such reviews normally take place around three years after an agency has been established.

The review will consider whether other forms of ownership and management might offer better value for money and enable the Patent Office to offer a better service to its customers. I will be asking independent consultants to assess the market in which the office operates; and to identify and consider as wide a range of options for its future as possible, including the possibility of putting some or all of it into the private sector, and of involving the private sector in running the office in ways which fall short of full privatisation. A number of consultancy firms have been invited to submit proposals. The chosen firm will be appointed shortly and will report later this year. I will report to the House on my conclusions.

Russia

Mr. Butler: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the arrangements for providing export credit facilities to Russia.

Mr. Needham: I have been advised by the Export Credits Guarantee Department's accounting officer that in his view the risks involved in giving guarantees for exports and investment in Russia under sections 1(1) and 2 of the Export and Investment Guarantees Act 1991 do not meet ECGD's normal underwriting criteria. However, in view of the importance which the Government attach to encouraging trade with Russia, I have instructed him to make arrangements for such guarantees to be issued. These guarantees will be excluded from ECGD's break-even objective for new business.

EUREKA

Mr. Butler: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on EUREKA and United Kingdom involvement in and support for the initiative.

Mr. McLoughlin: EUREKA is a pan-European initiative to encourage industrial collaboration in research and development; membership currently comprises the 12 EC countries, six EFTA countries, Turkey, Hungary and the EC Commission. The EUREKA ministerial conference which I attended in Paris on 24 June 1993 agreed that Russia should be admitted as soon as the last appropriate technical elements have been completed.

Of the 193 new projects announced at the conference, 46 involved United Kingdom participants, a record number for the United Kingdom. In addition there were three new United Kingdom participations in previously announced projects. Thirty-one of the overall United Kingdom total went ahead without Government support demonstrating the awareness by United Kingdom organisations of the wider benefits of EUREKA. I congratulate all those United Kingdom organisations taking part in these and other EUREKA projects which demonstrate that the United Kingdom remains a strongly committed participant in the initiative.

On 26 May 1993, my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade announced a refocusing of the Department's science and technology policy. As part of that refocusing, from 1 September 1993, the DTI will provide support for United Kingdom organisations to enable them to take part in feasibility studies and other consortium building activities to generate new EUREKA projects. From that date, firms' eligibility for support for the implementation phase of EUREKA projects will be confined to small and medium-sized enterprises of under 250 employees in accordance with the EC definition.

Market Testing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much his Department spent on legal advice regarding the implications of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 for the market-testing programme.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 29 June 1993]: During the period of the market-testing programme identified in the "Citizen's Charter" White Paper last November, the Department's solicitor has advised on this matter in the normal course of his duties. We are not able to distinguish the cost of advice on the particular issue in question from other advice on establishments and market testing issues.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many and what proportion of people in receipt of invalidity benefit receive an additional pension; and if he will publish figures showing (a) the average weekly additional pension in payment and (b) the distribution of recipients rising in increments of £1, giving figures separately for men and women.

Mr. Scott: The latest information available is in the table.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will discuss with the trustees of the Independent Living (1993) Fund the quality of the data available to them about the circumstances of severely disabled people and projections of their needs in reaching their decision to exclude the terminally ill, and others whose conditions are not stable, from the scope of the fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The decision that the trustees took was on a question of policy and was therefore their sole responsibility.

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on how many occasions officials of his Department attended meetings of the board of trustees of the Independent Living (1993) Fund; and what role they played at these meetings.

Mr. Scott: Officials of my Department are invited to attend these meetings by the trustees. They attend as observers.

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether reviews of individual cases funded by the Independent Living (1993) Fund will take place on a six-monthly basis in line with the trustees' intention to arrange six-monthly packages of care with local authorities; and what assessment he has made of the administrative and financial implications of this.

Mr. Scott: Administrative issues, such as the review of cases, are matters for the trustees and director of the Independent Living (1993) Fund.

Quarry House, Leeds

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the insurance value of art works in Quarry house.

Mr. Hague: The Department is self-insuring which means that the art work in Quarry house has not been valued for insurance purposes.

Housing Benefit (Students)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what response he has made to the National Housing and Town Planning Council publication, entitled "Making a Difference-Housing Benefit for Students"; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what recent representations he has received regarding housing benefit for students in relation to the 1993 summer break.

Mr. Burt: I have received a number of representations from hon. Members and members of the public. I have seen the National Housing and Town Planning Council publication. In general, it is the educational maintenance system which is designed to provide support for students, not the social security system, and we have no plans to change this. Housing benefit is, however, available to vulnerable students such as lone parents, those who are disabled, and those with dependent children, not just during the summer vacation but throughout their course. In addition, non-student partners can claim on behalf of the couple if they satisfy the normal qualifying conditions.

Household Income Statistics

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the next edition of the households below average income statistics will be published.

Mr. Lilley: The new edition of the households below average income—HBAI—statistics covering the years 1979 to 1990-91, has been published today and copies have been placed in the Library.

The figures show that average disposable household incomes have grown in real terms by 35 per cent. between 1979 and 1990-91. Increases were not confined to a few top earners, and there have been appreciable increases in average income for all family types and all economic status groups. Pensioners have done particularly well, with pensioner couples showing an increase in average income of 48 per cent. after housing costs.

A complex picture emerges in the outcomes for the lower income groups. This is because of changes in the composition of the bottom 10 per cent. of income distribution, the particular point in the economic cycle captured by this edition, and the peculiarities in the way the incomes of the increasing number of self-employed are reported in the family expenditure survey from which this analysis is drawn. There are also strong indications that income results for the bottom 10 per cent. of the income distribution do not reflect their true standard of living. There has been a marked increase in their possession of consumer durables and three quarters of those who reported zero incomes spent more than the average for the population as a whole. The results shown in HBAI for the lowest income group cannot, therefore, be interpreted simply and should be treated with some caution.

The new family resources survey, which is due to replace the family expenditure survey as the data source for HBAI, will place special emphasis on gathering information from households on low incomes and so should help to improve the reliability of the data.

"Paying for Care: Lessons from Europe"

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consideration he has given to the report of the Social Security Advisory Committee entitled "Paying for Care: Lessons from Europe"; and if he will make a statement on the report's findings.

Mr. Scott: The report provides interesting information about support provided for carers in other European countries. We will study it carefully as part of our ongoing consideration of provision for carers.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 7 June, Official Report, column 8, how many claims for disability living allowance were received in 1992; what proportion were agreed to; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: A total of 705,000 claims to disability living allowance were received in 1992, these included new and top-up claims and transitional attendance allowance and mobility allowance cases. Virtually all these have since been cleared.

Of the 553,000 claims cleared during the year 1992, 62 per cent. resulted in an award being made at the initial adjudication stage; this does not include transitional cases.

Pensioners (Housing Benefit)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average level of pensioners' savings when they first apply for housing benefit; and what is the average expenditure of their savings before they qualify for such a benefit.

Mr. Burt: Average amount of pensioners' savings at time of successful claim for housing benefit is in the table.

| | Overall £ | In receipt of Income Support £ | Not in receipt of Income Support £ |
|---|---|---|---|
| All pensioners | 880 | 260 | 1,280 |
| Pensioners with any savings | 1,900 | 730 | 2,290 |

Note: Figures were derived from the HB and Community Charge Benefit (CCB) Management Information System (HBMIS) annual 1 per cent. sample of HB/CCB cases in Great Britain in May 1991.

Information about savings of pensioners who did not qualify for HB and the average expenditure of pensioners' savings before they qualify for HB is not available.

ENVIRONMENT

Standard Spending Assessments

15. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects his review of standard spending assessments to be concluded; and what consultation there will be with local authorities and hon. Members on the outcome of the review.

Mr. Gummer: Our review of standard spending assessments will be completed in time for any changes to be incorporated in SSAs for 1994-95.

We have invited local authorities' views and my officials are consulting the local authority associations.

I shall consult in the usual way on my proposals for the rate support grant settlement for 1994-95 including SSAs, in the late autumn.

Centre for Accessible Environments

16. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will next visit the Centre for Accessible Environments to discuss the built environment and problems facing people with a disability.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend has no plans to visit the centre at present.

Climate Change Convention

17. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to ratify the climate change convention discussed at the UN Conference on Environment and Development.

Mr. Yeo: The United Kingdom has undertaken, along with our G7 and EC partners, to ratify the convention by the end of 1993.

Audit Commission

18. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to introduce legislation to strengthen the powers of the Audit Commission.

Mr. Baldry: The Audit Commission, and the auditors which it appoints, already has a wide range of powers under the Local Government Finance Act 1982 and the Local Government Act 1992. Nevertheless, if specific, soundly based measures to strengthen those powers were proposed, we would be willing to consider further legislation.

Water Companies (Nitrates)

19. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he is making of the total cost to water companies of removing nitrates and fertilisers from public water supplies in pursuance of the European Community directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Assessment of the financial impact of European directives and other obligations on water companies are carried out by the Director General of Water Services. I understand from him that to meet the costs of implementing the nitrate standards in the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations in England and Wales, water companies' capital expenditure programmes have included £74 million to the year 1991-92 and are at present forecast to require a further £120 million to the year 2000—at 1992-93 prices.

Water Metering

20. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has held with the Director General of the Office of Water Services on the issue of compulsory water metering.

Mr. Yeo: I have discussed a range of issues with the director general, including water metering. But it is for each water company to determine its method of charging, subject to the overriding requirement that they do not show undue preference to or unduly discriminate against any class or group of customers.

River Pollution

22. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with British Coal and the National Rivers Authority regarding pollution of the River Wear arising from pit closures in County Durham.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given to him by my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) on 28 April 1993, Official Report, column 429.

Opencasting

23. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new measures he is considering to limit the effect of opencasting on communities and their environments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: We have already announced the Government's intention to revise the planning guidelines on opencast coal. Following publication of the White Paper on the Government's coal review, we are proceeding as quickly as possible to public consultation. On 25 March, my right hon. and learned Friend the former Secretary of State issued interim planning guidance which will apply pending that revision.

Housing Association Homes

24. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he expects the Government's target of 153,000 housing association homes over the years 1992-93 to 1994-95 to be reached.

Sir George Young: The Housing Corporation estimates that over the period 1992-93 to 1994-95 its capital programme will provide 170,000 housing association homes. This is considerably more than the 153,000 promised in our election manifesto.

National Parks

25. Sir David Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the current administration of the national parks.

Mr. Gummer: Our policy statement on the national parks, published in January 1992, promised legislation to create independent authorities to administer the eight national parks in England and Wales currently run as county council committees. We remain fully committed to this proposal; the legislation will be introduced as soon as time permits.

Council Tax

26. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received proposing elimination of anomalies with band A in the new council tax provisions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friend has received some representations, but we are not persuaded that there is a case for changing the present arrangements.

Water Disconnections

27. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the levels of disconnection of domestic water supplies to recover debt.

Mr. Yeo: My right hon. Friend has received representations from a number of hon. Members and others, expressing concern about the number of domestic water supplies disconnected.

District Auditors

28. Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to review the powers available to district auditors to require the prompt attendance of witnesses and to avoid the destruction of documentary evidence relevant to their investigations.

Mr. Curry: Auditors already have extensive powers, set out in section 16 of the Local Government Finance Act 1982, to obtain documents and interview persons to enable them to carry out their audits. Nevertheless, I would be willing to consider specific, soundly based proposals to review those powers.

33. Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to review the powers available to district auditors to require the prompt attendance of witnesses and presentation of evidence relevant to their investigations.

Mr. Baldry: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Planning gave to the hon. Member for Nottingham, East (Mr. Heppell).

Water Charges

29. Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had this month with the Office of Water Services about the cost and method of charging for water.

Mr. Yeo: I met Mr. Byatt on 22 June to discuss a wide variety of topics, including progress on his periodic review of limits on water charges to apply from 1 April 1995 and the Department's consultation document "Using Water Wisely", which addressed methods of charging for water.

Rented Accommodation

30. Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the availability of accommodation for rent in the private sector.

Sir George Young: Information from the housing trailer to the 1991 labour force survey indicates that around 1·8 million households were living in privately rented accommodation in England in 1991.

Shared Ownership

31. Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for extending shared ownership in the social housing sector.

Mr. Gummer: The Housing Corporation's plans provide for an increase in the resources devoted to shared ownership from £261 million this year to £330 million in 1995-96.

Local Government

32. Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the financial methodology adopted by the Local Government Commission and its implications for decisions on future local government structures.

Mr. Curry: We have said that change to local government structure should be worth while and cost-effective over time. This does not mean that the cheapest option should be selected everywhere, or that all changes must be cheaper than the status quo. But costs should be assessed on a consistent basis, as our guidance to the commission makes clear. A methodology for financial appraisals has been developed by the commission's advisers, Ernst and Young, and I understand that they have invited comments on it. We will be examining this methodology to ensure that it is in accordance with our guidance.

London Docklands (Banquet)

34. Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the banquet the London Docklands development corporation held on 7 May.

Mr. Baldry: I have received one letter.

Green House Programme

35. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the cost of the greenhouse programme.

Mr. Baldry: A total of £60 million is being spent under the programme between 1991-92 and 1993-94.

Right to Buy

36. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to encourage more sales under right to buy.

Sir George Young: The Leasehold Reform, Housing and Urban Development Bill will extend the opportunity of home ownership under the right to buy to a new group of tenants. Those who cannot afford to buy outright will be able to buy on rents-to-mortgage terms, paying no more in mortgage payments than they currently pay in rent.

Council House Sales

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which local authorities have sold off all their council housing stock.

Mr. Gummer: Twenty-three local authorities have, with the agreement of their tenants, disposed of the ownership of all or most of their housing stock through large-scale voluntary transfers to housing associations. Of these, the following fifteen have sold all their housing stock:

East Dorset DC
Hambleton DC
Medina BC
Mid Sussex DC
Newbury DC
North Bedfordshire BC
Ryedale DC
Sevenoaks DC
South Buckinghamshire DC
South Wight BC
Suffolk Coastal DC
Swale BC
Tonbridge and Malling BC
Tunbridge Wells BC
West Dorset DC

The following eight local authorities have retained ownership of hostels or part shares in dwellings sold under shared ownership schemes:

Breckland DC
Broadland DC
Bromley BC
Chiltern DC
Christchurch BC
East Cambridgeshire DC
Rochester upon Medway CC
Surrey Heath BC

Urban Policy

Mr. Boyce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's current urban policy.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier to the hon. Members for Wallsend (Mr. Byers), for Birmingham, Small Heath (Mr. Godsiff) and for Liverpool, Broadgreen (Mrs. Kennedy).

Darwin Initiative

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the reasons for the delays in implementation of the Darwin initiative announced at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

Mr. Yeo: Following the Prime Minister's initial announcement of the Darwin initiative and the announcement by the then Secretary of State for the Environment, my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard), about its funding a major consultation exercise elicited over 200 responses. An independent advisory committee examined the responses and recently reported its recommendations to Ministers. We hope very soon to invite bids for specific projects.

Environmental Action Fund

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to contract out the management of the environmental action fund for 1993-94.

Mr. Yeo: I am considering plans to contract out management of the environmental action fund and hope to announce a decision shortly.

Low-energy Lamps

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in drawing up an energy labelling scheme for low-energy lamps.

Mr. Yeo: All light bulbs, including low-energy bulbs, already show their electricity consumption in watts both on the bulb itself and on the packaging. In the case of low-energy bulbs, most manufacturers also show on the packaging the electricity consumption of an equivalent conventional tungsten bulb. The Energy Efficiency Office (EEO) has recently published a short consumer guide "Energy Saving Lightbulbs—The Facts" which has been widely distributed by the major retailers to shops where the bulbs are sold.

The European Commission is investigating the need for a directive for the mandatory energy labelling of lighting as part of a plan to introduce energy labelling of all major electricity consuming appliances. The Government support these plans.

Paris Commission

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the decision taken at the Paris Commission meeting in Berlin on 16 June; and if he will set out the reasons for the United Kingdom's position on each of the proposals voted upon.

Mr. Yeo: The following list shows the outcome on the proposals for decisions and recommendations considered at the 15th joint meeting of the Oslo and Paris commissions, held in Berlin from 14 to 19 June, and the position adopted by the United Kingdom on them:

a. Recommendation concerning the limitation of pollution from existing primary iron and steel production installations (PARCOM recommendation 93/1): adopted by a three-quarters majority—Belgium, Portugal and Spain entered reservations—the United Kingdom accepted this recommendation;

b. Decision on the phasing-out of the use of hexachloroethane in the non-ferrous metal industry (PARCOM decision 93/1): adopted by a three-quarters majority—Germany and the United Kingdom entered reservations, as did the Commission of the European Communities—the United Kingdom reservation is because we have not completed the assessment of the cost of complying with the decision;

c. Recommendation for the reduction of marine pollution originating from the phosphate fertiliser industry: not adopted; the United Kingdom did not support this recommendation because it was insufficiently developed and would increase pressure to transfer the production concerned to areas discharging into seas outside the Paris Commission area;

d. Recommendation for further restrictions on the use and discharge of mercury: not adopted in its original form, because the part dealing with the imposing of a ban on the import of arm and leg shock-absorber bands containing mercury required clarification of the powers of EC member states to impose such a ban in the absence of Community action; a received Recommendation on further restrictions on the discharge of mercury from dentistry (PARCOM recommendation 93/2) was adopted by a three-quarters majority—France, Portugal and Spain entered reservations—the United Kingdom accepted this recommendation;

e. Recommendation on the elaboration of national action plans and best environmental practice for the reduction of inputs to the environment of pesticides from agricultural use (PARCOM recommendation 93/3): adopted by a three-quarters majority—France and Portugal entered reservations—the United Kingdom supported this recommendation;

f. Recommendation on the phasing out of cationic detergents DTDMAC, DSDMAC and DHTDMAC in fabric softeners (PARCOM recommendation 93/4): adopted by a three-quarters majority—the United Kingdom entered a reservation—the United Kingdom reservation was because the evidence that available substitutes are less environmentally hazardous is not available except to the firms that have developed them, and because formal action is unnecessary, given the 90 per cent reduction in usage in recent years;

g. Recommendation on the reduction of nutrients from agriculture: not adopted, only two countries supporting it; the United Kingdom did not support it, because it would have required unnecessary action by the United Kingdom;

h. Decision on the phasing-out of short-chained chlorinated paraffins: not adopted; the United Kingdom did not support this decision because we have not completed the assessment of the cost of complying with the decision;

i. Recommendation concerning increases in radioactive discharges from nuclear reprocessing plants: this proposal, tabled by Denmark, was not presented;

j. Recommendation on the total level of radioactive discharges into the maritime area: this proposal, tabled by the Republic of Ireland, was not presented;

k. Recommendation concerning increases in radioactive discharges from nuclear reprocessing plants: this joint proposal from Denmark and the Republic of Ireland was not adopted—Belgium, France, Germany, the Netherlands, Sweden and the United Kingdom had reservations, as did the Commission of the European Communities—a revised Recommendation concerning increases in radioactive discharges from nuclear reprocessing plants (PARCOM recommendation 93/5) was adopted by a three-quarters majority—Belgium, France and the United Kingdom entered reservations, as did the Commission of the European Communities—the United Kingdom reservation was because the first limb of the recommendation made no progress beyond the commitment in the 1992 action plan, while the second limb both was too vague to provide a proper basis for a PARCOM recommendation and, insofar as it provided for a role for the Paris Commission in the decision process, was inappropriate.

The acceptance by Belgium of decisions and recommendations was ad referendum, pending the completion of internal procedures; where the adoption of a measure depending on Belgian acceptance, therefore, that adoption is provisional pending confirmation of the Belgian position. PARCOM decisions bind those contracting parties which vote for them or subsequently accept them; PARCOM recommendations have no binding force.

Street Cleaning

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in his policy to bring forward proposals for voluntary involvement in street cleaning.

Mr. Yeo: Last year, my right hon. and learned Friend the then Secretary of State announced two new initiatives concerning voluntary involvement in improving the quality of the local environment. One was for a network of community environment wardens, the other was a study of the United States "adopt-a-road" scheme. Having consulted the voluntary sector on these proposals, we are commissioning a feasibility study by consultants on how best to explore the potential of the community environment warden concept. This work will take account of the study carried out by the Tidy Britain Group of the "adopt-a-road" schemes.

Radioactive Waste Repository

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what economic assessment his Department has conducted of the implications of delaying the Nirex scheme for a radioactive waste repository.

Mr. Yeo: The Department is keeping under continuous review all the consequences of changes in Nirex's plans for a deep disposal facility for low and intermediate-level radioactive waste.

Energy Management Assistance Scheme

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 26 May, Official Report, column 619, how many applications for the energy management assistance scheme have so far been received; how many grants have been paid; what are the expected savings in carbon and financial terms from each scheme; and what proportion of grant scheme is being monitored to assess eventual performance.

Mr. Yeo: Since the scheme started on 1 April 1992 there have been 1,828 applications received and 1,331 grants paid.

A review to assess potential carbon savings on each application will be carried out shortly. Currently average savings identified on each application are 13 to 16 per cent. of energy bills.

Arrangements are in hand to monitor applicants' eventual performance under the scheme, but the proportion of cases to be assessed has not yet been decided.

Business and the Environment

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future of his advisory committee on business and the environment.

Mr. Yeo: The Advisory Committee on Business and the Environment was established in May 1991 for a two-year term. The Committee will publish its third progress report shortly. The Government have reviewed the role of the committee and will make an announcement about its future in the near future.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total volume of carbon dioxide emissions for the United Kingdom in 1990; and what was the contribution made to those emissions by (a) power generation, (b) transport, (c) industrial production, (d) agriculture and (e) each main sector of manufacturing industry.

Mr. Yeo: Estimates of United Kingdom carbon dioxide emissions are published annually in the "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics". The 15th digest, published in May this year, shows that in 1990 the United Kingdom emitted 158 million tonnes of carbon (MtC) as carbon dioxide. Of this total, 54 MtC came from power stations, 34 MtC from transport, 40MtC from industry and 1MtC from agriculture. Refinery emissions accounted for 5MtC of the industrial total.

Reallocating power station and refinery emissions to final users increases estimated industrial emissions to about 53 MtC. The discussion document on our national programme for $CO_2$ emissions, published in December 1992 gives 1990 emissions on this basis for the following energy intensive industries:

| Sector | MtC |
|---|---|
| Iron and Steel | 9 |
| Other metals | 9 |
| Mineral Products | 4 |
| Chemicals | 9 |
| Paper and Board | 3 |

These sectors were responsible for about 65 per cent. of industrial emissions in 1990.

Environmental Damage

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when Her Majesty's Government received European Commission document ENV 170 COM (93) 47 "Final on Remedying Environmental Damage"; and what response he expects to make to the Green Paper.

Mr. Yeo: The Department received the document on 15 June 1993. The Government will submit their comments to the European Commission in due course.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what meetings he has had with the London residuary body; and what was discussed.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend has had no meetings with the London residuary body.

Architects Registration Acts

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration his Department's deregulation unit is giving to repealing the Architects Registration Acts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend the Minister for Housing, Inner Cities and Construction gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne, (Mr. Waterson) on 2 February 1993, Official Report, columns 89-90.

As part of the Government's deregulation initiatives, we propose to repeal the Architects Registration Acts, at the earliest legislative opportunity.

London Docklands (Entertainment)

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the expenditure on entertainment and press and public relations from public funds of the London Docklands development corporation for each year since its inception; what is the budget for the current financial year; and what is classed as entertainment and press and public relations for these purposes.

Sir George Young [holding answer 17 June 1993]: The information requested is as follows:

| | Total £ million |
|---|---|
| 1981-82 | 1·1 |
| 1982-83 | 2·5 |
| 1983-84 | 1·9 |
| 1984-85 | 2·3 |
| 1985-86 | 1·7 |
| 1986-87 | 1·7 |
| 1987-88 | 1·8 |
| 1988-89 | 1·8 |
| 1989-90 | 3·3 |
| 1990-91 | 3·0 |
| 1991-92 | 3·2 |
| 1992-93 | 3·5 |

The expected expenditure for 1993-94 is £3·5 million. The figures comprise advertising, events and associated expenditure, corporate publications and the cost of the LDDC visitors' centre and press office.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Silverware

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee if he will make a statement on the involvement of Aldous Antique Furniture Restoration in the purchase and sale of House of Commons silverware.

Mr. Colin Shepherd: This a matter for the Director of Catering Services and I shall ask her to write to the hon. Member.

WALES

Outdoor Centres

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being taken to ensure that outdoor centres in Wales follow safety standards; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: As employers, operators of outdoor activity and education centres have a general duty under section 3(1) of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 to have regard to the health and safety of all persons, including non-employees, affected by their activities. In June 1992, the Wales tourist board, in association with the Sports Council for Wales, launched a voluntary accreditation scheme for activity holiday centres which sets down detailed safety guidelines.

The Government will be considering whether further measures are needed in the light of investigations into the recent Lyme Regis incident. Possible changes to the existing statutory framework, the need for a regulatory body and additional guidance will be carefully considered.

Unemployment

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each travel-to-work area in Wales (a) the rate of economic inactivity between ages 16 and 65 years and (b) the percentage of the working population dependent on benefits as a primary source of income.

Mr. Redwood: Rates of inactivity, from the 1981 population census, are given in the table. 1991 census figures for travel-to-work areas are not yet available and there is no information on sources of income for travel-to-work areas.

The economically inactive population includes housewives, the retired, students and others who make an important contribution to society but fall outside the standard definition of the work force.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each travel-to-work area in Wales (a) the population and (b) the latest unemployment rate.

Mr. Redwood: Population data from the 1981 census and the latest unemployment rate for each of the travel-to-work areas can be accessed on-line by the staff of the Library of the House. Population data from the 1991 census are currently not available for travel-to-work areas.

Campylobacter

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of campylobacter-induced illnesses have been recorded in Clwyd in each year since 1987; and what measures are being taken to reduce the risk of exposure to this illness.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The data requested are given in the following table:

| | Numbers |
|---|---|
| 1987 | 291 |
| 1988 | 251 |
| 1989 | 330 |
| 1990 | 315 |
| 1991 | 321 |
| 1992 | 356 |

The Advisory Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food has been considering what measures could be taken to reduce the incidence of campylobacter infection, and is due to present an interim report to Health and Agriculture Ministers shortly. A further report on campylobacter will be produced when the results of surveillance and research work recommended in the report are available.

General government advice about food hygiene and avoidance of cross-infection is relevant to campylobacter.

Note: Figures given are laboratory reports of campylobacter reported to the Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre of the Public Health Laboratory Service by laboratories in Clwyd.

Facilities, Dyfed

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the (a) abattoirs, (b) community hospitals (c) NHS dental surgeries, (d) fire stations, (e) general practitioner surgeries, (f) jobcentres and (g) local livestock marts located in each local authority area of the county of Dyfed in (i) 1980, (ii) 1985 and (iii) 1988.

Mr. Redwood: The information available is given in the tables. Lists of individual general practice medical and dental surgeries are not maintained centrally. Each family health services authority maintains local directories of doctors and dentists.

Radiographers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the structure and financing of training of radiographers in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Since 1 April 1993 the training of pre-registration radiographers comes within the Towards 2000 arrangements to ensure that NHS has sufficient numbers of adequately trained staff available to meet employers' requirements. Funding for this training is provided centrally while post-registration training is a matter for employers.

Dental Health

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many patients of general dental practitioners in Wales have been recorded as having been infected as the result of cross-infection from hand-pieces that have not been autoclaved.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the change in real terms of invalidity benefit payments in Wales in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Estimates of government expenditure on sickness and invalidity benefits in Wales are given in the table. The figures are expressed in real terms at 1990-91 prices using the retail prices index.

Sickness and invalidity benefits

WALES

River Pollution

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being taken in Wales this summer to warn farmers of the environmental dangers of silage effluent entering river systems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The National Rivers Authority recently issued a press release warning farmers of potential problems this year and urging that caution be exercised in the collection and disposal of silage effluent. The authority also offers advice to farmers by way of programmes of farm visits; by talks to representative organisations and by relevant leaflets which are available free of charge at the authority's offices.

The Government's code of good agricultural practice on the protection of water provides detailed practical advice on avoiding pollution. In addition, under the ADAS free farm visits programme, farmers are offered assistance with farm waste plans, or free pollution advice. The Government's farm waste plan programme launched in a pilot area last year is being extended into two further areas in Wales so that more farmers will have the opportunity of benefiting from these plans.

Water Disconnections

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by year for the last five years, and by each water authority the number of (a) domestic and (b) industrial water disconnections made.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The number of domestic water disconnections is set out in the table. Information on the number of industrial water disconnections is not held centrally. Separate figures for domestic only disconnections are not available prior to 1989-90.

University of Wales

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total number of full-time staffed academic posts at each of the constituent colleges of the university of Wales in each of the past five years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the total number of full-time academic staff in post at each constituent college of the university of Wales, as collated and published by the "Universities Statistical Record", is shown in the table. The report for 1992-93 is not yet published.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the change in the number of academic staff posts in the university of Wales over the last four years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the complement of academic staff posts in the university of Wales is not held centrally.

Special Needs Housing

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made concerning the number of required housing places needed by people with learning disabilities in Wales in each of the next five years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Social services departments' own estimates are that a minimum of 90 places will be required in Wales for each year for individuals in the community needed to move into accommodation of their own. In addition, we are intending to resettle 110 individuals from long-stay hospitals in 1993-94 and 1994-95. Resettlement programmes have yet to be finalised for subsequent years.

GP Fund Holders

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the range of allocations given to all general practitioner fund holders for all hospital care which they purchase, showing the highest and lowest per capita expenditure for the practice population; and if he will make a statement on the reasons for the range.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The per capita allocations to fund holders for the purchase of hospital services in 1993-94 range from £48·13 to £128·09. Individual allocations reflect the nature and extent of these services with which patients in the practice have been provided over previous years.

Flooding

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on the subject of the recent flooding incidents in (a) the Meirionnydd area and (b) the Aberconwy area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: There have been numerous representations on a range of issues relating to the recent flooding in the Aberconwy area. My right hon. Friend the Minister of State and I were also able to hear at first hand some of the problems being experienced, when we visited the area in the aftermath of the floods. One representation has been received, in respect of the Meirionnydd area.

General Practitioners

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average list size for general practitioners in Wales in each year since 1980.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is given as follows:

Average list size for general practitioners in Wales (as at 1 October)

| | Average |
|---|---|
| 1980 | 2,086 |
| 1981 | 2,057 |
| 1982 | 2,013 |
| 1983 | 1,975 |
| 1984 | 1,946 |
| 1985 | 1,914 |
| 1986 | 1,881 |
| 1987 | 1,849 |
| 1988 | 1,851 |
| 1989 | 1,819 |
| 1990 | 1,813 |
| 1991 | 1,794 |
| 1992 | 1,743 |

Wales Tourist Board

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the budget of the Wales tourist board in each year since 1988-89; and what is the proposed budget for next year.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Wales tourist board's net budget provision since 1988 is shown as follows:

| | Net total £ million |
|---|---|
| 1988-89 | 9·211 |
| 1989-90 | 9·815 |
| 1990-91 | 10·488 |
| 1991-92 | 11·229 |
| 1992-93 | 13·636 |
| 1993-94 | 13·658 |

The board's budget for 1994-95 has not yet been determined.

Integrated Administration and Control System

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to alleviate the financial and other difficulties which will befall those farmers in Wales who have not submitted fully completed IACS forms to the Welsh office by the deadline set; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The governing EC regulations stipulate the information which farmers have to provide and the time scale within which they are required to do so. The Commission has indicated that the rules allow some flexibility in analysing the information submitted to avoid imposing unjustified penalties. I will take full advantage of this flexibility when the EC has clarified the extent of it.

Coastal Radioactivity

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment has been made during the clean-up of homes and other buildings along the north Wales coast, following the recent flooding, of the spread of radioactive contamination from the Irish sea and the sea shore inland.

Mr. Redwood: No such assessment was necessary as the recent flooding in north Wales was due to excessive rainfall and no homes or other buildings were affected by seawater.

SCOTLAND

Clyde Dredging

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what information he has about reduced levels of dredging being carried out by Clydeport; and what representations he has made to Clydeport about the dredging of the Clyde;

(2) if he will make it his policy to introduce legislation to oblige Clydeport to dredge the Clyde either in whole or in part;

(3) what policy proposals he has to ensure that the River Clyde is adequately dredged in the future;

(4) who is responsible for dredging the Clyde.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Clydeport Ltd., as successor to the former Clyde Port authority, has a permissive power to dredge the Clyde river channel to the extent that it is considered necessary for the maintenance and improvement of the port, but has no statutory duty to dredge.

It remains the Government's policy that port authorities, including Clydeport Ltd., should manage their businesses on a commercial basis and that the costs of dredging should be met by charges to the users of ports, or by other parties who benefit from the dredging. The Government have no plans to introduce legislation to alter this situation.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has about the consequences of reduced levels of dredging of the Clyde for (a) navigation, (b) flooding and (c) the environment.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I understand that a study to examine the effects of the cessation of dredging of the River Clyde, commissioned by Clydeport Ltd., and Strathclyde regional council, with the aid of European regional development fund grant support, reported in September 1989. Its main conclusions were that

(a) Available draught for navigation would be reduced:

(b) Extreme high tide levels would not increase significantly. However, low water levels in extreme weather conditions would be considered higher than at present. This could cause some increase in the risk and incidence of indirect flooding in the unlikely event of several extreme rainfall events occurring in short succession; and

(c) mudbanks would build at the sides of the channel, particularly at wider parts of the river.

Local Government

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about community councils in his consultation paper on local government in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: Five hundred and eighty-two responses to the consultation paper "Shaping the New Councils" commented on the future role of community councils, including 475 from community councils themselves. The responses ranged from those in favour of retaining the existing powers for community councils to those in favour of an expanded role.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what specific support local authorities receive from his Department to enable them to contribute to the dredging of the Clyde.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government do not support local authorities directly in relation to operations such as dredging. It is the responsibility of each local authority to allocate resources from within the total made available to them as they see fit.

Community Councils

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy towards the Association of Scottish Community Councils; and if he will meet representatives of the Association of Scottish Community Councils to discuss the future of community councils.

Mr. Stewart: The Association of Scottish Community Councils will provide a welcome focal point for community council activity in Scotland. My officials have already met representatives of the association to discuss their views on the future role of community councils. These are being taken into account in our deliberations on local government reform.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy towards a continuing role for community councils.

Mr. Stewart: I would refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Paisley, South (Mr. McMaster) on 10 June, Official Report, columns 275-76.

Multiple Occupation Houses

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what information he has on the number of houses in multiple occupation in each local authority area;

(2) how many local authorities have initiated resolutions for the licensing of houses in multiple occupation, under the order made in terms of the Civil Government (Scotland) Act 1981;

(3) how many Scottish local authorities have introduced a registration scheme for houses in multiple occupation; and what provisions are made to ensure that these premises are provided with reasonable means of escape in case of fire;

(4) what proposals he has to encourage local authorities to introduce a licensing or registration scheme for houses in multiple occupation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information is not held centrally on the number of houses in multiple occupation or on the number of resolutions for licensing schemes as they do not require the Secretary of State's approval. He has approved registration schemes in eight authorities.

Housing authorities' powers to ensure houses in multiple occupation have reasonable means of escape in case of fire are not dependent on their being registered or licensed. An authority can require a landlord to carry out works to provide a means of escape. If he does not do so, the authority may carry out the works itself and bill the landlord. The fire authority can close all or part of a house in multiple occupation immediately if it considers that there is a serious threat to life.

Guidance notes were issued in August 1991 suggesting how housing authorities might effectively exercise their powers to deal with houses in multiple occupation, including their powers to establish registration and licensing schemes.

Hospital Building

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his planned capital expenditure on hospital building for the next five years in Greater Glasgow, Lothian and Lanarkshire health boards.

Mr. Stewart: It is not possible to provide capital expenditure figures on hospital building for the next five years for Greater Glasgow, Lothian and Lanarkshire health boards. Health boards and trusts have been given provisional capital allocation figures for 1994-95 and 1995-96 only. These reflect only the consequences in those years of the 1993-94 allocations and do not take into account new starts in 1994-95 or 1995-96.

The figures are as follows:

Provisional Capital Allocations

| Health Boards/Trust | 1994-95 £ million | 1995-96 £ million |
|---|---|---|
| Greater Glasgow Health Board | 20·048 | 18·984 |
| Southern General Hospitals NHS Trust | 2·122 | 1·755 |
| Victoria Infirmary NHS Trust | 0·263 | 0·800 |
| Yorkhill NHS Trust | 3·081 | 2·907 |
| Lothian Health Board | 18·580 | 13·485 |
| West Lothian NHS Trust | 0·470 | 1·175 |
| Lanarkshire Health Board | 9·895 | 10·909 |
| Monklands and Bellshill NHS Hospital Trust | 2·579 | 1·887 |

Nursing Homes

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 18 June, Official Report, column 759 if he will describe the steps taken to ensure that health boards carry out their statutory duty to inspect nursing homes at least twice a year, and that the person registered actually does provide or make arrangements for the provision of medical serices for residents; and how many nursing homes have had adverse reports since the statutory requirements came into force.

Mr. Stewart: Health boards have a statutory responsibility, under the Nursing Homes Registration (Scotland) Act 1938 as amended, to visit and inspect all nursing homes in their area at least twice a year. If that duty is not carried out, the health board is in contravention of section 4(3) of the Act. Details of registration and inspection visits are contained in health board annual reports.

It is the responsibility of the health board registration and inspection team to ensure that the person registered provides, or makes provision for, medical services for residents. Nursing home residents are entitled to receive the same range of NHS services as they would expect to receive in their own homes.

Information is not collected centrally about nursing homes who receive adverse reports. It is for health boards to take action on homes which require to improve their standards.

House of Commons

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer from the Secretary of State for Health to the hon. Member for Dover (Mr. Shaw) of 21 June, Official Report, columns 34-39, if he will publish a list of awards given to voluntary organisations under the equivalent legislation in Scotland in 1992-93.

Mr. Stewart: In 1992-93, grants totalling £5·2 million were awarded to 156 voluntary organisations under section 10(1) of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 and £956,000 to 49 organisations under section 16B of the National Health Services (Scotland) Act 1978. Taking the two schemes together, this represents a real terms increase of 8 per cent. over 1991-92 and of 132 per cent. over 1978-79. Details are given in the table:

Woodlands

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was the area of new private planting of commercial coniferous woodland, excluding native pine and broadleaf planting, in each year between 1987-88 and 1991-92 in the United Kingdom;

(2) what is the forecast of private planting of commercial coniferous woodland in the United Kingdom, excluding native pine, for 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 24 June 1993]: The information is given in the table. It shows the areas of conifer planting and restocking—other than native pine—which have been undertaken, or are expected to be undertaken, with the aid of Forestry Commission grants.

DEFENCE

Equipment Exhibition

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) of 30 April, Official Report, column 590, from which countries buyers have been invited to attend the Royal Navy and British Army equipment exhibition in September.

Mr. Aitken: it has been the consistent practice of successive Administrations not to release details of invitations to attend British forces equipment exhibitions. Invitations are issued on a confidential basis and it would be a breach of trust to disclose details.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) of 30 June, Official Report, column 591, if he is yet in a position to announce the projected cost of mounting the Royal Navy and British Army equipment exhibition to be held in September; and what was spent on such events (a) in 1991 and (b) in 1992.

Mr. Aitken: I have little to add to my reply of 30 April. As was the case in 1991, all direct costs will be recovered from participating companies. There was no British military equipment exhibition in 1992.

Environmental Policy

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy on the purchase and use of (a) recycled paper, (b) low-energy light bulbs, (c) tropical hardwoods, (d) peat and (e) cars with catalytic converters.

Mr. Aitken: It is MOD policy that all procurement decisions take account of the environmental implications of the available options. Accordingly, recycled paper is purchased for all types of paper stationery applications wherever it can be obtained at a reasonable cost and is adequate to the task. Low-energy light bulbs are fitted as replacements wherever suitable light fittings are available and energy-efficient lighting systems are installed during building refurbishment programmes. Softwoods and other materials are used in preference to tropical hardwoods whenever possible; where the use of hardwoods is considered essential, our contracts specify that only hardwoods obtained from sustainably managed sources are to be used. Existing guidelines permit the use of peat based soil improvers on the defence estate. These are currently being reviewed and will take into account the outcome of current DOE work on peat extraction and use. Most types of vehicles purchased by my Department run on diesel fuel, with petrol engines being restricted to certain specialised vehicles. When the latter are purchased, we stipulate that they should be fitted with catalytic converters.

Low Flying

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about the crash between a low-flying Tornado and helicopter near Kendal and the near-miss between another low-flying Tornado north of Skipton; if he will set up and publish the result of inquiries into both incidents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The mid-air collision between a RAF Tornado GR1, on a routine training sortie and a civilian Bell 206 JetRanger helicopter, carrying out a pipeline inspection, occurred on 23 June 1993. Tragically, the two people in the helicopter were both killed in the accident. The Tornado aircraft landed safely at BAe Warton with no injuries to the service personnel. An RAF board of inquiry has been convened and in addition an investigation will be carried out by the air accident investigation branch. A summary of the findings will be published.

A Logan Air Shorts 360 aircraft has filed an airmiss report, involving a Tornado aircraft, with the Civil Aviation Authority. The incident occurred at 1924 hours on 22 June 1993 and will be fully investigated by the independent joint airmiss working group (JAWG). The JAWG's report will be published.

HMS Repulse

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the release of coolant from HMS Repulse on 20 June; what quantity of radioactivity was released; how many personnel were contaminated in the accident; and what is the estimated cost of the clean-up operation.

Mr. Hanley: The quantity of coolant spilt was about one pint and its radioactive content was barely detectable above background levels. No contamination was detected on the three personnel involved. The cost of the clean-up operation was negligible.

Budget and Personnel

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the April 1990, April 1993 and projected April 1996 figures for (a) the budget of, (b) the number of civilian personnel employed at and (c) the number of military personnel employed at (i) RNAD Trecwn, (ii) RNAD Milford Haven, (iii) RAF Brawdy, (iv) P & EE Pendine, (v) Merrion camp, Castlemartin, (vi) Penally camp, (vii) Manorbier range and (viii) HM mooring and marine salvage depot, Pembroke dock.

Mr. Hanley: On current plans, the details requested are as follows:

| | Budget £ million | Personnel Civilian | Personnel Military |
|---|---|---|---|
| (i) RNAD Trecwn[1] | | | |
| April 1990 | 12·1 | 381 | 0 |
| April 1993 | 8·6 | 378 | 0 |

(ii) RNAD Milford Haven closed in March 1991. It operated as a sub-depot of RNAD Trecwn and its budget was contained within the overall Trecwn budget—figures given under (i) above. In April 1990, it employed 161 civilians.

|---|---|---|---|
| April 1993 | 3·2 | 127 | 0 |
| April 1996 | n.y.d. | [6]— | [6]— |

[1] RNAD Trecwn is scheduled to close in March 1996.
[2] RAF stations did not have individual budgets prior to the introduction of the new management strategy in 1991.
[3] Budget figures for 1990 are not available on the same basis as those for 1993 and 1996 because of changes introduced under the new management strategy. Strength numbers refer only to Ministry of Defence personnel and do not include Property Services Agency staff or contractor staff.
[4] Budget figures include contributions from the federal German Army of £1,700,000 for 1990 and £2,000,000 for 1993 and 1996. An additional 50 season civilian casuals were or will be employed for each year.
[5] Budget and personnel figures include marine services and the shore establishment project office.
[6] Subject to review.

Personnel Overseas

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby) of 19 October 1992, Official Report, column 162, on the number of British military personnel in the United States of America, how many British service personnel are stationed in (a) Ascension Island, (b) Belize, (c) Brunei, (d) Cambodia, (e) Canada, (f) Cyprus, (g) Diego Garcia, (h) the Falkland Islands, (i) Gibraltar, (j) Hong Kong, (k) Turkey, (l) Western Sahara, (m) Western Samoa and (n) Yugoslavia; and what is the estimated cost to public funds for each of these countries.

Mr. Hanley: I will write to the hon. Member.

Rapid Reaction Corps

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 14 June, Official Report, columns 477-78, what are the types of divisions that Germany, Italy, Turkey, Greece, the United States of America and Spain will be providing for the rapid reaction corps; and what details he has concerning the personnel and equipment that will be provided by these countries to the rapid reaction corps.

Mr. Hanley: The types of divisions to be provided to the ACE rapid reaction corps if required are as follows:

Germany: one armoured division
Italy: one mechanised division and elements of corps troops (including a reconnaissance brigade)
Turkey: one mechanised division
Greece: one mechanised division
United States: one mechanised division
Spain: one light infantry division

Each division will be manned and equipped in accordance with national establishments and inventories.

Defence Industry

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 14 June, Official Report, column 475-76, if he will publish a detailed and declassified analysis of the factors that have influenced his consideration of the need to retain a viable and effective defence industry when making procurement decisions; what information sources he uses when considering the need to retain a viable and effective defence industry; and what staff in his Department are involved in his considerations of the need to retain a viable and effective defence industry.

Mr. Aitken: The importance of retaining a viable and effective defence industry is self-evident. It is in the United Kingdom's defence interest that there should be a commercially strong supplier base, able to compete effectively to provide good value for money in meeting the requirements of the armed forces for equipment and services. The success of the United Kingdom defence industry in overseas markets also has direct and indirect benefits for my Department; and the industry is a major employer.

We gather information on the defence industry from many sources. These include industrialists themselves in their frequent contacts with all levels of my Department; representations made on their behalf, including those from hon. Members; the trade associations, with which there are regular contacts; and our dealings with other Government Departments.

Advising on the implications for industry of individual procurement decisions is one of the tasks of project staff throughout my Department's procurement executive. In addition, it is one of the responsibilities of the central staff of the procurement executive to provide advice on matters affecting the defence industry.

Maralinga

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning his recent meeting with Mr. Gareth Evans, Foreign Minister of the Australian federal Government, regarding the clean-up of the Maralinga site.

Mr. Hanley: Following a meeting of Australian and United Kingdom Ministers and officials on 17 and 18 June, and consideration by the Australian Cabinet, it has been agreed in principle that Her Majesty's Government will pay £20 million to the Government of Australia in full and final settlement of Australia's claims against the United Kingdom regarding the rehabilitation of the former British nuclear weapon test sites at Maralinga and Emu in South Australia. The precise terms of the settlement will be the subject of a written agreement between the two Governments, the details of which are expected to be finalised soon. Her Majesty's Government remain of the view that our legal responsibilities for rehabilitation have already been fully discharged and the payment is therefore being made on a strictly ex-gratia basis. Nevertheless, we believe that this represents a satisfactory solution to a long-running dispute between the United Kingdom and Australia.

HEALTH

Health Care Costs

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost per head of providing health care in (a) inner London and (b) the rest of England; and what is (b) as a percentage of (a).

Mr. Sackville: Figures of total expenditure derived from the 1991-92 annual accounts of district health authorities and family health services authorities in England indicate that total expenditure per head was £655 in inner London and £460—representing 70 per cent. of the inner London figure—in the rest of England.

These figures exclude expenditure by regional health authorities and special health authorities.

Trent Regional Health Authority

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the latest statistics on the number of deaths in surgery for each of the hospitals in the Trent regional health authority.

Mr. Sackville: The health service indicators graphical package for 1990-91 contains information on the standardised number of deaths by district health authorities occurring in national health service hospitals. This is available in the Library. 1991-92 figures will be published shortly.

Health Care (Form AG3)

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many successful claims were made for health care costs using form AG3 in the last year for which figures are available.

Dr. Mawhinney: The available information is shown in the table.

Number of courses of adult dental treatment and sight tests obtained at reduced cost by people covered by AG3 certificates and numbers of optical vouchers used by people covered by AG2 or AG3 certificates issued under the national health service low-income scheme in England in 1991-92

European Year of the Elderly

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the actions taken by her Department in support of the European Year of the Elderly within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Bowis: The Department, in co-operation with the Department of Social Security, has overall co-ordinating responsibility in the United Kingdom for the European Year of Older People and Solidarity between Generations. Officials from the Department participate in an advisory committee on the year at European level.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State launched the year in the United Kingdom at the age resource awards, which were presented in London on 17 December 1992 by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. Following consultation with a wide range of national voluntary and professional bodies, statutory authorities and other relevant Government Departments, we have set up a group to advise on the conduct, promotion and evaluation of the programme of events to celebrate the year. The group involves representatives of organisations reflecting the interests of older people, and will take direct account wherever possible of the views and preferences of older people themselves. The programme in the United Kingdom is focusing on four major themes:

- Combating 'ageism' and promoting positive images of aging;
- Volunteering;
- Health promotion and active leisure, including remaining mentally active;
- Social integration, including problems of isolation and loneliness, information needs, housing, transport and community care issues.

Task groups have been set up to examine each of these themes and put forward specific proposals.

There are two elements to the year in the United Kingdom: a core programme involving national events focusing on the four themes, including cultural and sporting events, exhibitions and conferences; and a general programme, consisting of local and regional activities. A number of high-profile initiatives have already taken place and several important forthcoming events are planned, including a major European symposium in Birmingham in October on the theme "Promoting Health in Europe: Investing in Older People at Work."

The Department is also funding a secretariat—based at Age Concern England headquarters—to co-ordinate the core programme and to disseminate news and information.

Drugs (Use-by Dates)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance she has issued to hospitals as to the use of drugs after their use-by date.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department has issued guidelines on the safe and secure handling of medicines which contains guidance requiring hospital staff to return all out of date drugs or medicines to the pharmacy for disposal. Copies of the guidance will be placed in the Library.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence she has of hospitals using drugs which are past their use-by date; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Countess of Chester Hospital

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions have taken place between her Department and Merseyside regional health authority in respect of planned reductions in provision for the Countess of Chester hospital; and what estimates have been made of the effects of these cuts on patient care.

Mr. Sackville: Provision of services at the Countess of Chester hospital national health service trust is a matter for the trust in consultation with local purchasers. I understand that the hon. Member is to meet the chairman and chief executive of the trust to discuss this matter.

Patient Care

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what instructions she has given to health authorities to require hospital trusts to publish decisions made by the board which have an effect on patient care.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

GP Fund Holders

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the general practitioners in the area served by Doncaster health authority, and their location, according to those who are fund holders and those who are not.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally but may be obtained from Doncaster family health services authority (FHSA). The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. K Jones, the chairman of Doncaster FHSA, for details.

Neo-natal Care

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 21 June, Official Report, column 28, on the number of neo-natal cots and nurses, if she will specify the definition of particular local circumstances.

Mr. Sackville: The organisation of neo-natal care services varies from region to region and is dependent on a number of different factors: the number of births, the case mix—the balance between special care and the different levels of neonatal intensive care—the local geography and variations in demand. None of this can be prescribed centrally and must therefore be for local decision, taking into account any guidance from professional and other bodies.

Grading Appeals

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 27 May, Official Report, column 672, how many (a) clinical and (b) NHS staff grading appeals were outstanding in (i) the West Midlands regional health authority and (ii) South Birmingham Health District in (1) June 1991, (2) June 1992, (3) December 1992, (4) March 1993 and (5) June 1993; and how many of the appeals in each category outstanding in June 1993 had been outstanding for (A) up to six months, (B) between six months and one year, (C) between one and two years and (D) over two years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information available centrally is shown in the table:

Outstanding Grading Appeals as at 31 May 1993

| | West Midlands Regional Health Authority | South Birmingham Health Authority |
|---|---|---|
| Nurse clinical grading appeals: | | |
| Local level | 1,526 | 719 |
| Regional level | 1,424 | 47 |
| Other NHS staff grading appeals: | | |
| Regional level | 58 | 0 |

General Practitioner Services

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average number of general practitioner consultations per head in each family health service authority in 1990-91 and 1991-92; and what was the average number of general practitioner consultations per head of those aged over 65 years.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Euro-constituency Boundaries

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the 1993 electorates for United Kingdom parliamentary constituencies to be used in drawing up proposals for the revised European parliamentary constituencies will be published.

Mr. Sackville: The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys (OPCS) is today publishing the required information in OPCS Monitor EL 93/2. Copies are available in the Library. Further details will appear in the usual OPCS annual reference volume which will be published in August.

Housing for the Elderly

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions have taken place with social services departments of local authorities to ensure that sufficient priority is given to housing needs for the elderly.

Mr. Bowis: Under arrangements introduced on 1 April, it is for individual local social services departments to assess the community care needs of people in need of social services. They will consider, with other agencies, including housing authorities, how these needs can be met within local priorities. The community care support force visited a number of local authorities to offer advice and guidance as part of its overall work in helping authorities implement the community care reforms. Further advice on housing and community care issues is contained in the joint Departments of Health and the Environment circular (LAC(92)12) issued last September, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give details of individuals appointed to the chairs of district health authorities and chairs and non-executive directorships of NHS trusts within the Northern region, listing their occupation and sex.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is shown in the table:

Vaccination

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost to the NHS of vaccines provided on prescription solely for the purpose of foreign travel.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

NHS Employees

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 23 June, Official Report, column 182, if she will provide comparable information in respect of (a) a district general manager/chief executive, (b) a chief finance officer and (c) a unit general manager.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

TRANSPORT

European Transport Council

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) of 21 June, Official Report, columns 59-60, what were the voting figures for each decision taken at the European Community's Transport Council held on 7 and 8 June; and if he will make it his policy to include in further statements on council meetings information on whether formal votes were taken.

Mr. Macgregor: The Transport Council resumed on 19 June the meeting that it had held on 7 and 8 June. No formal votes were taken.

Traffic Regulation Conditions (Buses)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 21 June, Official Report, columns 58-59, where each of the traffic regulation conditions were imposed and for what reason in each case; and which conditions were subject to appeal and on what grounds appeals were allowed.

Mr. Freeman: Information on each traffic regulation condition imposed since 1986 and details of those that were subject to appeal is given in the table.

[1]Notes:

1. TRC No. 9 (Oxford). An appeal was lodged on the ground that there was no danger to other road users. The TRC was confirmed on the ground that though there was no danger to other road users there was evidence of severe congestion. It was varied slightly with regard to hours when the restrictions applied.
2. TRC No. 21 (Sheffield). An appeal was lodged on the ground that the deputy traffic commissioner acted ultra vires in that he banned new bus registrations and did not specify any times when the TRC should operate. The appeal was allowed in part: the ban on new registrations was lifted and the TRC was varied making it operational from 7 am to 7 pm on Mondays to Saturdays only.
3. TRC No. 23 (Edinburgh). The TRC has just been determined and no appeal has been lodged but the 28-day period in which an appeal may be made has not yet expired.
4. There have been three appeals by local authorities against the decision by the traffic commissioner not to impose the TRCs requested. These appeals were all dismissed.

Traffic Director, London

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total staff complement of the Traffic Director for London's office; what is its annual budget; what reports it makes to the Minister; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The Office of the Traffic Director for London has a staff of 12 and a budget for 1993-94 of £10 million. Under schedule 5 to the Road Traffic Act 1991, the traffic director is required to submit an annual report to the Secretary of State on the discharge of his functions together with a statement of accounts.

Red Route

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to ensure relief from red route-related traffic in respect of Windsor road N7, Fairbridge road N19, Stanhope road N6 and Cressida road N.19; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The traffic director intends to carry out a review of the pilot red route to ensure that it is operating within the framework set out in his network plan. If traffic problems on the roads mentioned are related to the red route, the traffic director will consider what measures can be taken. Otherwise, any action would be a matter for the appropriate highway authority.

Channel Ports

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action his Department is taking to ensure that the port of Ramsgate, serving Dunkirk, is restored to the same trans-Europe network map that features Dunkirk serving Ramsgate.

Mr. Key: We do not propose at present to press for any additions to the trans-European road network map. The current network proposals reflect key routes of greatest interest to intra-Community road traffic.

The importance of good road access to Ramsgate has been recognised already by the Government's substantial support, through transport supplementary grant, to Kent county council's programme of road improvements between Ramsgate and the M2.

Channel Tunnel (Signposts)

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what proposals his Department has for the improvement of the signposting of the channel ports in general and of Port Ramsgate in particular;

(2) what proposals his Department has to ensure that destinations in east Kent in general and the Isle of Thanet in particular are clearly signposted for the benefit of travellers emerging from the channel tunnel.

Mr. Key: The M20/A20 will be the principal route to the channel tunnel and the ports of Folkestone and Dover. The A2/M2 route will continue to serve Sheerness, Ramsgate and other east Kent towns. Although our signing will reflect this generally, in the case of either route the signing will not be restricted to the towns and ports which that route primarily serves.

We are now reviewing the signing of east Kent towns. Our plans include signing both Canterbury and Ramsgate, along with Folkestone and Dover, eastwards on M20 from the channel tunnel exits.

The details of the signing arrangements are necessarily complex and I have written to my hon. Friend about them.

Newcastle Western Bypass

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is (a) the design capacity of the road, (b) the maximum daily and hourly use of the bypass after its complete opening and (c) the maximum daily and hourly use of the road currently for the Denton Burn, Ponteland road and Great North road interchanges of the Newcastle western bypass.

Mr. Key: The Department does not use the concept of design capacity. It uses a range of flows to provide starting points for the economic, environmental and operational assessment of carriageway width options. In the case of this road the range of flows is 30,000 to 46,000 vehicles per day. This range of flows does not provide any indication of the ultimate traffic flows which the carriageway can carry.

The Newcastle western bypass was fully opened to traffic in December 1990. No hourly traffic flows are available. The 1991 annual average daily traffic flows are as follows:

| | Traffic flow |
|---|---|
| Great North Road to Kingston Park | 44,000 |
| Kingston Park to Ponteland Road | 44,000 |
| Ponteland Road to Stamfordham Road | 55,300 |
| Stamfordham Road to Denton Burn | 55,300 |

The 1992 annual average daily traffic flows are as follows:

| | Traffic flow |
|---|---|
| Great North Road to Kingston Park | 44,400 |
| Kingston Park to Ponteland Road | 47,800 |
| Ponteland Road to Stamfordham Road | 55,700 |
| Stamfordham Road to Denton Burn | 61,000 |

Road Signposts

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he intends to implement to improve road and destination signing and to clarify the regulations that relate to such signs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Destination signing reflects the relative importance of different destinations for traffic management purposes, taking account of distance; it is kept under review in the light of changing traffic patterns in any given area. New designs for the layout of signs, with a clear format relating closely to road status, have been developed following comprehensive consultation and a subsequent trial. These signs will be incorporated in the new traffic signs regulations which I expect to lay before the House around the end of the year.

Gatwick Express

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy that a competitive market should be allowed to operate in the event of the Gatwick express being privatised on the route between Gatwick and Central London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The promotion of competition in the provision of railway services is a key objective of our privatisation proposals. We have made it clear that on-track competition will be moderated for the first generation of franchises to the extent necessary to ensure the successful transfer of British Rail's passenger services to the private sector, and to ensure that the taxpayer receives value for money for subsidising services. These concerns will determine the degree of competition to apply between the Gatwick express and other services on the route between Gatwick and central London; and that will be decided before the Gatwick express is offered for franchise.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Set-aside

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many EC member state farmers have completed their set-aside forms on time; and in which states a lower proportion of forms has been received than in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jack: The Commission has asked member states in general terms to report on the implementation of the integrated administration and control system. We understand that, as yet, the information it has received is not complete and no complete Community picture on this matter is currently available.

Tuberculosis (Badgers)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations she has received regarding the need for carcases of dead badgers to be checked for tuberculosis; and what is her assessment of the dangers to cattle of unchecked tuberculosis in the badger population.

Mr. Soames [pursuant to his reply, 25 June 1993, c. 328-29]: I would like to make it clear that the statement that badgers infected with tuberculosis do not pose a significant threat to the national cattle herd was based on scientific evidence that the disease in badgers has been associated with breakdowns in cattle herds only in south-west England and in a limited number of other areas.

Waterside Habitats

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations she has received about the possibility of applying set-aside payments to the creation of riverside buffer zones, in conformity with option 2 on the recreation of waterside habitats set out in her Department's consultation document on the habitat improvement scheme; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: We received a large number of comments from many organisations on our consultation document on the proposed habitat improvement scheme. The option for water fringe habitats was widely welcomed. We are currently finalising our proposals for the scheme which we will be submitting to the Commission as part of the agri-environmental programme for England.

Cormorants and Goosanders

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will place in the Library a copy of her Department's new application form for licences to control cormorants and goosanders.

Mr. Soames: Yes. The new form is designed to assist applicants in providing the sort of information the Ministry requires to make licensing decisions. It will result in a more streamlined and therefore speedier decision-making process.

Vitamins

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations have been made by her Department to the European Commission concerning its directive on vitamins.

Mr. Soames: In early 1992, there was an exploratory discussion in Brussels on the possibility of a directive on dietary supplements, including vitamins. However, there have been no subsequent developments.

Public Appointments

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the names, occupations and current employers of those who currently hold positions in each public body to which he makes appointments; if he will make a statement on the considerations taken into account when making such appointments; and if he will list details of the posts and salaries or allowances payable which have changed since the publication of "Public Bodies 1992".

Mr. Jack [holding answer 25 June 1993]: No changes have yet taken place in the remuneration for members of the MAFF advisory bodies listed in "Public Bodies 1991" —a copy of which is available in the Library of the House —nor for the agricultural wages board or agricultural wages committees. For the executive bodies, tribunals and public corporations the new rates payable for 1 April 1993 are as follows—all figures are sterling:

| Executive bodies | Chairman £/per annum | Deputy chairman £/per annum | Members £/per annum |
|---|---|---|---|

Members of public bodies receive the same rates of travel allowances as civil servants, but subsistence is paid according to actual costs. There have been no changes to this agreement since the publication of "Public Bodies 1992".

The biographical information on appointees is not held centrally in the form requested. However, appointments are made on the basis of suitability, merit and personal expertise and announced in Ministry news releases, copies of which are placed in the Library of the House.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Buckingham Palace (Police)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment has been made of the numbers of additional Metropolitan police officers who will have to be deployed and the number of officers who will have to be redeployed consequent on the opening of Buckingham palace to the public; and what assessment he has made of the implications.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Metropolitan police have reviewed the policing of the palace in consultation with the royal household and other agencies. I understand that there will be no additional cost to the Metropolitan police.

Non-attendance of Witnesses

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he will take to change the law to ensure that when a court case is withdrawn due to non-attendance of witnesses and it is subsequently shown that they were deliberately prevented from attending the court the case can be resubmitted.

Mr. Maclean: Although there are no current plans to amend the law in this area, we continue to keep the matter under close review. We shall wish to consider in particular any recommendations the Royal Commission on Criminal Justice may make that have bearing on the law in this area.

Inner-city Estates

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ensure that adequate police resources are applied to countering intimidation on inner-city housing estates.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The deployment of resources is the responsibility of chief officers of police.

Homosexuality

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review and revise the law regarding the age of consent for homosexual adults.

Mr. Maclean: The criminal law is kept continually under review, but there are no current plans to amend it in this area.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest number of (a) ex-detainees and (b) dependants from the former Yugoslavia who have arrived in the United Kingdom under the arrangements announced last November; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A total of 238 ex-detainees and 404 dependants from the former Yugoslavia have so far arrived under the arrangements which I announced on 30 November 1992.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for the United Kingdom to receive refugees from the former Yugoslavia other than ex-detainees or their dependants; what is the estimate of such persons now in (a) Bosnia, (b) Croatia and (c) Slovenia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Our programme to receive 1,000 vulnerable individuals plus their dependants has concentrated on former detainees since the humanitarian organisations have given priority to this group. Outside the programme, refugees from former Yugoslavia—like individuals of other nationalities—may seek entry clearance to come to the United Kingdom if they feel that this would be a more appropriate country of refuge. I understand that the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees latest estimates of refugees and displaced people in the region are: Bosnia 2,280,000; Croatia 572,000; Slovenia 35,000.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to restrict access through the criminal injuries compensation scheme to recompense for loss of earnings;

(2) whether he intends to apply his proposed tariff-based system for criminal injuries compensation to children who are victims of abuse;

(3) which organisations and individuals he has consulted about proposals to reform the criminal injuries compensation scheme;

(4) when he plans to publish his White Paper for the future of the criminal injuries compensation scheme;

(5) what account his proposed new criminal injuries compensation scheme will take of loss of wages;

(6) what plans he has to exclude nurses, fire fighters and police officers from eligibility to compensation for criminal injuries;

(7) who will determine awards under his Department's proposed tariff-based scheme for criminal injuries compensation;

(8) if he will make it his policy to ensure that victims of criminal violence continue to receive recompense under the criminal injuries compensation scheme for post-traumatic stress and similar distress.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) on 30 June 1993 at column 498 in which I explained that we would be setting out our proposals for the new tariff scheme in a White Paper later this year. The issues raised by the hon. Member will be dealt with in that document. As I also indicated in my reply, while we are not conducting a formal consultation exercise we have already received observations from the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board, Victim Support and others.

Crime Clear-up Rates

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the proportion of the clear-up rate for each police force in (a) 1990 and (b) 1991 accounted for by offences taken into consideration.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is contained in the table.

Notifiable offences[1] cleared up by the police: percentage of offences cleared up by being taken into consideration England and Wales

Prison Service (Disciplinary Arrangements)

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for revising disciplinary arrangements in the Prison Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Following a review of disciplinary procedures in the prison service, I have now approved revised arrangements, which include a new code of discipline for the service. Under the revised arrangements, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House, all prison service staff are now brought together under a single code of discipline, which replaces the different procedures which previously applied to various grades of staff. The primary aim of the revised arrangements, which are consistent with employment law and with guidance from the advisory, conciliation and arbitration service, and which will be implemented with effect from 1 July 1993, is to ensure that standards of conduct are maintained and to encourage improvement in individual conduct. The new code details the procedures for taking disciplinary action when conduct falls below those standards.

In keeping with moves across the prison service to ensure that decisions are taken at the appropriate level, responsibility for taking disciplinary action up to and including dismissal is being devolved to prison governors and to heads of division at prison service headquarters.

The new code lays down timescales for completing each stage of the disciplinary process, and introduces a new system of progressive disciplinary warnings and penalties. Governors and heads of division will award penalties and will undertake all the administrative work connected with each case. There are rights of appeal built in to various stages of the disciplinary process.

Any disciplinary offences which are alleged to have been committed before 1 July 1993 will be dealt with under the disciplinary arrangements which were then in force.

I believe that the revised arrangements are a considerable improvement on the disparate arrangements previously in force, and that they represent a significant step forward for all concerned.

EDUCATION

EC Education Council

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Duncan) of 16 June, Official Report, column 600, what were the voting figures for each decision taken at the European Community's Education Council held on 11 June; and if he will make it his policy to include in future statements on Council meetings information on whether formal votes were taken.

Mr. Boswell: No formal votes were taken at this Council meeting. I can confirm that it will be our policy to make this information available in future reports on Council meetings.

Smoking

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what guidance he has issued to school governors and local education authorities on the introduction of no-smoking policies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: We believe that all schools should develop clear policies on smoking, and are currently considering what guidance we might offer to help them in this process.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sheep Quotas

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans she has to introduce legislation to implement the quota transfer and leasing of sheep reference quantities.

Mr. Jack: The Sheep Annual Premium and Suckler Cow Premium Quotas Regulations 1993 were laid before Parliament on 30 June. These regulations implement the transfer and lease arrangements for both sheep and suckler cow quotas.

Folic Acid

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made since the publication by the Chief Medical Officer of his report on folic acid and the prevention of neural tube defects, in ensuring an increased range of breads and cereals fortified with folic acid.

Mr. Soames: My Department wrote to the relevant trade organisations commending the report to their members and encouraging them to follow the recommendation to increase the range of breads and breakfast cereals fortified with folic acid. The response has been positive and we are aware of some new fortified products already.

Diversification

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what initiatives she is taking to help farmers to diversify and maintain rural employment.

Mr. Jack: In the negotiations that resulted in reform of the common agricultural policy the United Kingdom was successful in protecting many of the support mechanisms that are of benefit to United Kingdom farmers. This success will help maintain employment in an increasingly diversified rural economy.

Days at Sea

Mr. Harris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many fishing vessels have been allocated the basic 80 days provisional days at sea allocations in (a) England, (b) Cornwall and (c) Devon; and how many owners in each category have lodged claims.

Mr. Jack: The minimum 160 half-days allocation was issued provisionally in respect of 801 fishing vessels administered by fisheries offices in England. Of these, 148 —including 60 Channel Islands vessels—are administered by the south western fisheries district—Devon, Somerset and Avon—and 80 by the western fisheries district—Cornwall.

By 25 June 1993, applications for additional days at sea had been received in respect of 577 fishing vessels, administered in England, which had been provisionally issued with the minimum allocation. Of these, 110—including 40 Channel Islands vessels—are administered by the south western fisheries district and 54 by the western district.

Fur Farming

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on fur farming.

Mr. Soames: The Mink (Keeping) Order 1992, which was adopted following a debate in the House on 8 December 1992, requires that establishments keeping mink for fur must be licensed by Agriculture Departments. In order to obtain a licence specific standards of security must be met to prevent the escape of mink. There are currently 19 licensed establishments in England and two in Scotland. Welfare conditions on fur farms are monitored regularly by the state veterinary service on the basis of recommendations adopted by the Council of Europe.

Intervention Board

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what key performance targets have been set for the Intervention Board; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Shephard: In agreement with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland I have set the following targets:

to process 98 per cent. of claims within ministerial deadlines and all claims within regulatory deadlines or, in their absence, 60 days;
to process at least 98 per cent. of claims correctly;
to achieve 2 per cent. running cost efficiency gains;
to achieve 5 per cent. improvement in productivity;
to keep disallowance to within 0·4 per cent. of EC funds handled; to keep expenditure within vote provision and running cost and cash limits; and to achieve 5 per cent. new value for money savings in the procurement of goods and services.

Fisheries Council

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Fisheries Council held in Luxembourg on 24 July.

Mr. Jack [pursuant to his reply, 28 June, cols. 383-84]: No votes were taken on any matter before the Council.

ENVIRONMENT

Radiation

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy in relation to the 1991 recommendation from the National Radiation Protection Board relating to a dose constraint of 0·3 mSv of radiation per year for members of the public.

Mr. Yeo: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, acting jointly with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in the case of nuclear licensed sites, have taken account of the dose constraint of 0·3 mSv in developing authorisations under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 for disposals of radioactive waste since this was first recommended by the International Commission for Radiological Protection in 1990.

THORP

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations were held between his Department and the European Commission in its preparation of the reply to written question No. 2486/92 to the Commission by Anita Pollock MEP on the matter of the requirement of an environmental impact assessment on the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield, as published in the Official Journal of the European Communities, 7 June, C155 volume 36, page 12.

Mr. Yeo: None.

Radioactive Waste (Advisory Committee)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who have been nominated by Her Majesty's Government to represent the United Kingdom on the Advisory Committee for the community plan for action in the field of radioactive waste management under council resolution of 29 June 1984; what criteria are used in choosing United Kingdom nominations; and if he will set out the qualifications of the current United Kingdom representatives.

Mr. Yeo: The United Kingdom representatives on the committee are the head of the Department's radioactive substances division and his counterpart in the Scottish Office. The occupants of these posts are well placed to provide appropriate advice to the Commission.

Water Charges

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what system exists for persons wishing to appeal against the level of water rates or water charges in respect of a property to do so to an independent tribunal or court.

Mr. Yeo: Water charges are in respect of most properties based on rateable value and there has never been a specific right of appeal against their level—though there was a right of appeal against domestic rateable values and a time limited right still remains in the case of non-domestic rateable values. The independent Director General of Water Services has a duty to protect customers' interests and to ensure that there is no discrimination in setting charges. Complaints about the application of charges in individual cases, which customers are unable to resolve with their local water company, can be taken up with the appropriate local customer service committee (CSC) of the Office of Water Services. These committees are not appellate bodies but were established specifically to represent customers' interests and to investigate complaints.

Where a customer receives a metered supply of water, and disputes the accuracy of the meter reading, he may, under the Water (Meters) Regulations 1988, request the water company to test the meter. Any dispute arising under the regulations may be referred to the arbitration of a single arbitrator appointed by agreement between the parties or, in default of agreement, by the Secretary of State.

Noise Abatement Zones

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations his Department has received on noise abatement zones; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: I have received no recent representations, apart from those from the hon. Member.

The report of the Noise Review Working Pary 1990, copies of which are in the Library, found that the application of NAZs was limited by their complexity and the demands on local authority resources. Subsequent research by the Building Research Establishment considered this further and demonstrated that the principal problems are the complexity of the regulations for setting up NAZs and the intensive use of manpower in monitoring the statutorily required noise level registers. My Department is considering these findings.

Specialist Advisers

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the specialist advisers appointed to each Minister in his Department.

Mr. Gummer: I have appointed Keith Adams as my political adviser and have reappointed James Gray as a political adviser working primarily with my Department's Ministers of State. I have reappointed Tom Burke as an expert adviser on environmental affairs and Professor Peter Hall as an expert adviser on planning affairs.

Housing

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the total specific capital grant and credit approvals for housing purposes to each local authority in England for 1992-93 and 1993-94 and the receipts taken into account for the 1993-94 figures.

Mr. Baldry: A table setting out information on allocations of specified capital grant, which forms part of the annual housing investment programme (HIP) allocations, for each local authority in England has been placed in the Library of the House.

There are two types of credit approval—basic credit approvals and supplementary credit approvals.

Basic credit approvals can be used to support capital expenditure in any local authority service, and are not allocated to individual services. I refer the hon. Member to the documents "Basic Credit Approvals 1992-93" and "Basic Credit Approvals 1993-94" for information on basic credit approvals and receipts taken into account. Both documents are available in the Library.

Supplementary credit approvals provide additional authority for local authority borrowing. As indicated in the answer by the then Secretary of State for the Environment to the hon. Member for Blackburn (Mr. Shaw) on 5 March, Official Report, column 333, information on supplementary credit approvals issued by the Department in the years 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93, including those relating to housing capital expenditure, will be placed in the Library of the House shortly.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish for each year since 1978 the number of local authority housing units built by each authority (a) in total, (b) for sheltered housing and (c) for general need; and what he forecasts the situation to be for the current year and each of the next five years.

Sir George Young: Estimates of the total numbers of local authority house-building completions within each local authority area in England are in the following publications:

Year and Publication title and issues:
1978
"Local Housing Statistics" Issue No. 49.
1979
"Local Housing Statistics" Issue No. 59.
1980-84
"Housebuilding in England by Local Authority Areas 1980 to 1989".
1985-1990
"Local Housing Statistics" Issue No. 103.
1991-1992
"Local Housing Statistics" Issue No. 105.

The Department collects information about special types of housing for the elderly, including sheltered dwellings—referred to as "dwellings with a warden" before 1986—and about dwellings for chronically sick and disabled people.

Figures for individual local authorities are shown in certain issues of "Local Housing Statistics". Annual data for each year from 1982 to 1991 are in issues Nos. 66, 70, 74, 78, 82, 86, 90, 94, 99 and 102 respectively. Combined figures for July 1980 to December 1981 for dwellings built for the elderly and also for August 1970 to December 1981 for dwellings built for the chronically sick and disabled are in issue No. 66. Data were not collected before July 1980 on dwellings specially built for the elderly.

The Department does not prepare forecasts of housebuilding activity.

Entry on Land (Local Government Officials)

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the powers local government officials have to enter land without prior notification.

Mr. Baldry: This question cannot be answered without disproportionate cost. Such powers of entry are, however, conferred only in cases where it may be necessary for officials to enter land to deal with an emergency in a situation in which it is not possible to contact the owner or his agent in advance.

Home Improvement Grants

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the number and percentage of housing improvement grant applications refused in (a) full and (b) part due to means testing since means testing was introduced for grant purposes.

Sir George Young: This information is not collected by the Department.

Solent Wetlands

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish his plans for the wetlands of the Solent under the Ramsar convention; and if he will make a statement on the timing of the publication.

Mr. Yeo: English Nature is preparing a detailed case for submission to my Department but is unlikely to be in a position to make a formal recommendation before the end of this year. Good progress continues to be made in listing sites under the Ramsar convention. The United Kingdom has now listed 66 such sites, the largest number of any contracting party to the convention.

Smoking

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he has issued to local authorities on the introduction of no-smoking policies in their workplaces and in places they own which are entered by members of the public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The Government's "Code of Practice on Smoking in Public Places", which provides practical guidance to owners and managers on implementing suitable policies on smoking, was brought to the attention of local authorities in DOE circular 7/92, issued on 28 February 1992. The circular also drew attention to advice on passive smoking at work available from the Health and Safety Executive and the health education and promotion agencies.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how progress towards the "The Health of the Nation" goal of 80 per cent. of public places being smoke-free by 1994, is being monitored; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: My Department has commissioned market research into smoking policies operating in various types of public place. It is planned to follow this with a further survey in 1994.

Commission on Sustainable Development

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the outcome of the first meeting of the United Nations Commission on Sustainable Development held in New York from 14 to 25 June.

Mr. Gummer: The commission was established following the Earth summit in Rio de Janeiro in June 1992. Its task is to monitor progress in following up the Rio agreements, focusing in particular on the implementation of agenda 21.

The commission has made a highly satisfactory start. Countries represented at the first session in New York adopted a positive and constructive attitude towards the work of the commission.

Agreements were reached on the commission's work programme and on guideline for national reporting of progress in implementing agenda 21. Agreement was also reached on a number of intersessional meetings on substantive issues which would prepare the ground for the commission's second session next year.

The 1994 session will focus on health, human settlements and fresh water, and toxic chemicals and toxic waste; 1995 on land, desertification, forests and biodiversity; and 1996 on atmosphere, oceans and all kinds of seas. A number of issues, including finance, technology transfer, co-operation and capacity building, will be considered each year. In 1997 the commission will review overall progress in implementing agenda 21.

All countries have been encouraged to contribute to the process by making national reports on progress towards sustainable development in a common format and covering issues identified by the commission.

The United Kingdom Government are members of the Commission and are playing a full part in its work with wide participation from non-governmental organisations. We aim to produce the United Kingdom's own sustainable development plan by the end of 1993, and report on this to the commission's 1994 session.

Market Testing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much his Department spent on legal advice regarding the implications of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 for the market-testing programme.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 29 June 1993]: It is not possible to identify separately the cost of legal advice on these regulations which has been provided specifically in relation to my Department's market-testing programme.

Building Management Businesses

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he has made in selling the building management businesses.

Mr. Curry [pursuant to his reply, 24 June 1993, c. 247]: I am pleased to be able to announce the exchange of contracts for the sale of the PSA building management businesses BM South East and BM South and West. The businesses have been sold to a joint venture between Pell Frischmann Consulting Engineers Ltd. and Matthew Hall Ltd., a subsidiary of AMEC plc.

This sale will benefit taxpayers, staff and customers. The next step is for staff to choose individually whether to transfer to the privatised business. The future of the businesses now lies in the private sector and I hope many staff will choose to transfer with it. Completion of the sale is expected during the next three months.

The joint venture will pay the Government a net £11·4 million for the two businesses over the next four years. Government will in addition meet the costs of redundancies, should they be necessary, up to a agreed figure in the first five years following completion of the sale. The redundancy entitlement of transferring staff will be guaranteed by Government for five years after the sale. Further details cannot be released until all the sales have been completed.

The joint venture brings together a major contractor and an established engineering consultancy. I am confident that the combination of their commercial skills with the strengths of the BMSE and BMS&W work forces will give the businesses a sound future in the private sector.

I hope to make further announcements soon about the sales of the other three BM businesses.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Paternity Cases

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will bring forward proposals to amend the law to compel fathers or alleged fathers, in cases of contested paternity, to take blood tests, or to allow the court to take refusal to take a blood test into account in deciding paternity cases and to provide that repeated refusal to take a blood test will be construed as evidence supporting the case of the opposing litigant.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have no plans to amend the law to make blood tests compulsory in cases of disputed paternity. Under the provisions of section 23 of the Family Law Reform Act 1969, as amended, courts may already draw what inferences seem appropriate in any particular case from a refusal to undertake a blood test.

Magistrates' Clerks

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what arrangements are made for the payment of magistrates court clerks; and to what extent local authorities are concerned with those arrangements.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The salaries and other expenses of magistrates' court clerks are met by the local paying authorities who are reimbursed up to 80 per cent. of those costs by specific grant from my Department. However, court clerks are actually employed by the local magistrates' courts committee which must agree its overall budget with its paying authority. Additionally, the joint negotiating committee for magistrates' courts staff, the national body which negotiates the salaries and conditions of service for court clerks, includes local authority representatives on the management side.

Care Centres

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will set out the arrangements and the timetable for the national review of the designation of care centres for the hearing of care cases brought under the Children Act 1989; and if he will list those organisations which are to be consulted at local level.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The national review of care centres, which has always been a part of the Lord Chancellor's arrangements for monitoring the Children Act, will begin in the late summer. The precise arrangements and timetable have yet to be finalised. Consideration is also being given to who should be consulted locally, in order that there should be a full and effective consultation.

Intestacy

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to implement the recommendations in the Law Commission's report No. 187 on distribution on intestacy.

Mr. John M. Taylor: This report contains a number of recommendations. The Government have not accepted the first recommendation, namely that a surviving spouse should in all circumstances receive the whole of the intestate's estate. The Government have, however, decided to accept the Commission's other recommendations, which concern the "hotchpot" rule, survivorship clauses and provision for cohabitants, and will introduce legislation to implement them when a suitable legislative opportunity occurs.

The Government are concerned to provide additional protection for a surviving spouse in order to enable him or her in the great majority of cases, where the size of the intestate's estate permits it, to remain in the former matrimonial home and to have a sufficient surplus on which to live. To this end the Lord Chancellor will make an order as soon as practicable to increase the statutory legacy payable to a surviving spouse on intestacy from £75,000 to £125,000 in the case of the lower legacy, and from £125,000 to £200,000 in the case of the higher legacy.

Long Criminal Trials

Mr. Bates: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what progress has been made since the publication of the consultation paper on long criminal trials.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The consultation paper was published in December 1992 to seek the views of practitioners and the general public on ways of reducing the length of long trials and particularly those involving serious and complex fraud.

A total of 84 contributions were received from members of the judiciary, legal practitioners and their professional bodies, Government Departments, organisations with an interest in the subject-matter, academics and other interested individuals. These responses have been considered by the inter-departmental working group. It is clear that many of the issues raised touch on areas covered by the Royal Commission on Criminal Justice, whose report is expected shortly.

The Home Secretary, the Attorney-General and the Lord Chancellor will therefore consider the responses received and the views of the working group as they take forward their consideration of the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Criminal Justice.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Sunday Trading

7. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to allow Sunday trading by supermarkets in the Province.

Mr. Ancram: None, but as has been made clear in the House on several occasions, we shall in due course review the law in the light of developments in England and Wales.

Banbridge-Newcastle Road

8. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to improve the Banbridge-Newcastle road.

Mr. Atkins: At present improvements to the value of £100,000 are planned over the next three years.

Community Relations

9. Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the current situation regarding community relations in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: The most recent social attitudes survey indicated that perceptions of relations between Protestants and Catholics continue to improve.

This is encouraging, but the healing of community divisions will require goodwill on all sides, at political, community and individual levels. Government will continue to encourage and support those involved in community relations work.

Building Regulations (Fire)

10. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on progress in the review of Building Regulations (Fire) which his Department is conducting.

Mr. Atkins: Revised draft regulations will, in compliance with European Community requirements, be notified to the Commission later this year. It is anticipated that the revised regulations, which include amendments to the fire safety requirements, will be made in early 1994 and come into operation later that year.

Casement Park

11. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received concerning referral of the Casement Park case to the Court of Appeal.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I have received a range of representations, from hon. Members and others, to the effect that the cases of Mr. Patrick Kane, Mr. Michael Timmons and Mr. Sean Kelly should be referred again to the Court of Appeal.

Tourism

12. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the Government's initiatives to help boost the tourist trade in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: New powers, provided in 1992, are being used by the Northern Ireland tourist board to promote, market and develop Northern Ireland's tourist potential. A range of new initiatives are being put into operation with the objective of attracting tourists and developing a high quality, professional, international tourist product.

Pensioners (Fuel Bills)

13. Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met officers of Age Concern in Northern Ireland to discuss matters involving winter fuel cost for old people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: No such meeting has been held recently. Extra help will be given from April 1994 to less well off pensioners and others on low incomes. Details of the precise way in which this extra help is to be provided will be announced in the autumn.

28. Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has had from officers of Age Concern in Northern Ireland on winter fuel cost for old people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: My noble Friend the Lord Arran recently received a letter from officers of Age Concern that included an inquiry about fuel costs for old people. The representations made in that letter are currently being considered.

University Applications

14. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons in Northern Ireland are applying to go to university in October.

Mr. Ancram: The application process has not yet been completed for the 1993-94 academic year. However, a provisional figure for those from Northern Ireland applying to go to university in October is 12,647. Numbers of applicants for part-time places are not yet available.

Law and Order

15. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has for reviewing law and order policies as they relate to Northern Ireland.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The emergency provisions are regularly considered by the House in the light of reports by an independent reviewer. Proposals which flowed from a wide-ranging review of other aspects of criminal justice policy were published in the discussion paper "Crime and the Community" in March; we shall consider carefully the public response to the paper. We shall also want to consider the implications for Northern Ireland of the recommendations that are to be made for England and Wales by the Royal Commission on Criminal Justice.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

16. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received from local authorities and depositors in the province who have lost money in BCCI.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: Any such representations would have been passed on to either my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer or my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade, who have responsibility for this matter. No records are kept of correspondence transferred in this way.

Drainage Services

17. Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to bring land and road drainage services under the control of one overall authority.

Mr. Atkins: None.

Homelessness

18. Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were registered as homeless in Northern Ireland for the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. I am advised by its chairman that the Executive does not maintain a register of homeless persons. However, the number of applicants accepted as being either homeless or threatened with homelessness since 1 April 1989 when the homelessness provisions of the Housing (Northern Ireland) Order came into effect is as follows:

| Year | Number of applicants |
|---|---|
| 1989-90 | 5,166 |
| 1990-91 | 6,983 |
| 1991-92 | 7,494 |
| 1992-93 | 7,549 |

Property Damage (Terrorism)

19. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has made of the cost of damage to property by terrorist groups in the most recent year for which figures are available and over the past 10 years, respectively.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Compensation Agency under its chief executive, Mr. J. Robinson. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. Robinson to Sir Teddy Taylor, dated 1 July 1993.

I refer to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning the amount of criminal damage to property caused by terrorist groups. The Secretary of State has asked me to respond.

I regret that the information is not available in the form you requested. However the following are details of the total amount of compensation paid for terrorist related criminal damage claims which were settled in each year since 1982-83:

| Year of settlement | Total amount paid £ million |
|---|---|
| 1982-83 | 25·5 |
| 1983-84 | 22·3 |
| 1984-85 | 22·9 |
| 1985-86 | 16·7 |
| 1986-87 | 18·9 |
| 1987-88 | 10·6 |
| 1988-89 | 16·9 |
| 1989-90 | 18·4 |
| 1990-91 | 18·9 |
| 1991-92 | 19·7 |
| 1992-93 | 40·2 |

These amounts include the costs and expenses incurred by applicants in making out and verifying their claims.

I hope this is helpful.

Constitutional Arrangements

20. Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the latest talks with Ministers from the Government of Ireland on future constitutional arrangements for the Province.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and I met the Taoiseach and Tanaiste in London on 16 June. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and other Ministers of the Irish Government were also present. The two Governments considered the prospects for a resumption of political dialogue in Northern Ireland. They agreed on the need to address adequately all of the key relationships involved and to work towards an outcome which would accommodate the rights and identities of the two major traditions in Ireland. The two Governments confirmed that their aim is to achieve a new beginning for relationships within Northern Ireland, within the island of Ireland and between the peoples of the two islands. The two Governments also called on the political parties in Northern Ireland to help in the search for political progress and agreed that contacts would continue actively with the Northern Ireland parties.

Emergency Services

21. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the performance of the emergency services in dealing with incidents of terrorist violence.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The emergency services continue to provide an outstanding service in responding to incidents involving terrorist violence, as they do to all incidents requiring their expertise. The men and women serving in the fire brigade, ambulance service and police, as well as those in other organisations, including the Housing

Executive, social services and Compensation Agency, who are called upon to react to terrorist incidents, deserve great credit for their work and I have nothing but praise for them.

Cross-border Security

22. Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the cross-border security situation between Northern Ireland and the Irish Republic.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Chingford (Mr. Duncan-Smith).

Unemployment

23. Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to reduce unemployment in west Belfast.

Mr. Atkins: West Belfast benefits from the wide range of economic development programmes aimed at helping to generate economic growth and durable employment throughout Northern Ireland. Within these programmes, disadvantaged areas, including west Belfast, receive special treatment; for example, inward investors can receive more generous assistance if they locate in such areas.

West Belfast is covered by the Making Belfast Work initiative which continues to play an important role in tackling material deprivation. This year a further £24 million has been allocated to the initiative which aims to increase jobs and investment, improve community participation and enhance the skills and improve the quality of life of residents in the area.

There are also five Belfast action teams operating in west Belfast and urban regeneration work such as the planned development of the former Mackies factory site at Springvale will also contribute to the economic prospects of the area.

27. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures he is taking to reduce unemployment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The trend in unemployment in Northern Ireland is now firmly downwards with an average fall of 1,000 per month over the last three months. Further reductions in unemployment in Northern Ireland depend on the achievement of higher levels of economic growth which will lead to an increased number of employment opportunities and on Northern Ireland industry becoming more internationally competitive.

The main features of the Government's strategy to achieve this growth include helping companies to identify and remove obstacles to growth; encouraging inward investment; building up management and workforce skills; developing an enterprise culture; and supporting innovation and research and development. Help is available in each of these areas for activities which will improve business performance.

Security

24. Mr. Molyneaux: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Luff) earlier today.

Security Forces (Manpower)

25. Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on current manpower levels for the security forces in Northern Ireland.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: As at 30 April there were 13,104 police officers and 18,679 members of the armed forces in their support in Northern Ireland. The Government continue to devote all the resources necessary to security. Force levels are kept under constant review.

Criminal Injury Compensation

26. Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what changes he intends to make in the system of compensation for criminal injury and criminal damage.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary proposes to issue a White Paper shortly outlining proposals for a new tariff-based criminal injuries compensation scheme in Great Britain. I will study the White Paper carefully before considering whether there are lessons to be learnt for Northern Ireland.

I have no current plans to reform the criminal damage compensation scheme in Northern Ireland.

National Curriculum

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to review the national curriculum in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The Northern Ireland curriculum has now completed its third year of phased implementation, and programmes of study in all the compulsory subjects are now statutory and working their way through primary and secondary schools. The programmes of study have been well received and teachers have commented on their high quality.

There have been concerns, however, particularly from primary schools teachers, about the volume and level of content in the curriculum. There are particular fears that the depth of volume of what will be required when all the programmes are in place could affect standards in the basic skills of literacy and numeracy.

I take these concerns seriously, and I have therefore written to the Northern Ireland Curriculum Council commissioning a fundamental review of the primary curriculum. I have asked the council to provide advice on the underlying causes of the problems, how these should be addressed, and the nature, shape and content of an appropriately broad and balanced curriculum for the primary sector. I have asked the council to consult widely with teachers and to submit its advice by the end of April 1994.

The council already has plans for a review of the totality of the secondary curriculum, being in 1994, and I see no need to accelerate its timetable.

To allow time for these new developments, I will not be introducing any new programmes of study into the primary sector in September 1993.

Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights

Mr. Molyneaux: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has received the 18th report of the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The report, for the period 1 April 1992 to 31 March 1993, has been published today and copies have been laid before Parliament.

The commission has considered a wide range of matters during the period under review. These include the possibility of incorporating the European convention on human rights into domestic law, and a review of legislative procedures for Northern Ireland. The report also deals with emergency legislation and security policy, criminal justice issues, the RUC charter, race relations, disability, education, abortion law, and family and social matters.

I value the advice that the commission gives me on a wide range of human rights matters and I very much appreciate the commitment that the members have shown in undertaking such an extensive programme of work.

Copies of my response to the commission's 18th report and of the report itself have been placed in the Library.

House Condition Survey

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects the results of the Northern Ireland house condition survey; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I understand from the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive that the results of the 1991 Northern Ireland house condition survey which was conducted by the Executive have been published today. I have made arrangements to place copies in the Library.

The survey shows that further significant progress has been made in improving housing conditions in Northern Ireland. The Executive and Department of the Environment will now be considering the implications of the survey results for housing policies and strategies.

Intimidation Complaints

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many complaints have been received in each of the past three years at the RUC stations in Newtownards, Comber and Dundonald from Roman Catholics alleging intimidation on grounds of religion; and if he will make a statement about alleged forcible removal of Roman Catholics from these three areas.

Sir John Wheeler [holding reply 28 June 1993]: There were four complaints of this nature received at the above-named police stations in each of the years 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Such complaints included reports of criminal conduct, including criminal damage, and allegations of sectarian behaviour such as abusive or threatening telephone calls at home or at place of work. In six of the 12 cases families are known to have moved from their homes. The Government strongly condemn all acts of intimidation and the Royal Ulster Constabulary will continue to take action against those involved in criminal behaviour.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Cyprus regarding the political and social arrangements for the forthcoming Commonwealth conference to take place in Cyprus later this year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: President Clerides called on my right hon. Friend, the Prime Minister in March and reassured him that the arrangements for the forthcoming commonwealth heads of government meeting in Cyprus later this year were progressing well.

Market Testing

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much the market-testing programme has cost his Department since November 1992.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 7 June at column 93.

United Nations Security Council Reform

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 22 June, Official Report, column 87, if he will place in the Library a copy of the United Kingdom submission to the United Nations Secretary General on United Nations Security Council reform.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Yes, I am arranging for our reply to the United Nations Secretary-General's invitation to submit written comments on a possible review of membership of the Security Council to be placed in the Library of the House.

Regional and Minority Languages

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to sign the European charter on regional and minority languages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The implications of the European charter on regional or minority languages are still being considered by Government Departments with an interest in its provisions. The United Kingdom decision on ratification will take into account the situation of each of the indigenous minority languages spoken within the United Kingdom. We have not yet come to a final view on whether to sign the convention which opened for signature in November of last year.

Bosnia

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to which countries the 400 ex-detainees, currently in the Karlovac transit camp, have been allocated; what main criteria are taken into account when country allocation is determined; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are currently 303 ex-detainees in Karlovac awaiting transfer. Twenty-two countries have offered places for ex-detainees under the joint United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees-International Committee of the Red Cross scheme. Except for those with close links—eg family ties—with a particular country, UNHCR allocates places according to availability.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 15 June, Official Report, column 493, how many of the 2,400 detainees in Bosnia have now been visited by the International Committee of the Red Cross; how many, to date, have been released; how many are expected to be re-settled in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) other EC countries and (c) non-EC countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The International Committee of the Red Cross has successfully secured the release of approximately 6,840 detainees in Bosnia-Herzegovina and they are visiting a further 3,550 still held in detention. Of the 4,571 ex-detainees who had left Karlovac transit centre by 16 June, 238 went to the United Kingdom, 2,007 to other EC countries and 2,326 to non-EC countries.

Croatia

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to how many refugees in Croatia are accommodated (a) with families, (b) in hotels and similar accommodation, (c) in transit camps, (d) in temporary settlements consisting of pre-fabricated buildings and (e) in other types of accommodation; how many of this total, to date, have applied for registration as (i) ex-detainees and (ii) dependents of ex-detainees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees—UNHCR—estimates that there are some 270,000 refugees in Croatia but has no detailed breakdown of how they are accommodated.

Apart from 303 ex-detainees accommodated at Karlovac transit centre, UNHCR is investigating the cases of approximately 2,100 other individuals in Croatia claiming to be ex-detainees or their family members.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultation there has been between Her Majesty's Government and EC Governments and UNHCR on the building of settlements in Croatia to accommodate refugees transferred from hotels on the Croatian coast; whether such transfers are made on a voluntary basis; what rights refugees have to refuse such transfers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government of Croatia have informed the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees of their intention to remove some refugees currently in hotels to other state-run accommodation. Overall, UNHCR is funding some 70 shelter projects in Croatia with a planned capacity for approximately 44,000 people. UNHCR plans to monitor any non-voluntary transfers of refugees from their present accommodation.

Slovenia

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to what extent Slovenia's borders are open to refugees; what is the current estimate of refugees in Slovenia; and what representations have been made by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to Her Majesty's Government and EC Governments for additional funds and other assistance to support refugees in Slovenia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees—UNHCR—estimates that there are approximately 60,000 refugees in Slovenia. UNHCR's 1993 appeal includes provision for refugees in Slovenia. The United Kingdom has given £27·8 million in cash and kind to UNHCR since the beginning of 1993. Slovenia is not accepting new arrivals.

Mr. Vuk Draskovic

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will urge the appropriate authorities in Belgrade to allow the British and other EC ambassadors in Belgrade to be granted access to meet Mr. Vuk Draskovic, the Leader of the Serbian Opposition, and his wife; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has urged President Milosevic to release Mr. and Mrs. Draskovic and to ensure meanwhile that they have access to proper medical treatment and visitors. We have supported the efforts of the European Comunity presidency to secure agreement for visits by EC representatives. We and our European partners will continue to press the authorities in Belgrade on this issue.

India

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will call upon the Indian Government to publish information about (a) the names and (b) the number of persons detained in India without trial and details of the capacity of prisons in (a) the Punjab, (b) Kashmir and (c) Assam with details of payments made in each of the last five years to members of the security forces in respect of causing the death of a person deemed a militant and/or a terrorist; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Government of India regularly publish information regarding the number of detentions under the Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act, most recently in response to a parliamentary question in the Indian upper house on 10 March. Names of detainees are not released. Details of prisons are available for each state from the inspector general of prisons for individual states. We are aware that rewards have been paid to members of the public and police, but not the Army, for the capture of named individuals. We are not aware that there is a general system of payments for the capture of alleged militants or terrorists.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the applicability of EC rules to abattoirs in the Falkland Islands and its consequences for the supplying of meat for consumption by British service men.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Falkland Islands are not within the territorial scope of the European Community treaties, and EC hygiene rules do not apply there. It is Ministry of Defence policy to supply service personnel overseas with food of an equivalent standard to that which they could expect in the United Kingdom. Where it is possible to purchase food locally, the Ministry of Defence will do so, provided that this food offers quality, a varied diet and value for money. Where it is not possible to meet these requirements locally, food is supplied from other sources.

Nigeria

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Nigeria following General Babangida's decision to overrule the results of the presidential election on 12 June.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Nigerian High Commissioner was summoned to meet my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development on 24 June. She informed him that we deplored the decision to annul the 12 June presidential election, and had decided to take a number of immediate measures to curtail military co-operation and the issue of visas to the Nigerian armed forces, and to review our aid programme. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary also met the Nigerian Secretary for External Affairs on 30 June. He informed him of the United Kingdom's current policy in respect of Nigeria and restated the great importance we attach to the commitment to return to democratic civilian rule by 27 August.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on United Kingdom policy in respect of Nigeria following the presidential election of 12 June and subsequent developments.

Mr. Hurd: We greatly regret that the outcome of the democratic elections on 12 June has not been respected and that conditions have been imposed which would bar candidates who ran in those elections from participating in a fresh electoral system. We note that President Babangida has promised that the return to democratic civilian rule will take place on 27 August.

The United Kingdom will not lift the measures announced on 24 June until a democratic civilian regime has been installed and is working unhindered. Meanwhile no new aid commitments for Nigeria will be made.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contacts he has had, or proposes to have, with Moshood Abiola following his success in the presidential election in Nigeria on 12 June.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The British high commissioner in Nigeria, and his staff, have been in contact with a wide range of political leaders in Nigeria, including Chief Abiola.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Nigerian military regime about the annulment of the presidential elections; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 28 June 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in the House on 24 June at column 442, and a statement issued by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 24 June, a copy of which has been placed in the Library. The Nigerian high commissioner in London was summoned to meet my right hon. and noble Friend, the Minister for Overseas Development, on 24 June.

Baroness Chalker made it clear that we deplored the suspension of the programme for a transition to civilian rule and that we had, as a consequence, decided to announce a series of measures curtailing our bilateral co-operation, particularly in the defence field.

Video Equipment

Mr Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy that video equipment in the United Kingdom should not be rendered obsolete by any agreement with the United States regarding specifications for such equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

In areas of rapid technological development, such as video products, existing technology is always being superseded by more advanced technology as a matter of course. The Government have no ability to stop technological progress, including video equipment, even if they wanted to.

Although world-wide standardisation of video systems would bring the benefits of a larger, more competitive marketplace, the United Kingdom Government have no plans at present for any bilateral agreement with the United States on specifications for such equipment.

TRANSPORT

Traffic Volume

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the traffic growth forecasts for England used by his Department for the periods 1963 to 1970, 1970 to 1980 and 1980 to 1990; and if he will give the actual traffic growth for those periods.

Mr. Key: Since it started to use national forecasts of road traffic in about 1970 the Department of Transport has used or made six principal forecasts. They are given for selected years in the table in index number form, with a base of 1968 = 100 for the earliest forecast, and with a base of the index of actual traffic compared with 1968 for the subsequent forecasts. The table also includes an index of actual traffic growth since 1968.

The index numbers are of the total of all motor vehicle traffic except two-wheelers, for Great Britain. After 1975 the forecasts were made in a range of low and high growth, and the two figures for each year reflect that range.

| Year | Actual traffic | Forecasts | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | 1968 base | 1971 base | 1975 base | 1978 base | 1982 base | 1988 base |
| 1968 | 100 | 100 | — | — | — | — | — |
| 1970 | 107 | 112 | — | — | — | — | — |
| 1971 | 114 | — | 114 | — | — | — | — |
| 1975 | 124 | 141 | 133 | 124 | — | — | — |
| 1978 | 137 | — | — | — | 137 | — | — |
| 1980 | 144 | 173 | 160 | 145–160 | — | — | — |

Taxis (Smoking)

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to introduce legislation to allow drivers of licensed hackney carriages to ban smoking in their cabs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: As soon as a suitable legislative opportunity presents itself, the Government will bring forward legislation allowing taxi operators to ban smoking in their cabs.

Stationary Traffic (Engines)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make recommendations in the highway code and other publications issued by his Department concerning the environmental, social and financial benefits of switching off engines while in stationary traffic.

Mr. Key: Guidance has already been given in leaflets issued by the Department of Transport on motoring and the environment and by the Department of the Environment on how to help prevent smog. I have placed copies in the Library.

British Rail (Safety Plan)

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has received British Rail's 1993 safety plan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The British Railways Board has now submitted its 1993 safety plan. Copies have been placed in the Library.

I welcome the board's plan, which sets out BR's strategic safety objectives for 1993, reviews safety performance in 1992, and describes the board's safety policy and organisation. The plan demonstrates the wide range of initiatives underway, and the considerable resources BR is devoting to maintaining and improving its good safety record.

The plan should both reassure rail users and give BR staff confidence that safety remains a high priority. The board has the full support of the Government in keeping up the momentum on safety as our privatisation proposals are implemented.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

No. 1 Parliament Street

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what is the present programme of preventative maintenance that is now being followed at No. 1 Parliament street; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ray Powell: In common with other buildings on the parliamentary estate the No. 1 Parliament street building is covered by service contracts for the care and planned maintenance of its mechanical and electrical plant. Building and engineering inspections of the building are carried out on a regular basis by staff of the parliamentary works directorate.

Mr. Cox: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission (1) what was the total cost of the refurbishment of No. 1 Parliament street;

(2) if he will give a breakdown of the amounts of money which were paid to the main contractors or sub-contractors who were involved in the refurbishment and modernisation work at No. 1 Parliament street.

Mr. Beith: The total cost of the new parliamentary building phase I was some £45 million. This includes not only No. 1 Parliament street but also Nos. 2 and 3 Parliament street, No. 1 Derby gate and No. 2 Canon row.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee, pursuant to his answer of 23 June, Official Report, column 186, what obligations Fairclough still has for the work undertaken as one of the principal contractors involved in the refurbishment work at No. 1, Parliament street; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ray Powell: None, apart from the work on the circle lock doors and the cooling system mentioned in my answer on 23 June at column 186; and any residual liability for latent defects in the building.

Craftspeople

Mr. Cox: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission if he will list the building craftsmen and craftswomen who are permanently employed within the House of Commons.

Mr. Beith: The following building craftsmen are permanently employed: three carpenters, three plumbers, two painters, a locksmith and a glazier.

In addition, the number of contractors' employees fluctuates according to the workload.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is the proportion of questions tabled for written reply that Ministers of Her Majesty's Government have declined to answer substantively over the past year on the grounds that to do so would incur a disproportionate cost.

Mr. Newton: The table shows the number of entries in the POLIS database for answers in the current session—up to and including 7 May 1993—for each Department, with the number of entries in each case including the word "disporportionate". References are also given to recent answers to questions from the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) relating to the number of questions which were not given substantive answers on the ground of disproportionate cost. The figures, if any, given in those answers may not have been compiled on the same principles as the POLIS database.

PRIME MINISTER

Commonwealth Conference

Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he has had with the Government of Cyprus regarding the political and social arrangements for the forthcoming commonwealth conference to take place in Cyprus later this year; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I discussed arrangements for the forthcoming Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting with President Clerides, when he called on me in March. I understand that the planning for these arrangements is progressing well.

Parliamentary Private Secretaries

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 24 November, Official Report, column 577-8, if he will publish the current list of parliamentary private secretaries and the Ministers to whom each is attached.

The Prime Minister: The current list of parliamentary private secretaries and the Ministers to whom each is attached is as follows:

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 1 July.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 1 July.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Iraq and Somalia

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has had from UNICEF on the effects on children and infants of United Nations high-tech military action in Iraq and Somalia.

The Prime Minister: UNICEF has not made such representations to me. We remain in close touch with United Nations agencies providing humanitarian relief to Iraq and Somalia.

Legislative Drafting

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what percentage of Government legislative drafting is carried out by lawyers not permanently employed as parliamentary counsel; and what plans there are for change.

The Prime Minister: In terms of primary legislation, all Government Bills, except those relating exclusively to Scotland and the Appropriation and Consolidated Fund Bills, are drafted by members of the parliamentary counsel office. From time to time some consolidation Bills have been drafted by lawyers who have been members of the parliamentary counsel office but who are no longer employed in the public service. The proportion of work undertaken in this way is not significant and it is not practicable to specify it as a percentage of the total drafting work undertaken by the members of the parliamentary counsel office. There are no plans for change at the moment.

"Questions of Procedure for Ministers"

Mr. Denham: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions in the last 12 months he has been consulted by the Minister of State, Northern Ireland Office, the hon. Member for Hampshire, East (Mr. Mates), under paragraphs 126 and 127 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers"; on what subjects; and on what dates.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 24 June 1993]: Consultations between the Prime Minister and other Ministers are private.

Morgan Rogerson (Car Loan)

Mr. Denham: To ask the Prime Minister on which date he was first aware that the hon. Member for Hampshire, East (Mr. Mates) had received the loan of a car from the Morgan Rogerson company or from individuals associated with that company.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 24 June 1993]: My hon. Friend issued a statement to the press explaining the circumstances in which a temporary loan of a car to his wife had been made. He informed my office at the time he issued the statement.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Environmentally Sustainable Projects

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans) of 21 June, Official Report, columns 24-5, how often the Overseas Development Administration updates its "Manual of Environmental Appraisal"; and if he will place in the Library a copy of the manual.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The manual was first produced in March 1989. A revised version was produced in April 1992 and a copy placed in the Library of the House. The contents of the manual are kept continually under review.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Gross Domestic Product

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total gross domestic product at 1993 prices terms in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Nelson: Figures for gross domestic product are not available at 1993 prices. Figures at constant 1985 prices are available on the Central Statistical Office database which can be accessed by the House Library.

Market Testing

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much the market-testing programme has cost his Department since November 1992.

Mr. Dorrell: Since November 1992, an estimated £100,000 has been spent on market testing. This includes the cost of support for the in-house teams and other consultancy work, but not the costs of the in-house teams themselves. The majority of this expenditure is in respect of the 1992-93 market-testing programme which covers some £4 million of in-house provided services.

Private Medical Insurance (Tax Relief)

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide an estimate of the expected cost to the Exchequer in 1993-94 of providing tax relief on private medical insurance.

Mr. Dorrell: It is estimated that the cost in 1993-94 will be about £70 million.

Inheritance Tax

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide an estimate of the cost to the Exchequer in 1992-93 of granting relief against inheritance tax for chattels declared to be open to inspection by members of the public.

Mr. Dorrell: The estimated cost to the Exchequer of granting conditional exemption from inheritance tax for chattels in 1992-93 is about £40 million. There are sometimes significant fluctuations in the estimated cost from year to year. Most of the chattels are on dislay in historic houses open to the public or on loan to museums or galleries.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide an estimate of the cost to the Exchequer in 1992-93 of granting relief against inheritance tax for (a) business property within section 104 of the Inheritance Tax Act 1984 and (b) agricultural property within section 116 of the same Act.

Mr. Dorrell: The estimated cost of granting relief against inheritance tax for transfers in 1992-93 are (a) for business property within section 104 of the Inheritance Tax Act 1984, £45 million in a full year and (b) for agricultural property within section 116 of the same Act, £65 million in a full year.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will provide an estimate for (a) 1991-92 and (b) 1992-93 of the number of estates on which no inheritance tax was paid in each of the brackets (i) £250,000 to £500,000, (ii) £500,000 to £1 million, (iii) £1 million to £2 million and (iv) over £2 million.

Mr. Dorrell: Estimates of the numbers of estates applying for grants of representation and of estates paying no inheritance tax, where death occurred in the financial years 1988-89 and 1989-90, for the two most recent years available are given in the table.

| Range of Net Estate | 1988-89 Number of estates applying for grants of representation | 1988-89 Number of estates not taxed | 1989-90 Number of estates applying for grants of representation | 1989-90 Number of estates not taxed |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| £250,000 and under £500,000 | 7,051 | 2,795 | 7,992 | 3,100 |
| £500,000 and under £1,000,000 | 1,728 | 501 | 2,322 | 694 |
| £1,000,000 and under £2,000,000 | 420 | 110 | 628 | 182 |
| £2,000,000 and over | 153 | 46 | 231 | 63 |

British Rail (Capital Allowances)

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide an estimate of the value of unused capital allowances held by British Rail and its associated companies as at 31 March or the most recent date for which information is available.

Mr. Dorrell: Providing the figure requested would be a breach of taxpayers' confidentiality.

Share Option Schemes

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide an estimate of the expected cost to the Exchequer in 1993-94 of tax relief on (a) approved discretionary share option schemes and (b) approved all-employee savings-related share option schemes.

Mr. Dorrell: Provisional estimates are as follows:

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| | 1993-94 |
| Approved discretionary share option schemes | 55 |
| Approved savings-related share option schemes | 95 |

Customs and Excise

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to create new executive units in Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

Sir John Cope: I am pleased to announce that the Customs and Excise internal management consultancy service has today become a next steps executive unit with the title "Management and Consultancy Services". Copies of the framework document describing its responsibilities and accountability are being placed in the House of Commons Library.

Income Tax

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update his answer to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms Harman) of 5 March, Official Report, column 336, on the introduction of an upper limit for income tax allowances and reliefs for the years 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 29 June 1993]: Estimates of the direct revenue yield in a full year at 1992-93 and 1993-94 levels of income from imposition of the specified limits for allowances and reliefs within the tax system for these years are given in the table. These are based on information compiled from a number of statistical surveys and are subject to more than the usual margin of uncertainty, and incorporate the conventional assumption of no changes in mortgage interest rates in 1993-94.

| Limit for total allowances and reliefs | 1992-93 Yield £ million | 1993-94 Yield £ million |
|---|---|---|
| £10,000 | 690 | 650 |
| £15,000 | 380 | 380 |
| £20,000 | 270 | 280 |

After restriction of the relevant allowances and reliefs to the basic rate the estimated further yield from imposing the specified limits would be as follows:

| After restriction to the basic rate of | Full year yield at 1992-93 income levels, £ million Limit for total allowances and reliefs £10,000 | £15,000 | £20,000 | Full year yield at 1993-94 income levels, £ million Limit for total allowances and reliefs £10,000 | £15,000 | £20,000 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| (a) all personal allowances except the basic personal allowance | 610 | 360 | 270 | 590 | 360 | 270 |
| (b) relief for personal pension contribution | 560 | 310 | 230 | 530 | 310 | 240 |
| (c) relief for employees' contribution to occupational pension schemes | 630 | 370 | 270 | 610 | 370 | 280 |
| (d) allowances and reliefs in (a) and (b) | 510 | 300 | 220 | 490 | 300 | 230 |
| (e) allowances and reliefs in (a) and (c) | 580 | 350 | 260 | 570 | 360 | 270 |
| (f) reliefs in (b) and (c) | 500 | 300 | 220 | 490 | 300 | 230 |
| (g) allowances and reliefs in (a), (b) and (c) | 480 | 290 | 220 | 470 | 300 | 230 |

The number of people with total allowances and reliefs in excess of these limits is as follows:

| Limit £ | 1992-93 thousands | 1993-94 thousands |
|---|---|---|
| 10,000 | 610 | 420 |
| 15,000 | 85 | 85 |
| 20,000 | 45 | 45 |

The estimates of revenue yield do not take account of any behavioural effects which might result from the introduction of the changes.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

EC Trade Policy

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to establish the right to consumer organisations to be involved in EC trade and anti-dumping policy.

Mr. Needham: European Community trade policy, including policy on anti-dumping questions, is settled by the Council of Ministers, and implemented by the Commission in consultation with the member states. The Government take careful account of the views of consumer organisations in formulating the United Kingdom position on trade policy and anti-dumping questions.

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to ensure detailed reports of discussions and votes concerning trade policy at Council of Ministers meetings are made available to the House.

Mr. Needham: A ministerial statement is made to the House after each Council of Ministers meeting. These reports on the meetings will normally include whether any formal votes were taken, and, if so, voting details will be provided.

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many Commission proposals made under EC trade policy instruments put to the Council of Ministers in the last three years have included an assessment of the impact on consumers and the economy; and what proportion of such Commission proposals this represents.

Mr. Needham: During the period January 1990 to June 1993, the number of Commission proposals made to the Council under the relevant articles of the treaties were as follows:

| Treaty Base | Number of proposals |
|---|---|
| Article 113 | 161 |
| A. 113 (Anti-dumping) | 84 |
| A. 113 (Countervailing) | 1 |
| Article 28 | 47 |
| Article 100a | 12 |
| Other | 25 |
| Total | 330 |

Proposals with a treaty base of 100a have been included where it is judged that the proposal would have had a significant impact on external trade policy. The category "other" includes proposals with an unspecified treaty base, and European Coal and Steel Community proposals. Proposals amending existing proposals have been counted separately.

Where the proposal is for an anti-dumping action, both consumer and economic factors are taken into account by the Commission according to the circumstances of the case. For the other proposals, an assessment of the impact on consumers and the economy has not been carried out.

Asil Nadir

Mr. Cox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the companies registered in Great Britain of which Mr. Asil Nadir is a director; and which of these companies have offices in northern Cyprus.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: This is a matter for Companies House. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Durham to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 29 June 1993:

As this matter concerns information held at Companies House, I have been asked to reply to you.

According to the records at Companies House, Mr. Nadir does not currently hold any directorships of companies registered in Great Britain.

Consumer Law

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, what representations have been made by his Department to the European Commission concerning the draft directives on consumer law.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government of the United Kingdom play a full part in the deliberations of the Council on all draft directives, including those concerning consumer law.

Small Firms

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many small firms have started business in the last year and over the past decade.

Mr. McLoughlin: Estimates of numbers of small business start-ups in Great Britain are produced by Barclays Bank. Estimates for the past five years are given in the table. Figures for earlier years are not available.

Estimates of business start-ups produced by Barclays Bank plc:

| Year | Starts |
|---|---|
| 1988 | 452,000 |
| 1989 | 464,000 |
| 1990 | 459,000 |
| 1991 | 484,000 |
| 1992 | 456,000 |

Konver Programme

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Barrow in Furness (Mr. Hutton) of 14 June, Official Report, columns 409-10, if he will list those interested bodies on the EC Konver programme to which he refers; and when he expects to invite applications for Konver projects.

Mr. Sainsbury: The interested bodies which my Department will consult will include representatives of the training and enterprise councils and the local enterprise companies, and the local authority associations.

Information for potential applicants, including a closing date for applications, will be made available by the end of July.

EC Regional Development Fund

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the south west of England's eligibility for assistance from the European regional development fund.

Mr. Sainsbury: Eligibility will depend on the revision of the regulations, currently under negotiation in the Council of Ministers.

Internationally Mobile Investment

Mr. Evennett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's performance in attracting internationally mobile investment projects in 1992-93.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department's Invest in Britain Bureau—IBB—announced in its annual report published today that 1992-93 was another successful year for inward investment—and jobs—coming to the United Kingdom.

Between 1 April 1992 and 31 March 1993, the IBB recorded 303 direct investment projects by foreign owned companies in the United Kingdom. Based on information supplied by the companies at the time of their announcements it is estimated that these projects will in due course create 16,718 jobs; in addition, a significant number of jobs were safeguarded.

These results demonstrate how attractive this country continues to be to overseas investors. It is very pleasing that the United Kingdom remains the preferred location in the European Community for inward investors.

The results also provide evidence of the successful partnership the Invest in Britain Bureau has with many public and private sector organisations involved in the promotion of inward investment both at home and abroad.

I am arranging for a copy of the report to be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Export Finance

Mr. John Townend: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the remuneration paid to banks under the Export Credits Guarantee Department's fixed rate export finance scheme.

Mr. Needham: The British Bankers Association, representing the banking community, and the Government have reached agreement on revised arrangements for remunerating banks providing fixed rate export finance under guarantees given by the Export Credits Guarantee Department. The new agreement, which will last for five years, will come into effect on 5 July. The agreement will provide significant savings for the Government, but the greater part of these will not represent an increased burden on the banks since they will be achieved by mutually advantageous changes in the settlement mechanism which will in particular match the timing of interest payments with the funding arrangements of the banks. This measure has been welcomed by the banks, many of whom were concerned that the previous global arrangements exposed them to mis-matches between remuneration and funding costs at a time of highly volatile commercial interest rates. The Government and the BBA are confident that the new arrangements, which are the result of several months of constructive discussions, will enable banks to continue to provide the financial support our exporters need and they are an excellent example of the way in which banks and the Government can work together in support of the Government's export strategy. The changes will apply also to the Home Shipbuilding credit guarantee scheme.

Matrix Churchill

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will refer to the Scott inquiry the matter of compensation for those employees of Matrix Churchill who have lost their jobs.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 30 June 1993]: The hon. Member has written to me about this; I shall be replying to him shortly.

EC Procurement Directive

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the adequacy of guidance on the European procurement directive which is available to British industry and commerce.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 30 June 1993]: The Government have kept both the United States and individual trade associations informed about the European Community public purchasing directives; and my own Department's guidance booklet on the subject has been distributed to more than 135,000 companies and individuals. While there have been surveys of the general effectiveness of my Department's single market publicity, there has been no formal assessment specific to the public purchasing directives. The recent appointment to my Department of an export promoter responsible for helping companies win public sector contracts throughout the EC and EFTA should help identify any gaps in the present guidance. The Treasury, which led the United Kingdom negotiation of the directives, is also considering whether there is a need to provide additional general guidance.

Cable Television

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current number of cable television franchises; how many cable television companies have commenced operations; how many have failed to meet the commencement dates required by their licences; and what action he has taken in cases of failure.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 30 June 1993]: (a) There are currently 127 broad band cable television franchises; (b) 58 broad band cable franchises have commenced operations; (c) There is no requirement within a licence granted under the Telecommunications Act 1984 for a licensee to adhere to a commencement date. However, licences do contain build obligations by which licensees should build past specified numbers of homes within set periods, and operators' compliance with these obligations is the responsibility of the Director General of Telecommunications; (d) In the first instance, any action taken against operators for failure to comply with their build obligations is a matter for the Director General of Telecommunications.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for each standard occupational and industrial classification (a) the numbers employed, (b) the numbers of unemployed and (c) long-term unemployed under the International Labour Organisation definition, where previous occupation or employment fell within each classification for (1) Great Britain and (2) the west midlands region, broken down by gender, at the latest available date.

Miss Widdecombe: The available information from the winter 1992-93 labour force survey is given in the tables:

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the current level of unemployment in the north-west region.

Miss Widdecombe: On the seasonally adjusted basis, the number of unemployed claimants in the north-west region in May was 324,300. This is 10,000 lower than in January this year and the fourth consecutive month that unemployment has fallen.

Wood-based Products

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are employed in merchanting, manufacturing and retailing of wood-based products.

Miss Widdecombe: The available information for manufacturing is for the manufacture of timber and wooden furniture. In April 1993, the number of employees in employment in this industry in Great Britain stood at 179,000. Merchanting and retailing of wood based products are included within wholesale and retail distribution and cannot be separately identified.

Work Injuries

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to introduce legislation to ensure that employers make adequate payments to those who are injured at work.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Employers' Liability (Compulsory Insurance) Act 1969 already requires employers to take out insurance to cover claims for compensation from employees who are injured as a result of their employer's negligence. We have no plans to extend this legislation.

SCOTLAND

Industrial Water Disconnections

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, by year for the past five years, and by each water authority, the number of industrial water disconnections made.

Sir Hector Monro: This information is not held centrally.

Community Forests

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration is being given to the future of community forests in the work of the interdepartmental review group on the Forestry Commission.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 24 June 1993]: One of the tasks of the forestry review group, announced by my right hon. Friend on 30 March 1993, is to make proposals for changes which would improve the effectiveness of the delivery of the Government's forestry policy objectives, including community forests.

Drug Addicts

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of drug addicts notified in each year since 1980.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 24 June 1993]: Information on the number of drug addicts notified to the Home Office from Scotland since 1982 is published in "Statistics of drug addicts notified to the Home Office, United Kingdom, 1992—Area tables", a copy of which is in the Library. Details for 1980 and 1981 are contained in the corresponding publications for 1990 and 1991.

Pine Beauty Caterpillars

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the names and areas of the forests which have been sprayed against infestation with pine beauty moth caterpillars in each of the last 10 years; which areas have had to be sprayed more than once; and what areas of forest have been destroyed by this insect.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 30 June 1993]: The forests that have been treated against pine beauty moth in the past 10 years are listed in the table; full information for 1993 is not yet available. Lodgepole pine was the only species of tree infested, and there have been no instances of the pine being attacked by the moth where it has been planted in mixture with other species.

Parts of North Dalchork, South Dalchork, Inveroykel, Truderscaig and Rimsdale have been sprayed more than once, as shown in the table.

About 750 hectares of woodland have been killed by the pest over the period, of which about 600 hectares were on the isle of Lewis.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what chemicals have been used to spray forestry plantations against infestation with pine beauty moth caterpillars; what studies have been made of the effects of these chemicals on birds; and with what results.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 30 June 1993]: Two chemicals have been used: Fenitrothion and Dimilin. A biological control agent, Nuclear Polyhedrosis Virus, which is specific to the pine beauty moth, has also been used.

Fenitrothion is an organophosphate insecticide which affects arthropods. Dimilin prevents arthropods from moulting successfully between different development stages; it has no effect on other organisms, including birds. Both chemicals were comprehensively tested by the manufacturers for their effects on other wildlife, including birds, before they were approved for use by the pesticides safety directorate.

Futher studies on the possible effects of Fenitrothion on birds were carried out by staff of the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds in the late 1970s and early 1980s. These studies concluded that there was no evidence that use of the chemical against pine beauty moth caterpillars had caused any reduction in the numbers of the common breeding birds in pine plantations in Scotland, nor had there been any statistically significant changes in the numbers of birds in the area immediately after spraying.

Common Land

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many acres of common land in England and Wales are owned by the Forest Commission.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 30 June 1993]: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Lodgepole Pine

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what areas have been planted with Lodgepole pine (a) by the Forestry Commission itself in each of the last 10 years and (b) by private owners with grant aid from the Commission over the same period.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 30 June 1993]: The areas planted with Lodgepole pine by the Forestry Commission are given in the table. Lodgepole pine comprises about half the trees on the areas shown as planted in mixture. Details of areas planted with Lodgepole pine by private owners are not available.

Areas planted by the Forestry Commission with Lodgepole Pine

| 1990 | 80 | 1 040 |
| 1991 | 30 | 1 150 |
| 1992 | 30 | 800 |
| 1993 | 30 | 400 |

Forestry Commission

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) who decided what options the Forestry Commission review group is considering; and how it was decided which options (a) should and (b) should not be considered;

(2) if he will list the options currently being considered by the Forestry Commission review group.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 30 June 1993]: The remit of the forestry review group is to review the effectiveness of the current incentives for forestry investment, in accordance with the manifesto commitment, and options for the ownership and management of Forestry Commission woodlands, and to make proposals for changes which would improve the effectiveness of the delivery of the Government's forestry policy objectives, having regard to the Government's other economic and environmental policies.

The range of options examined is for the group to determine, within this remit, and Ministers do not expect to be informed about specific options until the group delivers its final report.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Serious Fraud Office

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on his correspondence with the hon. Member for Hampshire, East (Mr. Mates) relating to the Serious Fraud Office.

The Attorney-General: Further to my statement, these documents are being published today under the Parliamentary Papers Act 1840 pursuant to a motion of the House. They include letters and meeting notes together with material enclosed with those letters or left with me at meetings. One small deletion falling outside the two categories which I explained to the House yesterday would have to be edited has been made to a meeting note. The reason is the need to avoid prejudicing any criminal proceedings flowing from an investigation unrelated to the Polly Peck case. In addition I have omitted transcripts of a hearing at the Central Criminal Court left with me by Mr. Mates.

Whilst the matters covered in those transcripts do not fall within either of the categories referred to by me yesterday, the transcripts relate to proceedings in chambers and thus should not be published without the leave of the judge.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Market Testing

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to market test Government legal services or the office of Parliamentary Counsel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have no plans to market test the office of the parliamentary counsel. My Department is not responsible for other parts of the Government legal service.

HEALTH

Children's Drinks (Sugar)

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she proposes to take over the sale of sugar-rich drinks for babies and toddlers in connection with the threat to the dental health of very young children; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is not the Department's policy to intervene in the sale of such drinks unless a specific false health claim is being made.

Quarry House

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the estimated costs for the relocation expenses of her Department's move to Quarry house.

Mr. Sackville: The estimated costs of relocation expenses for the move to Leeds are £13·3 million.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of people provided with relocation expenses for the move to Quarry house.

Mr. Sackville: A total of 438 people working for the Department have received relocation expenses. A further 75 staff unwilling to relocate, but willing to work in Leeds for periods of up to three years, may claim the reimbursement of reasonable travel and subsistence expenses.

Local Government Finance

Sir Rhodes Boyson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the total amount of expenditure on services within the responsibility of her Department in (a) England, (b) Greater London and (c) the south East, excluding Greater London, for each year from 1982-83 to 1992-93, estimated, distinguishing between current and capital expenditure, though excluding local authority credit approvals/capital allocations.

Mr. Sackville: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Waiting Times

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on the waiting time for those suffering with eye conditions to see a consultant ophthalmologist at the Birmingham Heartlands hospital; and what action she will take to reduce delays in treatment for those with eye conditions.

Dr. Mawhinney: We are committed to driving down all waiting times. Information on waiting times for first out-patient appointments is not available centrally. In 1993-94 regions have set targets, for time to first out-patient appointment, and will reduce waiting times in specialties where they are unacceptably high.

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will make available figures on the number of people waiting for an out-patient appointment in the area served by Doncaster health authority;

(2) what are the target waiting times for each specialty in the Doncaster district health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information on the number of people waiting for out-patient appointments is not available centrally. As purchasers of health care, all district health authorities will shortly be publishing their first annual report on performance achieved by their providers against each of the patients charter standards.

Medicines Committees (Advice)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provisions apply to the licensing authority in respect of the acceptance of the advice of either the Committee on Safety of Medicines or the Medicines Commission where the advice of the two bodies is at variance.

Mr. Sackville: The licensing authority must take into account the reports of the Committee on Safety of Medicines and the Medicines Commission on licensing matters referred to these bodies under the procedures laid down in section 21 and 29 of, and schedule 2 to, the Medicines Act 1968, but is not bound to accept the advice of either body.

Product Licensing

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what circumstances an appeal in respect of a product licensing decision may be held before a panel of persons appointed; and on what grounds a licensing authority may reasonably reject the findings of that panel.

Mr. Sackville: A product licence holder or an applicant for a product licence, may be heard by a person appointed for the purpose if, after consulting the appropriate Medicines Act committee or the Medicines Commission, the licensing authority proposes to give a decision which is at variance with the advice received.

Licence holders and applicants may also be heard by a person appointed where the licensing authority proposes, on grounds not relating to safety, quality or efficacy, to suspend, revoke or vary an existing product licence or refuse to grant a new product licence, or propose to grant a new licence otherwise than in accordance with the application.

The licensing authority takes into account the report of the person appointed but is not bound to accept the report's findings.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give details of the appeal procedures under the Medicines Act 1968 that are available to pharmaceutical companies whose product licences may be suspended or revoked by the United Kingdom Licensing Authority.

Mr. Sackville: The procedures are laid down in schedule 2 to the Medicines Act. In summary, they provide for a product licence holder to be heard by, or make written representations to, the appropriate committee. If the committee's findings and advice are adverse to the licence holder, he may be heard by, or make written representations to the Medicines Commission. There is also provision for the matter to heard by a person appointed for the purpose.

When the licensing authority has reached a decision following these procedures, section 107 of the Medicines Act provides that its validity may not be questioned in any legal proceedings, except that it may be challenged in the High Court on the grounds that the decision is not within the powers of the Act, or that relevant requirements of the Act or regulations made under the Act, have not been complied with.

NHS Job Applicants

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 9 June, Official Report, column 261, if she will issue guidance as to the need for the issue of a job description to job applicants prior to the interviewing and appointment of a person to work in the NHS; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: While it may be helpful in some instances for a national health service employer to provide more detail about a job on request, we see no need to require this in every case.

Consultants

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the mean age of consultants appointed in each year since 1979.

Dr. Mawhinney: The available information is shown in the table.

Mean age of all consultants appointed each year in England

| | Mean age |
|---|---|
| 1987 | 38 |
| 1988 | 38 |
| 1989 | 38 |
| 1990 | 39 |
| 1991 | 39 |

Appointments

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the register of business and political interests of non-executive directors of regional health authorities, district health authorities and trust boards.

Dr. Mawhinney: There is no such register. Members of health authorities and non-executive directors of national health service trusts, are required to declare pecuniary interests that could influence, or be thought to influence, their judgment of any decisions to be taken by the authority or trust of which they are a member.

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give details of individuals appointed to non-executive posts in the Doncaster health authority and on the Trent regional health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: The names of the non-executive members of Trent regional health authority together with the most recent information on their occupations are shown in the table.

The appointment of the non-executive members of the Doncaster health authority is a matter for Trent regional health authority.

Trent regional health authority

| Non-executive members | Occupation |
|---|---|
| Mr. M. Dessau | Retired manufacturer |
| Dr. K. Edwards | University vice-chancellor |
| Mrs. P. Wildgoose | Former teacher |
| Mr. G. Clemons | Chartered accountant |
| Mr. D. Bertram | Quality management director |

Students

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many students have applied on the grounds of low income for automatic entitlement to free prescriptions and dental and optical treatment in each year since 1990; and what was the cost in each year of the administration of these entitlement claims;

(2) what proportion of full-time students in higher education applied for automatic entitlement of free prescriptions, dental and optical treatment in each year since 1990.

Dr. Mawhinney: Not all of the requested information is available. In 1992-93, an estimated 153,000 claims from students under the national health service low income scheme resulted in full charge remission for prescriptions and dental treatment, and full help with optical costs. The cost of handling these claims was about £900,000.

Road Traffic Act 1988

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has made of the cost of administering section 158 of the Road Traffic Act 1988 in relation to the sums received by the NHS under that section.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Mental Illness

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost to the NHS of paying for the provision of acute psychiatric services in the private sector for NHS patients in each of the last five years.

Mr. Bowis: Under the national health service reforms, it is the responsibility of health authorities to purchase appropriate care from cost-effective sources including the private sector. The extent to which health authorities commission care from the private sector is not available centrally.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made to improve significantly the health and social functioning of mentally ill people.

Mr. Bowis: There has been considerable progress over the years. In line with the three strategies set out in "The Health of the Nation" we have taken a number of steps towards improving information and understanding; developing comprehensive local services; and continuing the development of good practice. This includes funding the first national survey of psychiatric illness; issuing the "Mental Illness Key Area Handbook"; and distributing good practice guidance in the "Care Programme Approach"—a copy of which will be placed in the Library —and much more.

Casualty Consultants

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the total number of casualty consultants and casualties in the latest available year; and what is her Department's guidance on the number of casualty consultants needed nationally or per casualty.

Mr. Sackville: The total number of consultants in accident and emergency—A and E—departments in England at 30 September 1991 was 219 (216·4 whole-time equivalents). During the year ended 31 March 1992 there were 10,978,000 new attendances in A and E departments. Not all A and E departments are led by A and E consultants; some are led by consultants in orthopaedics, others by consultants in surgery.

We do not issue guidance on the number of consultants in A and E needed nationally or per casualty. It is a matter for each employing authority to determine the number of consultants needed in its A and E departments in the light of local needs.

Nurses

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many vacancies there were for nurses in areas served by (a) the Trent regional health authority and (b) the Doncaster health authority for the years 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Drugs

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many drugs, normally prescribed and dispensed, cost less than £4·25; and what percentage of the total drugs bill this represents in numbers of drugs and in value.

Dr. Mawhinney: The available information is shown in the table.

Individual preparations and prescribed items dispensed by community pharmacists, appliance contractors, dispensing doctors or personally administered by prescribing doctors in England in 1992

| | All items | Items with a Net Ingredient Cost of less than £4·25 | Percentage with a Net Ingredient Cost of less than £4·25 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Number of individual[1] preparations | 16,678 | 5,595 | 34 |
| Number of prescribed items (million) | 425·1 | 241·7 | 57 |
| Total Net Ingredient Cost (£ million) | 2,858 | 427 | 15 |

[1] The information is provided on the basis of individual preparations and not the drug chemical name.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the total national health service drugs bill for each year since 1982-83, with an estimate for 1993-94.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Cambridge (Mrs. Campbell) on 22 March at column 470, for information from 1982-83 to 1991-92.

The final outturn for 1992-93 is not yet available. The cost of drugs in the hospital and community health services—HCHS—is met from the total HCHS cash limited allocation and a separate estimate for 1993-94 is not available. Main estimate provision of £2,834 million has been made for the family health service drugs bill in the current year.

Health Authority Guidelines

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines there are governing the availability of information on the activities of regional health authorities and district health authorities.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 11 February at column 765.

Heart Disease

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made by (a) Trent regional health authority and (b) Doncaster health authority towards achieving the targets set by "The Health of the Nation" on coronary heart disease.

Mr. Sackville: "The Health of the Nation" is a long term strategy and the national health service management executive is working closely with regional health aurthorities—RHAs—on setting and monitoring robust and achievable "Health of the Nation" targets.

Trent RHA have undertaken a health lifestyles survey which provided baseline data on risk factors in local communities and this will assist in targeting management action. The region has started to address coronary heart disease by issuing guidance identifying the potential for investment in improving health and this will help to target resources.

Health promotion programmes in Doncaster in 1993-94 will concentrate on the risk factors of cigarette smoking, nutrition and physical activity in collaboration with schools, workplaces and the voluntary sector, and with general practitioners. Clinical protocols are being developed for the prevention and management of coronary disease.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are taken to enforce the contractual obligations of the chairs of national health service trusts.

Dr. Mawhinney: Chairmen of national health service trusts are appointed as statutory office holders and are not engaged under contracts of service.

Health Service Commissioners

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to receive the annual report of the Health Service Commissioner for 1992-93.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Health Service Commissioner has made his annual report on the performance of his functions in England, Scotland and Wales. My right hon. Friends, the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Secretary of State for Wales and I presented the report to the House on 30 June. It was published today—HC 764—and copies have been placed in the Library. Copies are also available from the Vote Office.

Dementia

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will meet representatives of the Alzheimer's Disease Society to discuss the policy of her Department in relation to people with dementia and their carers; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: I have arranged to meet representatives of the Alzheimer's Disease Society on Tuesday 27 July.

NHS Premises (Tobacco Sales)

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether all sales of tobacco in NHS premises have now ceased.

Mr. Sackville: "The Health of the Nation" White Paper gave a commitment that all sales of tobacco on national health service premises would be stopped, except to long-stay patients who are smokers. This has largely been achieved.

The Department is ensuring that the handful of sites still to meet this commitment do so as soon as possible.

Dentists

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average gross income of dentists in the year 1992-93.

Dr. Mawhinney: The average gross fee earnings of dentists in the dental rates study group (DRSG) population in 1992-93 in Great Britain was £86,020. In addition it is estimated that DRSG principals received on average some £2,000 by way of other "top-sliced" payments.

Traffic Accidents

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the figures for the estimated cost to the NHS of treatment to those injured or killed in road traffic accidents in each year since 1979; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Nurse Regradings

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will detail by region the amount of moneys given over to help complete the regrading process of nurses; and if she will detail the funds separately for each trust hospital.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Nursing and Midwifery Staff

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by clinical grade and specialty for each district health authority and regional health authority the number of nursing and midwifery staff employed as at 1 April.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 11 June 1993]: The information available will be placed in the Library.

Nursing Education

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish details of the numbers of entrants to initial pre-registration nursing education by course of study and by the academic qualifications possessed by entrants in (a) 1989, (b) 1990, (c) 1991 and (d) 1992.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 23 June 1993]: Data are only available for the year ending 31 March 1993 and are shown in the table.

Entrants to initial pre-registration nurse training by course of study and academic qualifications England 1992-93

| Course of study | Number | Academic qualifications of entrants | | | |

Relocation

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of her Department's civil servants have been transferred from London to the NHS executive headquarters at Leeds.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 28 June 1993]: A total of 530 staff have been transferred from London to the National Health Service Management Executive and NHS Estates Agency in Leeds, 75 on a temporary basis.

Water Fluoridation

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what indemnities have been given by Yorkshire regional health authority to Yorkshire Water plc against all claims arising from fluoridation of water supplies; if she will place a copy of the indemnity in the Library; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney [pursuant to his reply, 17 June 1993, c. 697]: I regret that the previous reply was incorrect. On 22 December 1989 my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave Yorkshire Water Services Ltd an indemnity against liabilities arising from the supply of fluoridated water provided by Anglian water authority without adjustment of the fluoride levels. A copy of the indemnity will be deposited in the Library.

WALES

Rural Prosperity Programme

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the schemes currently funded in Wales under the rural prosperity programme indicating (a) the amount allocated to each scheme in total, (b) the amount spent on each scheme to date and (c) the amounts due to be allocated for each scheme for financial years 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Mr. Redwood: The rural prosperity programme is a Welsh development agency initiative. I have arranged for the chief executive of the agency to write to the hon. Gentleman, and for a copy of his response to be placed in the Library of the House.

General Practitioners

Mr. Ieun Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many general practitioner practices comprised (a) five or more partners and (b) two or fewer partners in each district health authority area in Wales in each year since 1980.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information available relates to partnership rather than practice size. Information for partnerships of five or more doctors is available only for 1990 onwards.

Drug Stocks

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance he has issued to hospitals as to the use of drugs after their use-by date.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In 1988 the Department of Health and Welsh Office jointly issued guidelines to health authorities in England and Wales on the safe and secure handling of medicines which contain guidance requiring hospital staff to return all out of date drugs or medicines to the pharmacy for disposal.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what evidence he has of hospitals using drugs which are past their use-by date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I have no such evidence.

Flood Damage

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what financial assistance is available for farmers whose land has been adversely affected by the recent flooding.

Mr. Redwood: My Department is assessing the extent of flood damage to agricultural land. Farmers can, if eligible, receive assistance under existing grant schemes for some of the work that may be necessary following the flooding.

Sports Council for Wales

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library full details of the funds spent by the Sports Council for Wales in the period 1990 to 1992 on drug tests for athletes, disaggregating the amount spent on individual sports and indicating the number of tests which proved positive for banned substances.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I have placed the information requested in the Library of the House.

Mental Handicap

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many mentally handicapped adults are currently living in long-stay hospitals outside the county in which they were residents.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A total of 368.

Integrated Administration and Control Systems

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many fully completed IACS forms have now been received by the Welsh Office; what percentage of Welsh farmers this represents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: We have received 18,537 forms. The proportion of fully completed forms will not be known until detailed checks have been completed.

Ministerial Visit, Tywyn

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to visit the Tywyn area of the constituency of Meirionnydd Nant Conwy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I have no immediate plans to visit the Tywyn area, although I have a very extensive programme of visits to every county in Wales.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by county, hectarage and location, the Forestry Commission land in Wales sold since October 1991 where (a) access agreements have been concluded and (b) access agreements have not been concluded.

Sir Wyn Roberts [holding answer 22 June 1993]: Arrangements aimed at securing continued public access to woodlands sold by the Forestry Commission were introduced in october 1991. Excluding those sales which were too far advanced at that time to be included for consideration under the new arrangements, the commission has sold the following 28 areas of forest land in Wales since then. No access agreements have been concluded in respect of any of these areas.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Benefit

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing income distribution of child benefit recipients broken down into equivalised income bands.

Mr. Burt: The information is in the tables.

Distribution of child benefit recipients by equivalised[1] income bands, 1990-91[2]

Loans and Compensation (Floods)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will use his discretion under the crisis fund to convert all loans made necessary because of the recent flooding disaster into direct grants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Help from the social fund may be available to people affected by the recent flooding principally in the form of discretionary crisis loans. Social fund community care grants are primarily intended to help promote care in the community and are not designed to be used for general disaster relief, although each application is considered on its merits.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to secure that invalidity benefit recipients affected by the recent flooding will be eligible for social fund loans.

Mr. Scott: Discretionary crisis loans are already available to invalidity benefit recipients where there is a serious risk to the health and safety of the applicant or their family and where such a loan is the only means of dealing with the crisis.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will bring forward proposals to pay compensation for damage in the flooding incident at Aberconwy and Meirionnydd to individuals who do not qualify for benefits or social funding.

Mr. Scott: No. Local authorities have primary responsibility for disaster relief.

Invalidity Benefit

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each month since January 1990 the number of people in receipt of invalidity and sickness benefit (a) in England and (b) in Scotland.

Mr. Scott: The available information is in the table.

| | Sickness benefit recipients | | Invalidity benefit recipients | |

| 1992-93 | 135,000 | | 1,490,000 | |

Notes:

1. Figures based on a 1 per cent. sample of claimants are at a point in time, not for the month as a whole, rounded to the nearest thousand.
2. Information in the form requested is not available for later than 30 March 1991. Figures for 1991-92 and 1992-93 come from the Departmental Report 1993.

Income Support

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the annual income support payable to an unemployed person aged 20 years in each year since 1990.

Mr. Burt: The information is in the table. The amount shown assume only income support personal allowance is payable. Any income from another source would also be taken into account.

Income support payable to a single unemployed 20 year old

| Date of benefit uprating | Weekly personal rate (£) | Annual total (£) (Financial year) |
|---|---|---|
| April 1990 | 28·80 | 1,497·60 (1990-91) |
| April 1991 | 31·15 | 1,626·30 (1991-92) |
| October 1991 | 31·40 | |
| April 1992 | 33·60 | 1,747·20 (1992-93) |
| April 1993 | 34·80 | 1,809·60 (1993-94) |

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the levels of income support for each year since 1987.

Mr. Burt: The information is in the Library.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people living within the catchment area of the York Benefits Agency office were in receipt of invalidity benefit on the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Scott: The administration of invalidity benefit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Hugh Bayley, dated 30 June 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many people living within the catchment area of the York Benefits Agency Office were in receipt of Invalidity Benefit on the most recent date for which figures are available.

The information is not available in the format requested. This is because statistics are not maintained by District/ Benefit Offices for recipients of Invalidity Benefit.

However, it is possible to state the number of claimants to Invalidity Benefit at York District Office. These include a small number of people who have claimed but are not receiving Invalidity Benefit, eg. because there is underlying entitlement which has been extinguished by the payment of a higher overlapping benefit or where termination action has not been completed.

There were in fact 5,094 people claiming Invalidity Benefit at York District Office at the last working day of May 1993. These figures were obtained from a 100 per cent. clerical count of cases in the Office.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Council Tax

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what considerations underlie the different treatment of an employer's payment of an employee's council tax liability, paid under a contract of employment, for national insurance contributions and income tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: Generally the position is that such an employee would normally be liable to both national insurance contributions and income tax. However, certain employees who are living in accommodation provided by the employer are not charged income tax on the benefit of that accommodation under the provisions of section 145(4) of the Taxes Act 1988. Broadly, this is where the accommodation is necessary for their job. The payment of the council tax on such accommodation by the employers will not give rise to an income tax charge on these employees.

There are no parallel provisions in social security legislation and consequently national insurance contributions may be due. However, my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State is currently considering whether this difference is suitable for alignment under the current deregulation initiative.

Maternity Payments

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women aged (a) 16 or 17 years, (b) 18 to 24 years and (c) 25 years and over received maternity payment from the social fund in each year from 1988; and how many of the maternity payments were made to single women.

Mr. Scott: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Road Traffic Accidents

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the figures for the estimated cost to the Department of Social Security for those injured in road traffic accidents for each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available.

Flood Victims

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps are being taken to provide an immediate response to applications for help from the social fund by victims of the recent flooding in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Elfyn Llwyd, dated 30 June 1993.

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what steps are being taken to provide an immediate response to applications for help from the Social Fund by victims of the recent flooding in Wales.

I would first of all like to explain that the primary responsibility for disaster relief lies with the Local Authority and I understand that the Government has already made available extra money for the emergency work.

However, help may be available from the Social Fund. In the main, this will be in the form of Crisis Loans (CLs) which are available to anyone who needs financial help to meet expenses in an emergency or a disaster, whether or not they are receiving any benefit. They must however, be facing serious risk or serious damage to their health or safety, and the CL must be the only means of dealing with the crisis.

In order to ensure that applications from flood victims are processed more promptly, the Colwyn Bay office has set up a dedicated section. All applications for assistance are being considered sensitively, in light of the individual circumstances of the applicant.

Expenditure from District Social Fund budgets is monitored closely. Arrangements are in place to record expenditure incurred as a result of flooding or other natural disasters.

If the situation arises, the Department will review the local budgets of Districts which have incurred additional Social Fund expenditure as a result of flooding.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

DEFENCE

Fleet Maintenance and Repair

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what year testing of the Fleet Maintenance and Repair Organisation in Her Majesty's naval base, Portsmouth is likely to start.

Mr. Aitken: Preparatory work has already started.

Low Flying

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the ability of the ALFENS low-flying safety system to prevent crashes and near misses; and if he will speed up the introduction of the system.

Mr. Hanley: The automated low flying enquiry and notification system—ALFENS—will enhance safety by improving the availability and exchange of accurate information to military aircrew at all times. The system will also provide more flexible deconfliction arrangements at night but is not designed to provide deconfliction for daytime flying. ALFENS will be introduced into service as quickly as possible.

HMS Repulse

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Clyde public safety scheme was activated as a consequence of the release of coolant from HMS Repulse on 20 June.

Mr. Hanley: The activation of the alarm was immediately discovered to have been an over-reaction to what was a minor incident that posed no risk to the public. Because of this, the public emergency authorities were not alerted and the public safety scheme was not activated.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the United Kingdom's contribution to the costs of the preparatory commission for the Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons, established under the chemical weapons convention, expressing the figures (a) for each relevant Government financial year and (b) for each financial year of the commission; and from which subheads of which votes of which classes United Kingdom contributions funds are taken.

Mr. Hanley: The United Kingdom made an initial contribution to the 1993 preparatory commission budget of the Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons of £130,000 in the Government's financial year 1992-93; this was paid from class 1 vote 1 subhead J2. A further contribution of £136,667 was made to the 1993 preparatory commission's budget in the Government's financial year 1993-94 from class 1 vote 1 subhead M3. The commission's financial year coincides with the calendar year.

Nuclear Weapons (Transport)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the fire-resistant qualities of the truck cargo heavy duty II vehicles used by his Department for the transportation of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Hanley: I have nothing to add to the answer my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement gave the hon. Member on 9 June, Official Report, column 288.

Aircraft Carriers (Refitting)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money will have to be spent at Rosyth dockyard to enable the refitting of aircraft carriers; and how much would need to be spent at Devonport dockyard to enable it to perform the same operation.

Mr. Aitken: A continuing programme of capital expenditure on various items is envisaged at both Rosyth and Devonport which is not specifically related to refitting aircraft carriers. The existing facilities at Rosyth are suitable for refitting aircraft carriers, as are those at Devonport, without significant additional expenditure, but further discussions about precise requirements will take place with the dockyard operator well in advance of the first refit.

Anti-armour Ammunition

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the programme of research and development into anti-armour ammunition with depleted uranium penetrators.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has undertaken two development programmes for anti-armour tank ammunition with depleted uranium penetrators. The CHARM 1 programme to develop a 120 mm tank round with a depleted uranium penetrator is now almost complete. A programme to develop an enhanced performance 120 mm tank round with a depleted uranium penetrator—CHARM 3—began in 1991.

My Department has also undertaken a research programme to examine the feasibility of developing a 140mm tank round with a depleted uranium penetrator. This programme, too, is now almost complete.

Radiation Monitoring

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 14 June, Official Report, column 474, to the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Ainger), if he will place in the Library copies of reports on radiation monitoring carried out since 1980 by (a) the Atomic Energy Authority at and around the Eskmeals test firing range, (b) BNFL at and around the Kirkcudbright test firing range and (c) Atomic Weapons Establishment at the west Freugh test firing range.

Mr. Aitken: Subject to deletion of some classified details, I will arrange for copies of the reports to be placed in the House of Commons Library in due course.

Depleted Uranium Shells

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what detailed records are kept of the dates and locations of each of the tests involving depleted uranium shells; and to whom this information is made available.

Mr. Aitken: Full records of all DU firings are kept as part of standard trials documentation. These records are available on request to regulatory authorities, such as Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution or Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what future steps he proposes to take to assess and keep under review the possible effects on the local population and environment arising from the testing of depleted uranium shells at (a) Kirkcudbright test firing range, (b) West Freugh test firing range and (c) Eskmeals test firing range; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the appropriate health and safety measures deemed necessary as part of the United Kingdom development firing programme using depleted uranium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The measures currently taken are set out in my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces' reply to the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Ainger) on 14 June, Official Report, columns 473-74. We propose to continue these. In addition, in the spirit of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 we propose to undertake a full environmental impact assessment at Eskmeals and Kirkcudbright.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many periodic inspections have been carried out by (a) the Health and Safety Executive and (b) the Department of the Environment's radiochemical inspectorate in each year since 1980 into the United Kingdom development firing programme using depleted uranium; and if he will provide a breakdown by firing range.

Mr. Aitken: The Health and Safety Executive visited Kirkcudbright in 1986 to inspect the handling and firing of DU rounds. Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate was fully consulted in 1980-81 while preparations for DU firing at Kirkcudbright were being made. It visited the range in April this year at our invitation. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution visited Eskmeals once in 1989 and twice in 1993. A number of visits to Eskmeals took place between 1981 and 1989, but a record of the exact dates is not available.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will establish a public inquiry into depleted uranium testing; what representations he has received calling on him to set up such an inquiry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: I have no plans to establish such an inquiry. I have received no other such representations.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has passed to (a) Dumfries and Galloway regional council, (b) Wigton district council and (c) Stewartry district council on the safety, health and environmental precautions to be taken in order to ensure the protection of the local population from the effects arising from the testing of depleted uranium shells at Kirkcudbright test firing range; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The results of the monitoring summarised by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces in his replies to the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Ainger) on 14 June, Official Report, columns 473-74, demonstrate that there is no risk either to those who work on the range or to those who live near it. There is, therefore, no need for precautions such as the hon. Member describes.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research his Department has carried out or commissioned on the use of tungsten-tipped shells as an alternative to the use of depleted uranium.

Mr. Aitken: My Department is not carrying out any research into the development of a tungsten-tipped tank round for service with the British Army beyond those already in service; nor has it commissioned any.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the dates and locations of each of the tests involving depleted uranium shells at Kircudbright firing range.

Mr. Aitken: The information is not readily available in the form requested by the hon. Member. Since firing started in March 1982, firing has taken placed on 535 days, with annual totals as follows:

| | Days |
|---|---|
| 1982 | 3 |
| 1983 | 20 |
| 1984 | 55 |
| 1985 | 24 |
| 1986 | 26 |
| 1987 | 26 |
| 1988 | 32 |
| 1989 | 59 |
| 1990 | 88 |
| 1991 | 59 |
| 1992 | 87 |
| 1993 | [1]56 |

[1] To date.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many existing or past military or civilian personnel from his Department have contacted his Department regarding possible uranium contamination as a result of being involved in depleted uranium testing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: No military or civilian personnel have contacted my Department regarding possible uranium contamination as a result of being involved in the proof-firing of depleted uranium ammunition in the United Kingdom. Three personnel who expressed concern that they may have inhaled depleted uranium dust during training for Operation Desert Storm in Kuwait were subject to monitoring which showed no detectable depleted uranium contamination.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the current stocks and future arisings of radioactive waste at the west Freugh and Kirkcudbright test firing ranges.

Mr. Aitken: There are no such stocks; nor are any future arisings expected.

Defence Estimates

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to publish the "Statement on the Defence Estimates"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1993" will be published on Monday 5 July.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 2 July 1993

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Mr. Asil Nadir

Mr. Cox: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what discussions he has had with the Government of Cyprus regarding the Asil Nadir case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: None.

Legal Aid

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what action his Department intends to take in the light of the judgment of Lord Justice Neill and Mr. Justice Mantell in relation to legal aid.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The judgment sustained, on all points at issue, the measures taken by the Lord Chancellor earlier this year to restrain the rate of growth in legal aid expenditure. No further action is therefore necessary in respect of the regulations which were the subject of the judgment.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Drugs (Use-by Dates)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what guidance he has issued to hospitals as to the use of drugs after their use-by date.

Mr. Ancram: Extant guidance on the use and control of medicines issued by the Department of Health and Social Services requires hospital staff administering a drug or medicine to check that it is not out of date. Guidance has also been issued by the directors of pharmaceutical services of the health and social services boards requiring hospital pharmacists to operate stock control arrangements which ensure detection and recorded disposal of outdated medicinal products.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what evidence he has of hospitals using drugs which are past their use-by date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: I have no such evidence.

EDUCATION

A-Levels

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proportion of A-level candidates in 1970, 1980, 1990 and in the latest statistics passed in mathematics and physics.

Mr. Robin Squire: In England, the proportion of A-level candidates who achieved a pass in mathematics and physics in 1992 was 16 and 10·4 per cent. respectively. Information on a similar basis for earlier years is not available centrally.

Grant-maintained Status

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many proposals from schools for grant-maintained status were published before 1 January 1993 but remain undetermined; when he expects such proposals to be determined; and if he will make a statement listing the schools concerned and the reasons for the delays.

Mr. Robin Squire: Three proposals for grant-maintained status published before 1 January 1993 remain undetermined. My right hon. Friend will decide each proposal as soon as possible, consistent with a full consideration of the issues involved and of any objections to the proposals. The schools concerned and the reasons the proposals have not yet been determined are given in the table.

| School | Proposals published | Reason not yet determined |
|---|---|---|
| Bilston High School, Wolverhampton | 21 September 1992 | The proposal is being considered alongside a proposal from the LEA to close the school. |
| St. Thomas CE Primary School, Hackney | 11 December 1992 | The proposal is being considered alongside a proposal from the LEA to close the school. |
| The Leventhorpe School, Hertfordshire | 11 December 1992 | Elections have only recently been held to fill vacancies on the proposed initial Governing Body of the school. |

HOME DEPARTMENT

Radio Scanners

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what proposals he intends to bring forward to amend section 5 of the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949 to take account of changes in sale, supply, possession and use of radio scanners;

(2) what proposals he has to amend the Wireless Telegraphy Apparatus (Receivers) (Exemption) Regulations 1989 to regulate radio scanners by licence.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Government are currently reviewing the relevant legislation covering the use of radio equipment which might be used to intercept telecommunications. There are, however, no plans to place further restrictions on the manufacture, sale or ownership of scanning receivers under section 5 of the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949.

Market Testing

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much the market-testing programme has cost his Department since November 1992.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The direct costs of the Home Office market-testing programme, including consultancies, since November 1992 has been £1,361,885.

Channel Islands and Isle of Man

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what contribution was received in the latest available year from the Governments of the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man towards the cost of his Department, and British embassies and consular services.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Channel Islands and the Isle of Man are not part of the United Kingdom but are internally self-governing dependencies of the Crown. The United Kingdom Government are responsible for the islands' defence and their international relations, and the Crown is ultimately responsible for the islands' good government. These responsibilities are constitutional, not a matter of financial contract. None the less, in recognition of the fact that expenditure on defence and international representation is incurred by the United Kingdom, Jersey maintains a local Territorial Army unit, at a cost in 1992 of £1·7 million, and Guernsey makes payments to, or in lieu of, the United Kingdom Exchequer, which in 1992 totalled £541,000. And, as a contribution to defence and other common services, the Isle of Man annually forgoes a proportion of the revenue due to it under Customs and Excise agreement; the value of this contribution to the United Kingdom in 1991-92 was £1·9 million.

Sam Kulasingham and Prem Sivalingham

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to complete the review of the cases of Sam Kulasingham and Prem Sivalingham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The review of these cases is almost complete, and I expect to make a decision very soon.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the West Midlands police as to the cost, including salaries, of the inquiry into the Birmingham pub bombings since March 1990;

(2) if he will call for a report from the West Midlands chief constable as to whether the inquiry into the Birmingham pub bombings is continuing; how many officers are involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: All that I can add to the answer which was given to the hon. Member on 16 January 1992, at columns 634-35, is that an analysis of the cost of the inquiry, which started in April 1991, will be prepared at its conclusion.

Animal Imports

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what has been the average fine per offence for those found guilty of illegal importation of animals into the United Kingdom in each year since 1978;

(2) how many convictions there have been for the illegal importation of animals into the United Kingdom in each year since 1978.

Mr. Soames: I have been asked to reply.

The information readily available for the United Kingdom, excluding Northern Ireland, is given in the table. The figures reflect all prosecutions taken under the Rabies (Importation of Dogs, Cats and Other Mammals) Order 1974, the Importation of Equine Animals Order 1979, and the Importation of Animals Order 1977 which have been notified to this Department.

| Year | Number of prosecutions | Maximum fine (£) |
|---|---|---|
| 1978 | 80 | 1,000 |
| 1979 | 74 | 1,000 |
| 1980 | 63 | 1,000 |
| 1981 | 74 | 700 |
| 1982 | 50 | 1,000 |
| 1983 | 71 | 1,000 |
| 1984 | 27 | 1,000 |
| 1985 | 77 | 1,500 |
| 1986 | 75 | 1,200 |
| 1987 | 43 | 1,000 |
| 1988 | 57 | 1,500 |
| 1989 | 31 | 1,600 |
| 1990 | 45 | 1,000 |
| 1991 | 66 | 2,000 |
| 1992 | 47 | 1,250 |

More detailed information could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

TRANSPORT

BR Privilege Ticket facilities

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people are currently in receipt of British Railways privilege ticket facilities.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Lady to the answer I gave her on 12 March 1993, Official Report, column 769.

BR Staff (Timetables)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the number of British Railways Board and subsidiary personnel currently employed on time-tabling duties and the publication of the Great Britain timetable.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter for the BR board. From next year, responsibility for planning and producing the working timetable for the railway will pass to Railtrack. We expect that the private sector will see opportunities to publish a national passenger timetable commercially, but Railtrack will be placed under an obligation to secure its publication if others do not.

BR Pensioners

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what actuarial basis funds will be allocated to existing British Rail pensioners on the establishment of the proposed joint industry fund.

Mr. Freeman: The allocation of assets will take full account of the future liabilities to pensioners and will be subject to independent actuarial advice in the light of the results of the latest actuarial valuation of the schemes.

West Coast Main Line

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of passenger trains using the core west coast main line are arriving within five minutes of their scheduled times for the latest available period.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail measures the punctuality of InterCity services by the number of trains arriving at their destinations within 10 minutes of the advertised time. On this basis, 88 per cent. of trains on the west coast main line arrived punctually in the four-week period ending 19 June 1993.

Railways Directorate

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many staff are currently employed in the railways directorate (railways 1 and railways 2), and in the offices of the shadow regulator and shadow franchising director including seconded and part-time staff; and how many will be employed in these areas, including the offices of the regulator and the franchising director, in each of the next two years, identifying the number of staff in grades 1 to 7 as well as the total number of staff.

Mr. Freeman: At present there are 124 staff in these areas, including special advisers on regulation and franchising and supporting staff. Of these, 45 staff are in grade 7 or above; five are seconded; and five are part time. Budgets and staff for the next two years have not been decided. Estimates of the running costs and manpower of the franchising director and the regulator, and their staff, were contained in the explanatory and financial memorandum to the Railways Bill.

Southend Transport Ltd.

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the ownership of Southend Transport Ltd.

Mr. Freeman: Approval under the Transport Act 1985 has been given to the sale of Southend Transport Ltd, the bus company owned by Southend-on-Sea borough council. The company has been sold by competitive tender to Branksome 169 Ltd. A company formed by the four main shareholders of British Bus plc.

Change of ownership takes place under the terms of the Transport Act 1985, which allows authorities to sell their public transport companies with the consent of the Secretary of State.

I believe that this sale will help continue the successful and efficient operation of bus services in Southend-on-Sea. I am also pleased that the sale was successfully conducted by competitive tender, thus ensuring a good price for the local taxpayers of Southend-on-Sea. I wish everyone in the company all success in the private sector.

This sale also sets a good example for other local authorities which own their bus companies. Proceeds from sales of bus companies realized before the end of 1993 will all be usable for local capital projects. Thereafter, 50 per cent. will have to be set aside for debt reduction in the traditional way. Although time is now short, I hope that the remaining local authorities in this position will make the most of this opportunity and sell their bus companies.

EMPLOYMENT

Women (Full-time Employment)

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to encourage the participation of women in full-time employment.

Miss Widdecombe: We are determined that women should be allowed every opportunity to participate as fully as possible in the labour market. The number of women working full-time has risen by 9 per cent. since 1983 and women are projected to account for just over 80 per cent. of labour force growth by 2006. The Government welcome this trend and will continue to encourage women to make the most of the opportunities available.

Our "New Horizons for Women" initiative promotes the whole range of opportunities open to women, including those in employment and training. The flexibility built in to many employment service and training and enterprise council programmes are ideally suited to the needs of many women and our out-of-school child care grant will benefit women who wish to return to work after their children start school.

The ministerial sub-committee on women's issues accords a high priority to action throughout government, which will extend choice and opportunity for women in general, including in employment.

DEFENCE

Flight Recorders

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to the fitting of flight recorders to aircraft operated by his Department.

Mr. Aitken: It is my Department's policy that all new aircraft shall be fitted with accident data recorders—ADRs. However, in most circumstances, the technical difficulties and costs involved in retro-fitting ADRs to older aircraft types would not be justified.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information his Department is required to give United States authorities, and on what timescale, to enable the United States to carry out its obligations to inform Russia under the threshold test ban verification protocol provisions for notification of forthcoming nuclear tests.

Mr. Aitken: All our nuclear tests at the Nevada test site are jointly planned with the United States authorities. Section IV of the protocol to the treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the limitation of underground weapon tests specifies the information which the United States must pass to the Russian Government 200 days prior to the planned date of any relevant test.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library copies of data sent in the last 12 months to United States authorities for transmission to Russian authorities under the threshold test ban treaty verification protocol provisions for notification of forthcoming nuclear tests.

Mr. Aitken: For security reasons, this information is confidential to the Governments concerned.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 16 June, Official Report, column 650, when the tests of depleted uranium armour-piercing shells at the White Sands and Aberdeen proving grounds in the United States and La Gramat in France were conducted; and what post test-firing of depleted uranium shells health checks were conducted on (i) local populations and (ii) service men involved in the tests at the West Freugh, Eskmeals and Kirkcudbright ranges.

Mr. Aitken: Some early trials were carried out at White Sands missile range and Aberdeen proving ground in the laste 1970s. More recently trials have taken place at La Gramat in 1990 and at Aberdeen in 1990, 1991 and 1992. The health checks on those involved in the depleted uranium firing trials and the environmental monitoring carried out at or near the three United Kingdom ranges are set out in my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces' replies to the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Ainger) on 14 June, Official Report, columns 473-74. On the basis of these checks, we have concluded that there is no danger to the health of the local population and no requirement to monitor it.

Tactical Air-to-Surface Missile

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the current status of the future theatre nuclear weapon project;

(2) what is his latest estimate of the cost of TASM.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms Walley) on 20 May 1993, Official Report, column 263.

Royal Navy (Nuclear Weapons)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration his Department has given to equipping Royal Navy vessels with a conventional stand-off weapon system.

Mr. Aitken: Many Royal Navy ships are already equipped with anti-ship stand off missiles systems such as Harpoon and Exocet. We are currently studying the United Kingdom requirement for land attack cruise missiles. Studies are at a very early stage and a decision is not expected for some time.

NATO (Peacekeeping)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many allied tactical papers and standard NATO agreements on peacekeeping have been adopted by NATO.

Mr. Hanley: The development of NATO support to United Nations and CSCE peacekeeping has been fully documented in:

NATO Defence Planning Committee and Nuclear Planning Group Final Communiqué (27 May 1992)
Ministerial Meeting of the North Atlantic Council Final Communiqué (4 June 1992)
NATO Nuclear Planning Group Final Communiqué (21 October 1992)
NATO Defence Planning Committee Final Communiqué (11 December 1992)
Ministerial Meeting of the North Atlantic Council Press Communiqué (17 December 1992)
NATO Defence Planning Committee and Nuclear Planning Group Final Communiqué (26 May 1993)
Ministerial Meeting of the North Atlantic Council Final Communiqué (10 June 1993)

In addition, the North Atlantic Co-operation Council adopted a report by its ad hoc group on co-operation in peacekeeping at its meeting in Athens on 11 June. All of these are available in the Library of the House.

Rapid Reaction Corps

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the training in the military requirements of peacekeeping undertaken by the allied Rapid Reaction Corps.

Mr. Hanley: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave the hon. Member on 10 June, Official Report column 369.

Aldermaston

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) of 18 June, Official Report, column 763, what factors led him to believe that the Panorama programme on Aldermaston to which he refers would not be even-handed or objective.

Mr. Aitken: The judgment was largely based on experience of co-operation with Panorama and some other investigative programmes. It was fully justified.

Indonesia

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last visited Indonesia; what matters were discussed and with whom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: My right hon. and learned Friend visited on 18 May 1993. He met the Indonesian Defence Minister and other Ministers and officials. A range of security and defence matters of mutual interest were discussed in what was a short but very valuable visit.

Goose Bay

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-level sorties were flown by each type of aircraft at Canadian forces base Goose Bay (a) in 1992 and (b) up to the latest available date in 1993.

Mr. Hanley: During their period of deployment to Goose Bay in 1992, Royal Air Force Tornado GR1 and F3 aircraft flew 936 and 92 low-level sorties respectively. No sorties have yet been flown this year, although Tornado GR1s are expected to fly approximately 700 sorties at low level during the period of their deployment in 1993.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the accomplished and scheduled Royal Air Force training deployments to Canadian forces base Goose Bay during 1993; and if he will specify the number and type of aircraft involved in each deployment;

(2) if he will list the dates of deployment for each type of aircraft undertaking training at Canadian forces base Goose Bay in (a) 1992 and (b) 1993; and how many aircraft were involved in each such deployment.

Mr. Hanley: Nine Tornado GR1 aircraft were based at Goose Bay between 29 May and 25 September 1992, during which time there were seven deployments of crews to conduct low flying training. The precise dates of each such deployment were:

29 May—12 June
12 June—3 July
3 July—24 July
24 July—7 August
7 August—21 August
21 August—4 September
4 September—25 September

Eight Tornado F3 aircraft were also deployed between 26 May and 1 July 1992, during which time there were three deployments of crews:

26 May—9 June
9 June—23 June
25 June—1 July

For 1993, nine Tornado GR1s will be based at Goose Bay between 1 July and 23 September, during which time there are planned to be five separate crew deployments, each for a period of two to three weeks.

Service Men (Gulf)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British service men serving in the Gulf were (a) hospitalised and (b) received prolonged medical treatment and for what reason in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Depleted Uranium Ammunition

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether depleted uranium ammunition continues to be test fired at Eskmeals and Kirkcudbright ranges.

Mr. Aitken: Yes.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 14 June, Official Report, column 474, for what reason air samples are not taken at Kirkcudbright range to check for depleted uranium radioactivity; if he will consider the taking of such samples; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Air samples are not necessary at Kirkcudbright because the depleted uranium penetrators are not fired against a hard target. There is, therefore, no significant dispersion of radioactive material into the air.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what tests were carried out for radioactivity in areas where depleted uranium shells were used during the Gulf war; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Depleted uranium has a low level of radioactivity; furthermore in the circumstances of the Gulf conflict such tests were not practicable. Those United Kingdom service personnel who assisted with ordnance clearance in Kuwait after the conflict were issued with instructions and personal equipment to minimise any health hazard.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 14 June, Official Report, column 474, what are the highest levels of radioactivity from depleted uranium ammunition detected at Eskmeals and Kirkcudbright ranges; and what is the exact level determined to be a health hazard.

Mr. Aitken: I will write to the hon. Member.

Swan Hunter

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current state of the negotiations between his Department and the receivers of Swan Hunter as to the completion of the three frigates being built at the yard.

Mr. Aitken: I am pleased to announce that we have concluded an agreement with the receiver which, subject to the maintenance of satisfactory levels of productivity, will allow the three type 23 frigates to be completed on Tyneside. This agreement gives the receiver time to continue his efforts to find a buyer for Swan Hunter. I hope that the management and work force at Swan Hunter will deliver the three ships to the Royal Navy within cost and to time and to the standards of quality which we have come to expect from Swan Hunter.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits Caller Office, Darwen

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) when he expects a benefits caller office to be established in Darwen, Lancashire;

(2) what representations he has received about the establishment of a benefits caller office in Darwen, Lancashire.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the benefits system is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Ms Janet Anderson, dated 1 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security, asking when he expects a benefits caller office to be established in Darwen, Lancashire, and what representations he has received on this matter.

In line with the Benefits Agency's core value of customer service great importance is placed on the Agency being accessible to all its customers. The manager of the Agency's Blackburn and Accrington District, which covers the area of Darwen, has decided, following a number of representations from customers and welfare organisations, that a caller office in Darwen would improve the service to his customers.

You will be aware from my earlier correspondence to you about this matter (Official Report, Vol. 214, columns 253-54, dated 18 November 1992) that there was a favourable indication earlier this year that space for a caller outlet could be made available by the Employment Service Agency (ESA) in their premises in Darwen. Unfortunately this provisional offer has been withdrawn because the ESA are considering using the space for their own needs. The District are now experiencing considerable difficulty in identifying other suitable premises in the area.

Although it is far from an ideal solution, the District Manager has put in place three benefit advice surgeries in the Darwen area, to ensure benefits information is available in the area while the search for suitable accommodation continues.

I hope you find this answer helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Child Support Agency, Bradford

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what basis the acting area manager of the Child Support Agency in Bradford warned Bradford resource centre that the use of the name Child Support Agency in training programme information material could constitute a breach of the copyright laws; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Mrs. Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mrs. Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Max Madden, dated 30 June 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Child Support Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking on what basis the acting area manager of the Child Support Agency in Bradford warned Bradford Resource Centre that the use of the name Child Support Agency in training programme information material could constitute a breach of the copyright laws.

I have now investigated the circumstances surrounding the exchange of correspondence between the Agency's acting Area Manager in Bradford and the Bradford Resource Centre and it is clear that the member of staff concerned acted under a misapprehension and in error. The Agency's Divisional Manager responsible for the Yorkshire and Humberside region contacted Bradford Resource Centre on 14 June to apologise for the misunderstanding and I understand that matters have now been resolved to the Resource Centre's satisfaction.

The Agency in fact welcomes the interest of groups such as the Bradford Resource Centre in its work and its policy is to foster close working relationships at all levels. As part of that process Agency staff recently met staff from Bradford Resource Centre and other local groups to discuss the operation of the new child maintenance scheme; and a further meeting with Resource Centre staff is due to take place.

I am grateful for the opportunity to explain the position. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Market Testing

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much the market-testing programme has cost his Department since November 1992.

Mr. Hague: The costs since November 1992 are broadly estimated at £3·2 million.

These costs when set against the Department's programme of market testing £127 million of business this year and the scale of savings which have previously been derived from market testing—some 25 per cent.—do not seem disproportionately high.

Benefits, Ayr

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what was the number of sickness benefit claims at Ayr benefit office for each month from April 1992 to date;

(2) how many claimants there were at the Ayr benefit office for (a) unemployment benefit and (b) sickness benefit on 1 April 1991, 1992 and 1993.

Mr. Burt: The administration of benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. George Foulkes, dated 1 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking about the number of sickness benefit and unemployment benefit claims at the Ayr Benefit Office.

I have provided information which represents the Ayr District Office (DO) as a whole. The District includes branch offices at Ayr, Cumnock, Dumfries and Stranraer but it is not possible to break the figures down into the separate branches within the district.

Table A. shows the monthly live load for sickness benefit for the Ayr District Office as at May 1991, the first date for which figures are available, and the first of each month from April 1992.

I am unable to provide you with figures for unemployment benefit and would refer you to the Secretary of State for Employment whose responsibility these are. I can however, supply you with the number of customers registered as unemployed and claiming income support at the Ayr DO. These figures are collated on a quarterly basis and I have therefore supplied you with figures for the relevant quarters. These are shown at Table B. I would like to explain that the figures quoted for sickness benefit are obtained from a 100 per cent. clerical count in the office. The income support figures are a 100 per cent. count combined from those actioned through the computer system and any remaining clerical casework.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Invalidity Benefit

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidance has been issued during the past three months to general practitioners and benefits offices on the subject of eligibility for and renewal of invalidity benefit.

Mr. Scott: No such guidance has been issued.

Mortgage Interest Payments

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will change the procedures of his Department in respect of mortgage interest payments so that mortgage lenders inform his Department as soon as interest rates have dropped or increased to prevent mortgagors overpaying or falling behind with their payments.

Mr. Burt: The amount allowed in income support for mortgage interest is calculated according to the interest rate being charged to the individual claimants' mortgage account. It is therefore necessary for the appropriate rate to be notified individually. We believe that the person best placed to do this is the claimant, who is responsible for informing the Department of any changes in circumstances that may affect entitlement to benefit.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will change the procedures of his Department in respect of mortgage interest payments so that mortgage lenders receive payments by the due date, instead of one month in arrears, to prevent mortgagors being threatened with repossession.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to her on 17 June 1992 at column 598.

HEALTH

Health Centres

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 12 May, Official Report, column 483, if she will now announce the results of the working group on the financing of health centres, and her proposals based on those results.

Dr. Mawhinney: The working group of National Health Service Management Executive/national health service officials recommended that the main proposals of the Hambros bank review on the financing of accommodation for general practitioners in health centres should be accepted. These proposals were:

(i) The relationship between the GP tenant and the trust/district health authority owner should be put onto a more commercial footing, in which the GP would pay a full commercial rent in return for a formal lease;

(ii) GPs in health centres should be eligible for General Medical Services improvement grants;

(iii) Guidance should be issued on the costs and benefits of various alternative patterns of funding and ownership of GP accommodation;

We have accepted the recommendations of the working group and work will be taken forward with a view to implementing the Hambros bank proposals with effect from 1 April 1994. Representatives of general medical practitioners will be consulted about the implementation.

Pregnancy (Dietary Supplements)

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated cost of making dietary supplements of 4 mg of folic acid per day available free of cost through fertility and ante-natal clinics to women anticipating a pregnancy and during the first 12 weeks of the pregnancy.

Mr. Sackville: A dietary supplement of 4 mg folic acid per day is recommended to prevent recurrence of neural tube defects in the offspring of women or men with spina bifida or with a history of a previous child with neural tube defect. It is not possible to estimate the cost of making these supplements available through clinics to women in this group. However, they are available on prescription, free of charge to exempt groups prior to pregnancy and to all women during pregnancy.

Specialties

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost to date of the specialty reviews.

Dr. Mawhinney: The cost is estimated at £450,000. This includes the staff and related costs incurred by the six independent review groups and the London implementation group as well as the cost of printing the reports.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate she has made of the capital and revenue costs of implementing the specialty reviews;

(2) if she will make a statement of the impact of the specialty reviews at hospitals where a specialty is removed on the remaining services in those hospitals;

(3) what steps she is taking to test purchaser support and the feasibility and affordability of appropriate specialist service configurations resulting from the London specialty reviews.

Dr. Mawhinney: The recommendations of the specialty reviews are independent advice to Ministers and the national health service. They are not policy and no decision to change services will be taken on the basis of their conclusions alone. The London implemenation group, the Thames regional health authorities, purchasers and the hospitals themselves will now make full assessments of the implications of the reviews' recommendations, prior to bringing forward proposals for change in the autumn. The London implementation group will ensure that any proposals to relocate or close a specialist service are informed by, amongst other factors, the views of purchasers, analysis of the cost implications and feasibility in terms of sites. There will, of course, be full public consultation on any major proposals to relocate services or to close sites.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what effect she expects the specialty reviews of the London hospitals to have on the South-East Thames region outside London.

Dr. Mawhinney: The specialty reviews make a number of recommendations about specialist services provided in South East Thames regional health authority that are outside London. These recommendations are independent advice to Ministers and the national health service, not policy, and they alone will not determine the future configuration of services in London or elsewhere. It will be the responsibility of the regional health authority, local purchasers and the hospitals themselves to make a full assessment of the reviews' advice and, if appropriate, to develop proposals for change.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the impact of the review of London specialist services on maintaining morale and retention of the staff needed for teaching if the hospitals provide a smaller range of technical specialities.

Dr. Mawhinney: The independent advice contained within the speciality review reports forms one ingredient in the local process of developing proposals for improving health services in London. As part of this process, the London implementation group is working closely with the University of London and the Higher Education Funding Council for England, to ensure that the implications of the reviews' recommendation for teaching and research are fully assessed.

Drinking Water

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information and advice his Department has received concerning the effect upon human health of low level cryptosporidium oocyst contamination in drinking water; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: I have been asked to reply.

The Department of Health and the Department of the Environment received, in July 1990, the report of the group of experts convened to examine cryptosporidium in water supplies chaired by Sir John Badenoch. Following its recommendations, research is under way which may establish the infective dose of cryptosporidium.

AZT

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the use of AZT with HIV-positive patients of different age groups in the national health service.

Mr. Sackville: Zidovudine—AZT—is currently licensed in the United Kingdom and the European Community for use in the following circumstances:

—asymptomatic disease in adult patients showing signs of immune suppression ie. CD4 count repeatedly below 200 per cubic millimetre (cumm) or between 500 and 200 and falling rapidly;
—early symptomatic HIV disease in adults with CD4 counts below 500 per cubic millimetre:
—advanced disease ie. AIDS and AIDS related complex, in adults and children;
—HIV related symptoms or asymptomatic disease with markers indicating significant HIV-related immune suppression in children over the age of three months.

Prescriptions

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated percentage of prescribed items dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors which cost less than (a) 40p, (b) 60p, (c) 80p and d) £1.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is shown in the table.

Prescribed items with a net ingredient cost of less than (a) 40 pence, (b) 60 pence, (c) 80 pence and (d) £1.00 dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors in England in 1992.

| | | | | Pence |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Net Ingredient Cost less than (pence) | 40 | 60 | 80 | 100 |
| Number of items dispensed | 32,690 | 49,753 | 61,449 | 73,937 |
| Percentage of all prescribed items | 8·5 | 12·9 | 15·9 | 19·1 |

Quarry House

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the insurance value of her Department's art works in Quarry house.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Security gave her on 30 June at column 515.

Children's Health Records

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to ensure that all purchasing authorities contract for parent-held records.

Mr. Bowis: We plan to write to health authorities shortly, commending the use of personal child health records and informing them of the publication of the second edition of a model record produced by a working party led by the British Paediatric Association.

Container Allowance

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what container allowance is paid by the NHS for calendar packs of drugs per container and in total; and how many drugs with two or three formulations or more come in one calendar package;

(2) how much is paid by the NHS as a container allowance for drugs per prescription and in total; what percentage of drugs are not dispensed prepacked; and what percentage of packaged products are repackaged by pharmacists.

Dr. Mawhinney: The container allowance is an average figure calculated on the basis of an annual inquiry. The inquiry takes account of the fact that not every prescription item needs a container. The resulting allowance—currently 6·5p—is then paid out for every prescription item, including where more than one formulation is contained in a calendar pack. The British National Formulary for March 1993 lists 19 calendar packs containing more than one formulation. In 1992-93, the cost of the container allowance in England was £18·8 million. Information about the percentage of drugs not dispensed in pre-packaged form or about packaged products that are then re-packaged by pharmacists is not available.

Market Testing

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much the market-testing programme has cost her Department since November 1992.

Mr. Sackville: The Department's market testing programme cost just over £870,000 up to the end of March 1993, the latest date for which figures are available. This includes consultancy costs, staff costs and associated overheads. Separate costs for the period from November 1992 are not available.

Eye Tests

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the estimated savings made in 1992-93 as a result of the introduction of a charge for sight tests.

Dr. Mawhinney: We estimate that the savings made in 1992-93 as a result of restricting the categories of people eligible for a national health service sight test were £100 million.

Hospital Waiting Times

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for health what guidelines exist for calculating the waiting times for patients who have been given an opportunity to transfer to an other hospital for treatment.

Dr. Mawhinney: Guidance on the calculation of the waiting times is given in "The Data Manual—Module 1 Hospital Services"—a copy of which is available in the Library.

Yorkshire Regional Health Authority

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will set out, in 1992 prices, the total amount spent by the Yorkshire regional health authority on press and public relations in (a) 1989-90, (b) 1990-91, (c) 1991-92 and (d) 1992-93.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 16 June 1993]: The information available for health authorities within the Yorkshire region is shown in the table. The figures for 1991-92 are not fully comparable with those for earlier years. The 1991-92 figure for district health authorities includes substantial publicity expenses on health promotion. Equivalent figures for 1992-93 will be available late this year.

Expenditure on public relations (at 1992-93 prices)

| Year | Yorkshire regional health authority £ | Yorkshire district health authorities £ | Yorkshire region total £ |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1989-90 | 113,907 | 73,794 | 187,701 |
| 1990-91 | 112,147 | 75,692 | 187,839 |
| 1991-92 | 187,985 | 297,808 | 485,793 |

Source: Annual accounts (1989-90/1990-91) and annual financial returns (1991-92) of the Yorkshire Regional Health Authority (RHA) and District Health Authorities (DHAs) comprising the Yorkshire Region.

Notes:

1. The figures represent the pay and other costs of public relations departments and have been expressed at 1992-93 prices by the use of gross domestic product deflators.
2. The increased expenditure by the RHA is in part due to a change in accounting policy. The aggregate expenditure by DHAs excludes costs incurred by first wave NHS trusts from which equivalent information was not collected.

WALES

Sheltered Housing

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many units of sheltered housing have been provided for the elderly in Wales for each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The number of new sheltered dwellings completed in each year for which information is available is given in the table.

Sheltered housing for the elderly

| | Total dwellings completed |
|---|---|
| 1984 | 193 |
| 1985 | 136 |
| 1986 | 417 |
| 1987 | 577 |
| 1988 | 266 |
| 1989 | 226 |
| 1990 | 467 |
| 1991 | 439 |
| 1992 | 260 |

Source: Local authority returns.

In addition, local authority conversions to sheltered dwellings were as follows:

Local authority sheltered housing for the elderly

| | Dwellings resulting from conversion or improvement |
|---|---|
| 1984 | 19 |
| 1985 | 0 |
| 1986 | 23 |
| 1987 | 44 |
| 1988 | 31 |
| 1989 | 16 |
| 1990 | 4 |
| 1991 | 55 |
| 1992 | 37 |

Source: Local authority returns.

Information on conversions for the private sector and for housing associations are not available centrally.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will ensure in considering the application for the setting up of the Derwen NHS trust that there will be a facility for the treatment of the in-patient adolescent mentally ill in a unit other than that occupied by adults.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Patient care services provided by NHS trusts must respond directly to the priorities set by commissioners of health care who remain responsible for identifying local health needs and then arranging for those needs to be met.

The sponsors of the trust application have initiated discussions on how best to deliver in-patient services for the adolescent mentally ill separate from that for adults.

The decision whether to establish the Derwen NHS trust will take account of the representations received during the public consultation period, alongside the individual merits of the application.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the rationale underlying the decisions in respect of whether to guarantee Whitley Council terms and conditions to (a) the Derwen NHS Trust staff or (b) the west Wales ambulance service NHS Trust staff.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The NHS and Community Care Act 1990 provides that staff transferring from health authority to trust employment retain all their contractual and related rights on transfer. Such staff will continue to be subject to nationally negotiated agreements unless they negotiate contracts which exclude them.

Storm Damage

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on the operation of the Bellwin formula in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: None.

Adders

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to warn tourists visiting beaches and sand dunes in West Wales to be aware of the possibility of adders.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None.

Integrated Administration and Control System

Mr. Llywd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he made available the integrated administration control system forms to Welsh farmers.

Mr. Redwood: The forms were issued to all farmers in Wales by first-class post on 2 April 1993

Household Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Clywd, North-West (Mr. Richards), of 15 June, Official Report, column 523, if he wil make it his policy to establish arrangements to allow his Department to gather data on the collection of household waste that is recycled in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Government have been working with the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy to devise arrangements for the collection of recycling data. Local authorities in England and Wales have been asked to provide information about recycling rates as part of the institute's 1991-92 waste collection and disposal surveys. I understand that the results of these surveys will be published shortly.

Local Government Reforms

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he will take against those local authorities in Wales that boycott the local government reforms to take place in 1995; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I regret that some authorities have apparently decided not to participate in discussions about the reorganisation. I hope that they will come to see that the best interests of their staff and the public they serve lie in some co-operation.

Health Screening

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being taken in Wales to encourage men to take advantage of health screening facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Arrangements for health-screening measures for men are incorporated in the GP contract. This provides for both opportunistic and systematic screening with the arrangements focusing particularly on coronary heart disease, stroke, diabetes and asthma.

Each participating general practice is required to submit an annual programme of health promotion activities to its family health services authority. These activities must be designed to meet the individual needs of the practice population. The level of payment for the programmes varies according to the extent of activity provided.

There are separate fixed payments per GP for organising a programme of chronic disease management for diabetes or for asthma.

All patients also have a right to a health check by their GP in circumstances where they have not had a consultation with their doctor within the last three years.

In addition, many employers offer regular health screening through their private occupational health schemes.

SCOTLAND

Ferries

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what amount originally allocated in the 1992-93 expenditure plans for the tariff rebate subsidy for ferries to the Scottish islands was subsequently reallocated to support other public services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 30 June 1993]: Provision was made, through the tariff rebate subsidy scheme, for a total of £7·607 million in 1992-93 to support shipping services to the Scottish islands. The total amount actually paid to meet claims was £6·578 million. The remaining £1·029 million was redistributed to meet other priority needs within Scottish Office programmes. The Scottish Office fulfilled its contractual obligations to meet claims up to the level of each shipping operator's capping level in 1992-93.

Mussels

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the weight in tonnes and the value of mussel landings annually at Scottish ports from 1968; and if he will provide information on the mussel fishing effort by port over the same period.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 1 July 1993]: The weight and value of mussel landings into Scottish ports for the years 1968 to 1992 are set out in the table. Effort data are not available.

Mussels

| Year | Weight | Value £ |
|---|---|---|
| 1968 | 415 | 8,100 |
| 1969 | 292 | 6,400 |
| 1970 | 211 | 3,600 |
| 1971 | 293 | 8,600 |
| 1972 | 515 | 10,800 |
| 1973 | 567 | 13,400 |
| 1974 | 569 | 17,300 |
| 1975 | 704 | 19,800 |
| 1976 | 750 | 23,600 |
| 1977 | 889 | 26,400 |
| 1978 | 922 | 36,200 |
| 1979 | 819 | 33,700 |
| 1980 | 526 | 31,600 |
| 1981 | 146 | 18,000 |
| 1982 | 50 | 7,900 |
| 1983 | 33 | 6,500 |
| 1984 | 23 | 4,700 |
| 1985 | 312 | 25,300 |
| 1986 | 1,333 | 147,500 |
| 1987 | 384 | 54,100 |

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Guildford and Woolwich Bombings

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General what was the cost of the prosecution of the three Surrey police officers recently tried for their role in the Guildford and Woolwich case.

The Attorney-General: The total cost of the prosecution of the three Surrey police officers cannot yet be ascertained. Payments made by the Crown prosecution service so far in relation to this case amount to £263,440·80 including VAT. This covers counsel fees, copying costs and obtaining transcripts. The full cost to the prosecution is still being assessed.

The above figure does not include related costs incurred by other agencies, such as the police and the Lord Chancellor's Department.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Days at Sea

Mr. Harris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many fishing vessels have been given provisional days at sea allocations in (a) England, (b) Cornwall and (c) Devon; and how many owners in each category have lodged claims.

Mr. Jack: Provisional days at sea allocations were issued in respect of 1,582 fishing vessels administered by Fisheries Offices in England. Of these, 305—including 64 Channel Islands vessels—are administered by the South Western fisheries district (Devon, Somerset and Avon), and 224 by the Western fisheries district (Cornwall).

By 25 June 1993, applications for additional days at sea had been received in respect of 1,323 fishing vessels administered in England. Of these 255—including 44 Channel Islands vessels—are administered by the South Western fisheries district and 209 by the Western district.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Yugoslavia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what confirmed information UNMO or AWACS has provided of the origin, route, destinations, manoeuvring, speed or height of three aircraft alleged to have dropped bombs on the village of Gladovici on 13 March; and whether the aircraft were tracked.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 13 March at 1615 hours, GMT United Nations personnel observed one biplane and two monoplanes flying over the two villages of Gladovici and Osatica, 8 km south-east of Srebrenica. The biplanes and one monoplane circled Gladovici, dropped three bombs each, then flew over the Drina river towards Serbia. The other monoplane circled Osatica and dropped three bombs before flying towards Serbia. The aircraft were not tracked by AWACS.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the serial numbers of three aircraft alleged to have bombed Gladovici in Bosnia-Herzegovina on 13 March.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no information on the serial numbers of the aircraft observed bombing Gladovici on 13 March.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether United Kingdom personnel in the village of Gladovici in Bosnia-Herzegovina on 13 March were able to indicate the colours of three propeller-driven aircraft flying overhead at 1615 hours.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There were no United Kingdom personnel in Gladovici on 13 March. United Nations reports give no information on the origins of the aircraft observed bombing Gladovici.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether AWACS aircraft were operational and monitoring the no-fly zone over Bosnia-Herzegovina between 1600 hours and 1630 hours on 13 March.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Yes.

East Timor

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to urge the Indonesian Government to allow international observers access to Xanana Gusmao and all East Timorese political prisoners.

Mr. Goodlad: We take every opportunity, with our Community partners, to urge the Indonesian authorities to allow regular access to Gusmao and other prisoners by representatives of the International Committee of the Red Cross.

El Salvador

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the incident on 20 May involving El Salvadorean police during a demonstration calling for implementation of aspects of the peace accord; and what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We understand that investigations are continuing into the circumstances that led to the tragic death of a demonstrator in San Salvador on 20 May. We and the other EC member states have repeatedly urged the Salvadorean Government to complete implementation of the peace agreements, including the full deployment of the new national civilian police, as soon as possible.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Manufacturing

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish figures showing the level of real value added in manufacturing per person employed, according to annual percentage growth for the periods (a) 1979 to 1983 and (b) 1983 to 1989 for (i) the United Kingdom, (ii) France, (iii) West Germany, (iv) Japan, (v) the United States of America and (vi) the average of all OECD countries.

Mr. Nelson: The information requested for OECD countries is contained in "Industrial Structure Statistics" published by OECD, Paris, copies of which are available from the Library of the House for the period up to 1990. Except for France, the published figures are available at current prices only. For other countries they could be provided at constant prices only at disproportionate cost. The published statistics on value added and employment can be used to produce value added figures per person employed, expressed at current prices only. These are set out in the table.

It has not been possible in the time available to obtain figures for all of the time series back to 1979. The published statistics do not include an average for all OECD countries.

Import Penetration

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 27 May, Official Report, column 663, what information he has as to the level of import penetration for manufacturers in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Germany and (c) France, in (i) 1973, (ii) 1979 and (iii) June 1989.

Mr. Nelson: Figures for United Kingdom manufactured import penetration in 1979 and 1989 have been published in table 15.10 of the "Monthly Digest of Statistics". Figures for 1973 were published in an article in the August 1977 edition of "Economic Trends", which also described the basis of the estimates. Corresponding figures for other countries can be approximated using data published in "OECD Statistics of Foreign Trade" and "OECD National Accounts Volume 2". These publications are all available from the Library of the House.

Mr. Michael Allcock

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when Mr. Allcock, head of Inland Revenue special office 2 was suspended; what were the reasons for this action; when he expects a conclusion to inquiries regarding Mr. Allcock to be reached; and what is the role of Inland Revenue special office 2.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave on these matters to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) on 30 June, at column 505. Mr. Allcock was suspended from duty pending the inquiries being carried out by the Metropolitan police. I am not able to say when a conclusion to these inquiries is expected to be reached.

Public Bodies

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the names, occupations and current employers of those who currently hold positions in each public body to which he makes appointments; if he will make a statement on the considerations taken into account when making such appointments; and if he will list details of the posts and salaries or allowances payable which have changed since the publication of "Public Bodies 1992".

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 25 June 1993]: Candidates for appointments to bodies for which the Chancellor is responsible are nominated from a number of sources including the public appointments unit, professional institutes and other Government Departments. Appointments are made on the basis of relevant experience and qualifications. No details are kept of board members' current occupations and employers.

The posts and salaries/allowances which have changed since the publication of "Public Bodies 1992" are listed in the table. Those marked with an asterisk denote salary/allowance changes only.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Croatia

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place between Her Majesty's Government and EC Governments to increase and guarantee funds from which the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in Croatia pay monthly sums to Croatian families who agree to accommodate refugees and displaced persons; what is the total of such monthly payments; what guarantees have been given to UNHCR about how long such funds will be available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 1 July 1993]: The UNHCR has provided grants to Croatian families who accommodate refugees and displaced people to match those paid by the Croatian Government. The UNHCR has allocated some £18 million for this year of which some £3·3 million has been spent. The continuing needs of this programme, together with other needs in the former Yugoslavia, will be considered in detail at an UNHCR meeting of all donors, including EC Governments, in Geneva on 16 July.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Nuclear Safety

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of the amounts of low and intermediate level nuclear wastes that would be stored in the United Kingdom if the British Nuclear Fuels plc proposal for nuclear waste substitution is accepted.

Mr. Eggar: The amounts of such wastes that would be retained in the United Kingdom depend on the extent to which customers accept any substitution proposals BNFL may be authorised to make.

Internal Market Council

Mr. Milligan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the outcome of the meeting of the Internal Market Council on 14 June in Luxembourg.

Mr. Needham: I attended the final Internal Market Council of the Danish presidency in Luxembourg on 14 June.

I succeeded in securing a five-year derogation from the 74 kW power limit for motor cycles sold within the European Community. The derogation will allow the continued sale and registration in the United Kingdom of machines up to 92 kW until the beginning of the next century. Owners of these motor cycles will be able to ride them beyond the year 2000 for the lifetime of the machines, and will be able to do so when visiting other member states. Separately, three and a half years after the directive's adoption, the Commission will report to the Council on the latest accident data, and, if appropriate, propose amendments to the directive to reflect motor cycle safety records.

The United Kingdom secured its objectives in a common position which was reached on copyright duration. This will remove market distortions arising from disparities between the periods for which copyright and related rights are protected in member states. A common position was also reached on the second amendment to the machinery directive. Construction site hoists will be excluded from its scope, but should be included in proposals for the separate lifts directive.

Measures on setting up future systems for the free movement of medicinal products were finally adopted, subject only to a temporary German scrutiny reserve.

Other measures agreed included adoption of a programme for small and medium sized enterprises; adoption of an amendment to measures covering medical devices and cosmetic products; and a common position on CE marking. Political agreement was obtained on the regulation for Community co-ordination in drawing up business registers for statistical purposes.

The presidency reported progress on a regulation on mutual assistance for customs and agriculture which aims to prevent fraud in the operation of legislation covering these two areas. There was also discussion on a Commission communication on the operation of the internal market; trans-European networks; a proposed pension fund directive; amendments to directive 83/189 on notification on new technical regulations by member states; footwear labelling; dual use goods; and EC accession to the European Pharmacopoeia. The Commission also noted that it intended to produce a proposal on hallmarking in the Community before August.

The next formal meeting of the Internal Market Council is scheduled for Monday 27 September, and will be the first under the Belgian presidency.

United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority

Mr. Milligan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority has produced a second response to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on the service provided by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I have today placed in the Library of the House the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority's —AEA—second response to the report by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission—MMC—which was published in May 1992.

I am pleased that the AEA has now implemented the great majority of the MMC's recommendations. This should lead to sustained improvements in efficiency.

Of the recommendations the MMC made to the Government, recommendation 3—board bonus scheme —was taken into account when the scheme for 1993-94 was drawn up; recommendation 9—return on capital employed—and 33—restructuring—will be taken into account at the appropriate time. I also announced on 1 April, Official Report, column 407, in line with the MMC's recommendation (1) that there should be a further review of strategic options for the AEA, that independent consultants were being appointed to consider the practicality of privatisation and the main options. We will continue to monitor the AEA's progress in implementing the recommendations and I will report further progress to the House in due course.

Market Testing

Ms Mowlam: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much the market-testing programme has cost his Department since November 1992.

Mr. Eggar: Since November 1992, the cost of market testing in my Department is some £1,133,000. This covers direct staff costs and consultants brought in to add private sector skills.

Collieries

Mr. Cummings: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he intends to appoint an independent assessor, who is not employed by British Coal, to license British Coal collieries.

Mr. Eggar: The licensing of collieries is a matter for British Coal.

Pakistan

Mr Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent representations he has received from companies in the textile machinery sector about Export Credits Guarantee Department provisions for trade with Pakistan.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 1 July 1993]: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has received no such representations recently.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement outlining the steps which he is currently taking to assist British companies to win contracts for exports to Pakistan.

Mr. Needham [holding awswer 1 July 1993]: Exporters to Pakistan have access to the full range of Government trade promotion services. My Department, in recognition of the importance of the Pakistan market, has designated it as a particular target for our trade promotion efforts. We are arranging a series of seminars and workshops to advise companies on areas of opportunity, on how to win business and on available sources of finance. Recruitment for three DTI-sponsored missions to Pakistan later this year is currently taking place. Finally, we are aiming to appoint in the near future an export promoter specifically to cover Pakistan.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has any plans to increase the availability of ECGD cover for trade with Pakistan.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 1 July 1993]: A review of ECGD policy towards cover for Pakistan is scheduled for the autumn.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has concerning comparisons between the United Kingdom's provisions of ECGD cover for trade with Pakistan, and the provisions made by other countries within the European Economic Community.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 1 July 1993]: Recent exchanges with European export credit agencies suggest that, in common with ECGD, they generally adopt a relatively cautious attitude to support for medium and long-term business.

RECHAR

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate his Department has made of the effect of the depreciation of sterling against the ecu since September 1992 on the level of sterling receipts for the RECHAR programme in 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 30 June 1993]: RECHAR is part of European regional development fund and European social fund expenditure under the European structural funds. Any estimate of the level of sterling receipts in 1993-94 would be subject to the uncertainties referred to in the replies given by my right hon. Friend the Paymaster General on 16 June, Official Report, column 613 and 21 June, Official Report, column 15.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 16 June, Official Report, columns 605-6, what is the total cost of all the consultancy contracts listed.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 30 June 1993]: The total cost of all consultancy contracts listed is £3,300,635. This figure includes extensions and amendments to the contracts where applicable.

British Nuclear Fuels plc

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total cost of considering, assessing and approving corporate plans put forward by BNFL.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 22 June 1993]: The information is not available in the form requested.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES — VOLUME 227

SESSION 1992–93

21st June, 1993—2nd July, 1993

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
